Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine,"

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:59 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

AMERICA has furnished to the world the character of Washington! And if our American institutions have done nothing else, that alone would have entitled them to the respect of mankind. Washington! "First in war, first in peace," and first in the hearts of his countrymen. Washington is all our own!—Daniel Webster.

Comedy.

They parted, with clasps of hand,
And kisses, and burning tears,
They met in a foreign land,
After some twenty years.

Met as acquaintances meet,
Smiling, tranquil-eyed—
Not even the least little beat
Of the heart, upon either side

They chatted of this and that,
The nothings that make up life;
She in a Gainsborough hat,
And he in a black for his wife.

Ah, what a comedy this!
Neither was hurt, it appears;
Yet once she had leaned to his kiss,
And once he had known her tears!

Miss Minnie Zaiser, the popular music teacher, has organized a class at Fertile. That place is fortunate in thus securing the services of so competent a musician. She makes weekly visits.

Miss Mollie Duffy arrived from Mackinack, Monday morning. Miss Duffy has resumed her position in our school, which has been ably filled by Mrs. John Duffy in the former's absence.

Napolean Marleau's little boys had a narrow escape Thursday. They were sliding down the hill formerly leading to the old bridge and went over the side among the logs and sticks. A few bruises were the only injuries received.

The Russell trial will commence March 9th, at a special term of court. H. Steenerson claims he will defend Russell without assistance. This trial will excite unusual interest throughout the district, a man's life depending on the outcome.

C. W. Mead traded horses in Crookston Monday—Charlie got very good horses—but we would like to know the reason he started at twelve oclock at night and drove home. Chas. horse is one of those rat-tailed-ewe-kneeked-bob-tailed bay, a regular dandy.

Mrs. O Trembly died Monday, aged 80 years. She has long been in failing health and her death is no surprise. She will be mourned by her husband who survived her and many others who have come within the pale of her generous and kindly nature. The funeral occurred yesterday.

J. W. Lowe's famous roadsters made another successful attempt at keeping themselves conspicuously before the public Saturday, starting from the North Side Roller mill and making their objective point the mouth of the river. Here they stopped and the proprietor took possession, no damage having been done.

Those having the matter of raising funds for their church at heart may find the following interesting: A member of a church society bought a cabbage with a nickle. She carried it home and sold half of it to her neighbor for a nickle. She invested that in vinegar, and pickled the remaining half, and sold the pickle for twenty-five cents. She then bought twenty five cts. worth of cloth, and a spool of thread and made it up into three aprons which she sold for twenty five cents each; took the seventy-five cents and bought molasses and gave a candy pulling to the children, and made them pay ten-cents a a plate for the candy. The molasses made twenty-one plates of candy, so she made $2.10 on one nickle in two weeks' time. If a society contains ten ladies and each do as well, the sum raised from 50 cents invested would be quite gratifying.

A metropolitan paper has this to say about the local press: Every year every local paper gives from $1,000 to $5,000 in free lines to the sole benefit of the vicinity in which it is located. The local editor in proportion to his means, man with man, does more for the community at large than any other citizen. He ought to be suported, not because you may happen to like him or admire his writing, but because a local paper is the best investment a community can make. Understand us now, we don't mean morally, but financially, and yet on the moral question you will find the majority of the local papers are on the right side of the question. To-day the editors of local papers do the most work for the lest money of any men on earth. Subscribe for your home paper not as a charity, but as an investment.

Fresh fish at W. A. Schreiter's.

Chas. Langevin returned to-day.

Pure Honey 15cents a pound at Schreiter's.

Peter Morissette has been on the sick list this week.

Ed. Moran, who has been quite ill, is about again.

Mrs. H. B. Kaufer has been confined to bed this week with a severe cold and an attack of erysipelas. She is much improved at the present writing.

The title to the Langevin property (known as Champagne & Dow's addition) may be involved for some time. The dailies report the will of the late Ed. Langevin as being contested, on the ground that at the time the will was executed deceased was not responsible for his acts. It is hoped the case will have a speedy termination.

The meanest man in the county has again been discovered. He requires his wife (who is short of stature and compactly built) to take long steps while walking to prevent wear of shoe leather. He lives in Crookston and the shoe-makers are looking for him with rifles. The same fellow has also evoked the everlasting enmity of the jewelers there by making his unfortunate better half shut one eye while reading, to save wear on her eye glasses. He and the fellow who leads his team to obviate the expense of buying reins are great chums.

Edmund Bray has undergone a painful period since our last issue. Thursday night Dr. Wheeler came over from Grand Forks and found it necessery to perform a surgical operation. A cut five inches long was made on his right side, and over an inch deep. After this was over the patient rested more easily, and though his condition remained precarious for some time, a slight improvement was manifest. The sickness was caused by a strain from over lifting. There is no lack of sympathy for him and his many friends join in the hope for his speedy recovery.

The office of the American Farmer, the valuable journal which is still being offered free to the readers of the NEWS has been removed to Cleveland, O., where in its new field the American Farmer will be better able to meet the requirements of its rapidly increasing National circulation. Many valuable improvements and new features are contemplated by the management of the American Farmer during the coming year, making the paper more valuable to its readers. The regular subscription price of the American Farmer will remain as heretofore $1.00 per year.

Jas. J. Hill, the Great Nothern president with the great head, is bending his energies toward inducing immigration to the Red River Valley. He proposes to raise $5,000 in St. Paul and $5,000 in Minneapolis and the same in the counties and towns on both sides of the Red River Valley, making $15,000, to which amount he will add another $15,000 making a fund of $30,000. One hundred farmers will than be selected and sent East with an abundance of statistics to go directly into their old homes and work for immigration for a month or two. The scheme is a good one if it is properly managed. One hundred of our best farmers as immigration agents could give this country a big boom.

There is no doubt that the band boys believe "practice makes perfect." The council room is the resort for lovers of band music twice each week when the the band discouses music in quality and quantity unparalleled. Joe Bischoff's horn has never quite recovered from the effects of that jollification several months ago, and so its sonorous notes are missed. The snare drum is getting acquainted with a new drummer while the old bass drum, which has already acquaintances by the score, is in the same boat. By next summer the boys will be in good shape for out door serenades. There are still several old members left, and these are becoming used to the beaten paths, long traveled, that is, constantly filling vacancies and instructing the recuits. But for this our band would long ago have succumbed to the inevitable.

L. A. Kaufer returned from St. Paul Tuesday. L. A. reports that while an auditor at the state capitol the question of a new grant for the Duluth & Winnipeg came up. One representative asked "what good will the extension of this road do, anyway?" In answer among other things, Mr. Kellham, Duluth's representative, said "There is Red Lake Falls, a little city in Northern Minnesota, for instance. With proper encouragement she will become a great city. Her natural advantages are unparalleled. She has marvelous water powers, has millions of feet of pine which she can claim and a grand wheat country and is already becoming important from her milling interests already established." This was not all the gentleman said, but such a send off as he gave Red Lake Fall merely from the promptings of conviction, has not been heard in a long time. It is our candid opinion that he has a very level head.

Remarkable Rescue.

Mrs. Michel Curtain, Plainfield, Ill., makes the statement that she caught cold, which settled on her lungs; she was treated for a month by her family physician, but grew worse. He told her she was a hopeless victim of consumption and that no medicine could cure her. Her druggist suggested Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; she bought a bottle and to her delight found herself benefited from first dose. She continued its use and after taking ten bottles, found herself sound and well, now does her own housework and is as well as she ever was.—Free trial bottles of this Great discovery at W. A. Schreiter's drug store.

Happ Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster at Idaville Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feelings arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says; Electric Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength, good appetite and felt just like he had a new lease on life. Only 50 cts. a bottle, at W. A. Schreiter's drug store.

Forunate People.

The LONDON TIMES says—and all lawyers know it to be true—that the more than half a billion dollars of unclaimed fortune in England Ierland Scotland and Wales belong to peopie in America whose forefathers emigrated from the old country. There are also large fortunes of the same class in Germany and other Eurpean countries. We have gained a number of such claims and have several in hand now which we expect to gain. If your ancestore came from across the sea write us all you know about it and inclose 25 cents for a reply We charge nothing for investigating and if you have a good clasm we will attend to it on very reasonable terms.

Imróved Passenger Service.

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C,. St. P.,M. & O.Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St.Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7:45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their time as on other lines, because this is shorter tha any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicago to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

For Map Folder of the line addres T. W. TEESDALE, Gen'l Passenger Agent St. Paul, Minn.

Paper Pulleys.

The principle of the compressed paper car wheels, which are so widely used throughout the world, is applied in France to the manufacture of pulleys for power transmission. The pulleys are said to be very light, cheap and serviceable in every respect.—Philadelphia Record.

MODEL FEEDING RACK.

The feeding rack shown herewith is from Stewart's Shepherd's Manual, a most excellent work on the subject of sheep husbandry. Portable feeding racks, X-shaped, can be cheaply made.

Keep salt in a dry form where they can get at it all the time. Irregular salting is injurious, as ewes will frequently abort their lambs from an overdose of salt.

They should be yarded or guarded at night and examined regularly. No farm animal will consume and turn into use as much "roughage;" but too much improper food is as bad as feeding insufficiently: either method is certain to injure if it does not kill.

A good Scotch Collie dog in caring for sheep or cattle is worth a couple of ordinary hired boys. The Collie is intelligent, kind, faithful, and sagacious. There are two breeds, the rough haired and the smooth. They will not worry nor kill sheep. They are not absolutely necessary but they save a man many steps.

Every farmer should learn something about the properties of different kinds of feed, viz.: what produces flesh, fat, milk, etc. Everyone should take a good agricultural paper; every issue will give information worth a hundred times the cost. Western farm papers are better suited to the West than those printed in the far East. In addition to The Farmer and Breeder, already mentioned, we might name The Northwestern Agriculturist and The Farm, Stock and Home, of Minneapolis, and the Orange Judd Farmer and The Western Rural, of Chicago, Colman's Rural World of St. Louis, The Indiana Farmer of Indianapolis, and The Ohio Farmer of Cleveland. Every local home paper should be taken too.

With these foundation rules observed, notwithstanding that sheep are at the top price, and more likely to decline than advance in value, a fair degree of success may be anticipated, to be followed with years of increasing experience, by a profit of from 15 to 40 per cent. per annum.

Red Lake Falls News.

JAS. MEEHAN JR., Editor & Proprietor.

TERMS, $1.50 A YEAR.

THE days are growing longer, yet the days of Congress are growing shorter.

A YOUNG girl in an Ohio jail escaped by scaling a wall twenty-five feet high. Woman is usually credited with being "at the bottom of everything," but this time the trouble is caused by her getting on top.

THE Paris police are actually contemplating some method of restraining the indecency of ballet performances and plays in that city. Nothing short of a revolution is likely to accomplish that.

A WOMAN arrested in Philadelphia the other day for shop-lifting, had a little 4 year-old daughter with her as an accomplice. What a satire upon motherhood would such a creature be.

THE Chicago World's Fair managers have figured out that the sum of $15,000,000 will be required to run that entertainment successfully. Chicago will have to hustle as less than $10,000,000 have been secured.

THE spirit of Sitting Bull is marching on. His late followers eloquently resent a suggestion of work, but an increase in the quantity and variety of rations will be accepted as an evidence of the great father's peaceful intentions.

EVERY French soldier will receive shortly from the Minister of War a package containing antiseptic cotton, bandages and two safety needles. He will carry the package with him into battle, so that if wounded the materials for dressing his injuries will be at hand for the field surgeon.

AN Indiana woman has just made her fourth application for a pension as the widow of a soldier. She began marrying soldiers shortly after the Mexican war and has kept it up at intervals ever since. Four have died on her hands and she is looking for a fifth.

THE Indian chiefs who are now enjoying the social season in Washington, after the late unpleasantness in the Northwest, find themselves quite the lions of the capital. Realizing to what they owe this universal treat, they will, doubtless, arrange for another uprising at Pine Ridge next summer.

THE pension bill passed by the Senate appropriates $234,975,000. This is not all, as Senator Allison, in charge of the bill, stated that about ten millions in addition to this sum would be spent within the year, that was being provided for. All the other governments in the world put together hardly spent more than half of $145,000,000 for pensions.

MONEY must be plenty somewhere when men can afford to offer $1,000 for a rooster and two hens. At the New York poultry show some of the fancy fowls brought higher prices than would be offered for a very good horse. It is a booming year for bipeds and quadrupeds apparently. Only the other day a seven-thousand dollar dog arrived at New York. At least half a dozen comfortable cottages could be built for that sum.

THE women have invaded the great iron foundries at Pittsburg, Pa., and it is said that five hundred of them are to-day "capping" nails and bolts—that is, putting heads on them. This is severe physical labor, and it takes a strong man to do the work. But the iron works find no difficulty in getting plenty of girls. Already the supply almost doubles the demand. The result is that this work has been reduced from $14 to $16 a week to $4 and $5, and men are now practically shut out from it.

THE statue of Gen. Grant for the city of Galena, the gift of Judge H. H. Kohlsaat of Chicago, now stands complete in the clay model in the studio of Johannes Gelert in the latter city. It represents Grant standing with his right hand just tucked in his trousers pocket, the thumb outside, and his left hand under his vest, while a military frock coat with the plainest of shoulder straps is the indication of his rank. The statue is so simple that it seems heroic in its exaltation of plain American citizenship. There are four tablets of bronze on the pedestal, one bearing the inscription "Grant, our citizen:" another showing the scene at Appomattox, the other two bearing the names of Grant's battles. The statue will be unveiled on Grant's birthday, April 2, and Mrs. Grant will be present.

In St. Louis nine young ladies took the black veil, forever renouncing the world, and fourteen girls took the white veil and pronounced their first vows. They were from various parts of the country.

The time lock on the money vault of the Wisconsin Fire and Marine bank, the largest in Milwaukee, failed to work the other day, and all efforts to opsn it were fruitless. It is supposed a mistake was made in setting the lock, and men were put to work to cut a door through from the interior of the book vault to the money vault, so in case of a similar accident there will hereafter be two means of entrance. The bank secured all the money it needed from outside sources, and there was no interruption to business.

A NATION MOURNS.

Gen. William T. Sherman at Last Defeated by the Grim Warrior, Death.

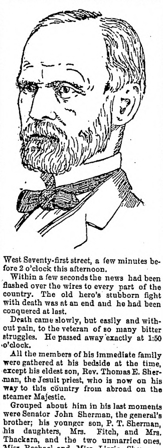
NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—"It is all over." It was Gen. Thomas Ewing who said these words to a group of anxious waiting friends and reporters as he stood bareheaded on the doorstep of Gen. Sherman's residence in West Seventy-first street, a few minutes before 2 o'clock this afternoon.



Within a few seconds the news had been flashed over the wires to every part of the country. The old hero's stubborn fight with death was at an end and he had been conquered at last.

Death came slowly, but easily and without pain, to the veteran of so many bitter struggles. He passed away exactly at 1:50 o'clock.

All the members of his immediate family were gathered at his bedside at the time, except his eldest son, Rev. Thomas E. Sherman, the Jesuit priest, who is now on his way to this country from abroad on the steamer Majestic.

Grouped about him in his last moments were Senator John Sherman, the general's brother; his younger son, P. T. Sherman, his daughters, Mrs. Fitch, and Mrs. Thackara, and the two unmarried ones, Miss Rechael and Miss Lizzie Sherman, who live with him. There were also present his niece, Mrs. Colgate Hoyt, and her son; Lieutenants Fitch and Thackara, the general's sons-in-law; J. M. Barret, his private secretary; Gen. Thomas Ewing, his brother-in-law, and Doctors Alexander and Green, who have attended him constantly

DURING HIS LAST ILLNESS.

They all had been watching by his dying bedside since the early hours of the morning, for when they were first summoned from their beds at 5:30 this morning it was believed that he might die at any moment.

The dying general had been unconcious for several hours, and his fluttering pulse was so feeble that on several occasions it was almost impossible to tell whether he was living or not. His long struggle had completely exhausted him, and it was only his remarkable vitality and will power that enabled him to cling to life so long after all hope had been given up. From time to time during the morning some of the family would leave the room, but only to be summoned back hastily when it was thought that the end was approaching.

At the final moment there was no appreciable change in the appearance of the sufferer. He had been lying as one dead for several hours. Dr. Alexander, who had his hand on the general's breast, for he could not detect the heart beats in his pulse, was watching his face intently. He looked up quickly just ten minutes to 2 and told the grief-stricken family that

THE GENERAL HAD PASSED AWAY.

Gen. Ewing immediately left the room and went down to the door to announce the fact to the representatives of the newspapers, who had been watching the house anxiously for four days. He was visibly affected by his grief at the death of his old friend, and could say no more than to make the announcement that the general had passed away.

HIS LAST ILLNESS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 14.—Dr. C. T. Alexander gave the history of Gen. Sherman's illness this evening. The doctor had been almost incessantly at the general's bedside from the time his illness began, and he had not had more than two hours' sleep any day since Sunday. He said:

> The general, as is known, caught cold Wednesday a week ago. The next day he attended a wedding against the urgent advice of the members of his family. On Friday I was called in and found the general suffering from a cold and a sore throat. On Saturday he felt so much better that he wanted to keep an appointment he had made for that day. On my advice, however, he desisted and spent the day playing cards, I believe, with his family.
> Erysipelas set in on Sunday. He was flighty on that day, and on Monday became delirious. The erysipelas spread over his face, and the sympathetic glands in his neck became swollen. Tuesday he grew worse, and I applied treatment for the erysipelas. Wednesday came, and there was no change for the better, but Gen. Sherman slightly rallied on Thursday morning. His rally was not such to insure even faint hope of the general's recovery, and I so informed Surgeon General Moore at Washington.
>
> Friday was the turning point for the patient. The erysipelas had almost completely disappeared, but the attack had left the general very much weaker. His old complaint, bronchial trouble and asthma, I think, killed Gen. Sherman. In his weakened condition he was unable to throw off the mucus which gathered. The mucus accumulated, and the general was slowly strangled to death. I think he suffered greatly. There was always the quick respiration, the gasp for breath, but he bore everything without a murmur and no one could have been more heroic. Since Tuesday we had practically abandoned all hope of Gen. Sherman's recovery.

HIS LAST RESTING PLACE.

Sherman's Request That His Body Rest Beside His Wife and Soldier Boy.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 14.—In February, 1890, on the occasion of Gen. Sherman's seventieth birthday, the members of Ransom Post, G. A. R., of which Gen. Sherman was the first commander, sent the general many congratulatory letters and telegrams. The old warrior, in replying to these, among other things said:

> I have again and again been urged to allow my name to be transferred to the roster of someone of the many reputable posts of the G. A. R. here, but my invariable answer has been no; that Ransom post has stood by me since its beginning, and I will stand by it to my end, and then that, in its organized capacity, it will deposit my poor body in Calvary cemetery, alongside my faithful wife and idolized "soldier boy." My health continues good, so my comrades of Ransom post must guard theirs that they may be able to fulfil this sacred duty imposed by their first commander.
>
> God bless you all. W. T. SHERMAN.

Calvary cemetery is in this city, and is one of the most beautiful spots in St. Louis. It is expected the general's desire in the matter will be carried out, although, of course, the family's wishes will rule in the case.

CLAIMED BY OHIO.

> As the representative of the people of Ohio, I claim the body of Gen. William T. Sherman for burial on the soil of the state which gave him birth. The people of Ohio will keep his grave green.

At the instance of the governor Adjt.-Gen. Dill has issued a general order announcing the death of Gen. Sherman, and calling upon the National Guard to join with the people of the nation in testifying to the great loss sustained in his death. It is ordered that the colors at the headquarters, the state arsenal and all the armories of the state be placed at half mast until and including the day of the funeral; that the officers of the national guard wear the usual badge of mourning for three months; that on the day of the funeral there be fired by the Eighth battery of artillery at Columbus thirteen guns at dawn of day, and one gun at intervals of thirty minutes during the day, and at the close a national salute of forty-four guns.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Gen. William Tecumseh Sherman was born at Lancaster, Ohio, Feb. 8, 1820. He was a cadet at West Point from 1836 to 1840, when he was graduated and promoted to second lieutenant of the Third artillery. He served in the Florida war until 1842, during which he was promoted to first lieutenant. In 1845 he went to California, and was in the war with Mexico, being breveted captain in 1848 for meritorious conduct. He was acting assistant adjutant general of the deparement of California from 1847 to 1849; aide-de-camp to Gen. P. R. Smith, and acting assistant adjutant general of the Pacific division to 1850; promoted to captain Sept. 22, 1850, and on commissary duty at St. Louis and New Orleans until Sept. 6, 1853, when he resigned and went to San Francisco, where he was in the banking business until 1857. In 1858-9 he was in the practice of the law at Leavenworth, Kan., and during the two years following was president of the Louisiana state seminary and military academy at Alexandria, La. On the breaking out of the civil war he was reappointed to the United States army, May 14, 1861, with the rank of colonel of the Thirteenth infantry, and May 17 was appointed brigadier general of volunteers, and commanded a brigade in the first batle of Bull Run. In October he was placed in the command of the department of the Cumberland, but afterward he took charge of a camp of instruction at St. Louis until February, 1862, when he was placed in command of the district of Paducah, Ky. In the Tennessee and Mississippi campaign he commanded a division; was in the battle of Shiloh, April 6 and 7, in which he was wounded; was in the advance in the siege of Corinth, April 15 to May 30, and was promoted to major general of volunteers May 1. He commanded the hastily organized expedition which attempted to capture Vicksburg, Dec. 27-29. In 1863, in command of the Fifteenth army corps, he led the expedition which carried Arkansas Post by assault Jan. 11, and until July 3 was actively engaged in the siege of Vicksburg. On July 4 he was made brigadier general in the regular army, and during the summer and fall was engaged in various operations in Tennessee and Mississippi. At Chattanooga he commanded the left wing of the army Nov. 23-25, and early in December compelled Gen. Longstreet to raise the siege at Knoxville. In February, 1864, with 20,000 men he marched to Meridian, Miss., and destroyed the railroads centering there. He was in command of the department and Army of the Tennessee until March 12, when he was of the military division of the Mississippi, which was composed of the departments of the Ohio, the Cumberland, the Tennessee and the Arkansas. At Nashville he organized an army of more than 100,000 men, and with them he invaded Georgia, where he met the Confederate forces under Gen. J. E. Johnston, forcing them to evacuate Dalton, Resaca, Cassville and Dallas in rapid succession, between May 12 and 28, and almost daily thereafter engaged the enemy until the occupation of Marietta, July 3. In several subsequent engagements he defeated Gen. Hood before Atlanta, the hardest battle being fought July 22, when the siege of Atlanta began. On Aug. 12 he was made major general in the regular army. Aug. 31 the battle of Jonesboro was fought, and the night of Sept. 1 Gen. Hood evacuated Atlanta and Gen. Sherman took possession and occupied the city until Nov. 16, when he began his memorable "march to the sea." He reached Savannah Dec. 13 and stormed and captured Fort McAllister, and eight days thereafter the city was surrendered to him. Making the Savannah river his base of operations he marched his forces unto the Carolinas, capturing Columbia, S. C., Feb. 17, 1865, Cheraw March 3 and Fayetteville March 12. Four days later he fought the battle of Averysboro and March 19, 20 and 21 fought and gained the battle of Bentonville, and entered Goldsboro March 23. His advance was unchecked, and he reached and occupied Raleigh April 13, while on April 26, at Durham station, N. C., the army of the Confederacy, under Gen. J. E. Johnston, surrendered to him upon terms which were not accepted by the government. Following this surrender, Gen. Sherman, began his advance to Richmond and Washington April 22, and on May 24, 1865, ended his wonderful southern marches of more than 2,600 miles at Washington, his efforts having been crowned with success from the first to the last. On June 27 he was appointed to the command of the military division of the Mississippi, in which were comprised the departments of the Ohio, Missouri and Arkansas, his headquarters being at St. Louis. On July 25, 1866, he succeeded Gen. Grant as lieutenant general, and on Aug. 11 took command of the division of the Missouri. In November and December of that year he was employed on a special mission to Mexico. After the election of Gen. Grant to the presidency and the consequent vacation of the office of general of the armies of the United States by President Grant, Lieut. Gen. Sherman was made general March 4, 1869. In 1871, after nearly thirty years of active service in the army, he obtained leave of absence for a year. He at once went to Europe, extending his travels to the East, being everywhere received with that marked distinction which the people of the old world are ever ready to accord to one who has occupied such prominent positions in military life and who had won such laurels as had Gen. Sherman. On his return from his travels he took up his residence at Washington as commander-in-chief of the army, remaining there until October, 1874, when he removed his residence to St. Louis. On Feb. 8, 1884, Gen. Sherman was placed on the retired list, at his own request. The last few years of his life were passed in New York. In 1875 he published two octavo volumes, entitled "Memoirs of Gen. W. T. Sherman, by Himself," which have been well received and accepted as a most important addition to the history of the United States.

THE GENERAL AT FORT SNELLING.

Soon after his graduation from West Point, Gen. (then second lieutenant) Sherman was ordered to Fort Snelling, and was stationed there for several months, occupying quarters in the old stone barracks along the south side of the old parade ground. His experience at that time was not more eventful than that of several other junior officers by whom an order transferring them to an Eastern was regarded as a special dispensation of Providence, on account of the lonesomeness and remoteness of their station at that time.

The second memorable visit of Gen. Sherman to the Northwest occurred very soon after the close of the war, and partook of the nature of an ovation. Gen. W. S. Hancock, who was then in command of the department of Dakota, with headquarters at St. Paul, entertained him. The trip was undertaken for the purpose of inspecting the forts in the Northwest, and hence was fruitful of military receptions as well as pleasant social reunions. One lieutenant upon the occasion of a formal military reception and inspection during the visit had decked himself in all the panoply of war, but in his desire to make a stunning appearance, had allowed his tailor to adorn the dress coat with more aiguillettes than the regulations called for. Gen. Sherman took in the situation at a glance, and he politely said, "Mr. ——, I should be pleased to see you in your uniform."

Gen. Sherman was present as an invited guest at the celebration in Minneapolis of the bi-centennial anniversary of the discovery of the Falls of St. Anthony, and was one of the speakers on that occasion.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Resume of the Important Measures Consined by Congress the Past Week.

What is Being Done by the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington.

Tuesday. Feb. 10.

SENATE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 10.—The naval appropriation bill was taken up in the senate today, and, after long debate, the following amendments were agreed to;

Appropriating $25,000 for soundings between San Francisco and Honolulu for the purpose of determining the practicability of the laying of a telegraphic cable between those points and $25,000 for equipment and arms for naval militia in various states.

The next amendment was one providing for a dry dock on the Columbia river or on Puget sound. Mr. Allen moved a substitute for it, fixing the site at Port Orchard on Puget sound and made an argument in support of it. No action was reached on the amendment.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The silver question continues to be the chief topic of discussion on the house side of the capitol. In view of the many difficulties in the way the silver men are moving very slowly. Meanwhile the session is drawing towards a close, and rapidly diminishing the time absolutely needed in which to put through any measure, even if a common standing ground could possibly be found. The house coinage committee to-day heard arguments against free coinage by St. Louis merchants, and received a vigorous protest against further silver legislation from the Bankers' Association of Buffalo.

Wednesday, Feb. 11.

SENATE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The consideration of the naval appropriation bill was resumed in the senate to-day, the pending question being on the amendment in reference to the site of a dry dock on the Pacific coast—whether on Puget sound or on the Columbia river.

It directs the secretary of the navy to acquire, at a cost not exceeding $250,000, a tract of 200 acres on Puget sound at Port Orchard, and to cause to be erected a dry dock not less than 600 feet in length and 70 feet in width, capable of admitting vessels drawing thirty feet of water—the cost of the dry dock not to exceed $700,000.

The bill was then passed.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 12.—After routine business the house to-day went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill. In the debate Mr. McAdoo of New Jersey spoke in opposition to the shipping bill, and Mr. Stockdale, of Mississippi referred to violations of the civil service law. No action was taken on the bill and the house adjourned.

Thursday Feb. 5.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—On telegrams from some of his constituents Senator Spooner moved a reconsideration of the bill for a boom at the mouth of the Chippewa river.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 13.—Representative Pickler has introduced a joint resolution of the South Dakota legislature asking for relief for the drouth-stricken people of that state.

A bill was passed by the house to-day extending the time within which the Choctaw Coal and Railroad company shall construct its road through the Indian Territory.

Friday Feb. 13.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The senate to-day resumed consideration of the copyright bill, the pending question being on Mr. Sherman's amendment to strike out the word "prohibited" and to insert the words "subject to the duties provided by law;" so that foreign editions of books and so forth which are copyrighted in the United States may be admitted to this country on payment of the regular tariff duties.

The discussion having closed, the vote was taken on Mr. Sherman's amendment and it was agreed to—25 to 24. All the Northwestern senators, with the exceptio of Pettigrew, voted in the negative.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—The house to-day went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill. An amendment appropriating $36,400 to enable the civil service commissin to execute the provisions of the civil service act was agreed to. The bill was then reported to the house, and the amendment providing for clerks to members not chairmon of committees was defeated—72 to 146. The bill was then passed.

Saturday, Feb. 14.

SENATE.

The message of the president announcing Gen. Sherman's death was received at 3:30 this afternoon. Resolutions of condolence were introduced by Senator Hawley, who warmly eulogized the late general.

After the passage of a number of bills of no general importance a senate bill was passed authorizing the construction of a bridge across the St. Louis river between Minnesota and Wisconsin.

HOUSE.

The committee on military affairs will report appropriate resolutions of respect to the memory of the dead general and recommend that the house take part in the funeral services. Gen. Cutcheon, chairman of the committee on military affairs, referred feelingly to the fact that Gen. Sherman's death removed the last of the three great Union generals.

In the house to-day Representative Dickerson, of Kentucky, introduced for reference a bill to repeal the McKinley tariff act, and to re-enact all laws repealed by that act.

Monday, Feb. 16.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 17.—Senator Davis presented the resolution of the board of trade of Minneapolis remonstrating against the passage of the free coinage bill; also from citizens of Minnesota in favor of a law giving to the several states authority to control the manufacture and ale of oleomargarine, etc.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 17.—Senator Casey to-day called up and had passed his bill allowing Rock island, in the Fort Totten reservation, to be set apart for the use of the North Dakota militia.

HOUSE.

In the house to-day Mr. Taylor of Ohio, rising to a personal explanation, apologized for the language he had used Saturday towards Mr. Fithian of Illinois. The apology was accepted.

Secured a Reward.

HUDSON, Wis., Special Telegram, Feb. 17.—Matt Shortell, chief of police of Stillwater, was in the city to-day, and the proper authorities paid over to him the $350 reward offered for the capture of Tripp, the notorious horse thief, now in jail here awaiting trial.

No Trace of Spelman.

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—United States Marshal Hitchcock has not been able to gain any trace of Spelman, who escaped from the St. Paul deputy marshal, Friday night, by jumping from a Northwestern train near Clybourne station.

MINNESOTA EDITORS

The Brainy Men of Minnesota in Annual Convention Assembled at St. Paul.

FIRST DAYS' SESSION.

St. Paul, Special Telegram.—The Minnesota Editors' and Publishers' Association held their twenty-fourth annual convention in this city. A more enterprising and intelligent body of men could not be found than that which gathered here, men who, as moulders of public opinion have left the impress of their work upon the commonwealth and are destined to leave it in a still deeper degree.

As soon as the convention came to order the bresident, L. P. Hunt, of the Mankato Free Press, gave his address. He extended congratulations to the convention on the fact that no state could produce a better class of editors. It was time that the editors and publishers of Minnesota should organize for mutual protection. Certain legislative matters were recommended to the careful consideration of the members of the association. The speaker considered it a wise move to hold two meetings a year, thus separating business and pleasure. A legislative committee, composed of the ablest men in the association, should be appointed.

After the address the convention turned its attention to business matters. Irving Todd, of the Hastings Gazette; H. P. Hall, St. Paul News, and H. G. Day, Albert Lea Standard, were appointed a committee to select representatives to attend the National Editorial association meeting to be held in July next at St. Paul.

A message of greeting was sent to the Canadian Press association, which meets to-morrow at Toronto.

A committee on resolutions was appointed, consisting of J. A. Johnson, St. Peter Herald; Soren Listoe, Nordvesten, and George Pease, Anoka Union.

Letters of regret were read from H. E. Hoard, W. J. C. Kenyon and Frank J. Mead.

The treasurer's report shows a total of receipts for the year, including $51.93 on hand at the beginning of the year, of $2,055.68. Total expenditures, $1,842, leaving a balance on hand of $213,68, with $72.55 still due from the committee on the publication of laws.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

At the afternoon session the first topic on the programme was that of "Legal Advertising," on which subject there was a paper by George N. Lanphere, of the Moorhead News. Mr. Lanphere took strong grounds against the printing of legal notices at less than the authorized fee. If this discount was for the benefit of the mortgagor, in the case of mortgage sales, it would not be so objectionable, but the discount almost uniformly inures to the benefit of the attorneys in the premises or to the loan companies holding the claim. The paper closed with the following resolution:

> Resolved, That the Minnesota Editors' and Publishers' association, in annual convention assembled, emphatically disapproves and condemns the practice of giving discounts from the statute fee allowed for the publication of legal notices in the newspapers of the state, and views it as a practice which unnecessarily diminishes the legitimate revenues of the newspaper business, thereby lowering its dignity and honorable independence. It expresses the hope and recommends that all the publishers of the state will hereafter demand the full legal fee in every case of such publication.

J. A. Johnson, of the St. Peter Herald, took decided grounds against rebates, and declared that he had never yet given back a single cent in such manner.

The editor of the St. Peter Tribune was as fully opposed to giving rebates on legal advertising as any one. He thought, however, that there was needed something stronger than a resolution to break up the custom of rebates, as such resolutions had been repeatedly disregarded.

There followed considerable further discussion, in which everybody agreed that all the editors should decide to never publish a legal notice at less than legal rates. Mr. Pease, of the Anoka Union, caused a commotion by stating that there would be a bill introduced in the legislature this session which would reduce the legal rates by one-third. Several speakers advocated an agreement whereby the papers would all refuse to publish the notices at all if the rates are reduced.

Mr. Paradis, of the Midway News, moved the appointment of a committee of five to look after legislation which affected the publishers.

Mr. Heatwole was of the opinion that the present legislature should be handled with gloves, as there was no way of telling what it would do. In regard to another matter, he presented a resolution endorsing the bill introduced by Senator Tawney, which takes away from the judges of probate the power of selecting the papers in which notices shall be published, and places this power in the hands of executors and administrators. Both Mr. Heatwole's resolution and the motion of Mr. Paradis were adopted. Mr. Lanphere's resolution was referred to the committee on resolutions.

H. G. Day, of the Albert Lea Standard, read an interesting paper upon the "Regulation of Common Carriers." He reviewed the increasing power of the corporations and dangers resultant therefrom. People seemed to be forgetful of the fact that the country belonged to them and not the corporations. The remedy for the existing state of affairs is in a proper use of the ballot, an honest administration of the courts and most of all in the power of the press. There should be laws regulating consecutive terms of office of legislators and representatives in congress. United States senators and the president of the United States should be elected directly by the people. Appeal should be made often to the people for first principles, and then the people should be educated and elevated. The paper was able and scholarly throughout.

THE IMMIGRATION QUESTION.

"Encouragement of Immigration by the State," was the subject of a paper by W. E. McKinzie of the Crookston Times. He favored an immigration bureau, but thought their efforts should be mainly directed to the East and South, rather than to the inducement of foreigners to settle in the state. It would be better to make an effort to Americanize the foreigners already here rather than to get still more to come. But the overflow from the Eastern states constitutes the class of people which will be of most value to the state.

Mr. Carpenter, of the Farmington Tribune, vigorously opposed the plan of an immigration bureau, conducted at the expense of the state. It was simply a scheme to allow speculators to get rid of their private property through the use of the state's money.

Mr. Ives, of the St. Hilaire Spectator; Mr. Lanphere and Mr. Listoe, of the Nordvesten, jumped into the fray as soon as Mr. Carpenter had ceased speaking, and in an emphatic manner set forth the needs of the state in the way of an immigration bureau.

IN THE EVENING.

The evening session of the editorial association at Westmoreland hall was of a social and literary character. The beauty and fashion as well as the brains of other cities and towns were represented in the gathering.

The programme opened with a selection by Seibert's orchestra. The second number was a recitation by Mr. Franklyn W. Lee, of the Daily News, of an original poem entitled "Widow Breen."

Following Mr. Lee came Col. Pat Donan, whose paper on "The Country Press, Its Mission and Power" was listened to with the deepest appreciation. For over an hour Col. Donan poured over his audience the lurid fireworks of his oratory in an oration characteristic of himself, and as unapproachable in its own peculiar style as a railroad manager by a tramp seeking for a free pass.

The hardships of an editor's life were depicted in the most woeful terms, in which the editor's sanctum was characterized as an inky den, a tread mill of horror. The versatility of talent requited to be able to write upon all the subjects necessary was given as something neither more or less than human.

Another musical number was performed by Mr. Milch, the cellist. In the absence of Maj. W. A. Hotchkiss, who was put on the programme for an address on "The Pioneer Newspaper," Capt. Castle was called upon for a few words. He spoke briefly, being unprepared, and disclaiming the title of "pioneer" in any sense, but referred appropriately to the early days and to the names of such men as Gen. Sibley, Alexander Ramsey and H. M. Rice, who were associated with that period of the state history.

Mr. H. P. Hall was next called upon. He gave some interesting statistics as to the early days of the association. At the date of its first meeting there were but fifty-five papers published in the state, and thirty-three of these were represented at the convention. All but four of the 33 are still in existence, 17 being under the same name and 7 under the same ownership. There are now 456 publications in Minnesota, of which 28 are dailies.

After Mr. Hall's remarks there were a few moments of social chat, after which a collation was served in the dining room adjoining the hall. The remainder of the evening was spent in such social enjoyment as ought to be appreciated by the man depicted by Col. Donan as the typical editor. Dancing was the chief feature, and the members of the "ink-slinging" fraternity turned their backs on Pallas for the nonce and walked with Terpsichore.

SECOND DAY

The morning session opened by Mr. Mitchell, of the St. Cloud Journal-Press, moving that a copy of Mr. Heatwole's resolution, giving it as the sense of the editorial association that the bill now pending in the state senate amending the probate code so that administrators or executors shall designate the paper in which probate notices shall be published, be forwarded to senator Tawney for use in securing the passage of the bill. This motion was unanimously adopted, after which the editors stirred up the immigration question. George N. Lamphere, of the Moorhead News, opened the subject by introducing a preamble and resolution to the effect that Eastern people be informed of the great opportunities offered by Minnesota, and to that end the association is unqualifiedly in favor of the re-establishment of the bureau of immigration.

Mr. Lamphere moved the adoption of the resolution, but the president here announced that Mr. F. I. Whitney, general passenger agent of the Great Northern railroad, had prepared a paper on the subject of immigration which he was desirous of having read before the Editorial association. There were no objections and Mr. Folsom, an employe of the Great Northern, read the document.

Another resolution recommending the executive committee of the National Editorial association to change the date of their annual meeting in St. Paul from July 22 to July 24 by reason of the triennial convocation of the general grand chapter A. F. and A. M. of the United States, which begins in Minneapolis July 21, was adopted. Mr. Lamphere's resolution giving it as the sense of the meeting that no editor should cut on legal advertising was tabled.

On resolution of Mr. Irving Todd, the executive committee was requested to purchase a life-size portrait of Mr. David Ramaley, treasurer of the association for the past twenty-four years, and present it to that gentleman with the compliments of the association.

Mr. Hunt presented a resolution which pledged the aid of the association in properly representing Minnesota at the world's fair, which was adopted.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

Upon reassembling in the afternoon the election of officers was taken up, and were in each case elected by acclamation on a rising vote, resulting as follows:

President, H. P. Hall, of the St. Paul Daily News; first vice president, George N. Lamphere, of the Moorhead News; second vice president, J. F. Murphy, of the Waseca Herald; third vice president, A. N. Dare, of the Elk River Star-News; secretary, J. A. Johnson, of the St. Peter Herald; corresponding secretary, Ed A. Paradis, of the Midway News; treasurer, David Ramaley, of the A. O. U. Guide, St. Paul; executive committee, F. S. Verbeck, Northwest Printer, St. Paul; Irving Todd of Hastings, H. G. Day of Albert Lea, together with the officers just elected.

Mr. Ramaley presented a resolution, which was adopted, to the effect that in view of National Editorial convention next July, it is the desire of this association that the executive committee shall call a summer meeting of the association at the same time and to make arrangement for entertainment.

Mr. W. B. Mitchell, of the St. Cloud Journal-Press, was then allowed to read his paper on "County Printing:" The paper brought out a very lively debate, Editors Listoe, Hinds, Putnam, Vendiver, McKinstry, F. A. Day, Irving Todd, Ramaley, Hunt, H. G. Day and Jennison taking part. As a conclusion it was decided to refer the matter to Mr. Ramaley, he to confer with the attorney general in regard to getting fuller reports of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners, and also have the state auditor's blanks for delinquent tax lists so arranged as to include name, description and amount of taxes due on land.

The committee on delegates then reported the following list of delegates to the national association:

W. B. Mitchell, St. Cloud Journal-Press; Daniel Sinclair, Winona Republican; G. S. Pease, Anoka Union; C. H. Lienau, St. Paul Volkszeitung; L. P. Hunt, Mankato Free Press; H. E. Hoard, Montevideo Leader; H. G. Day, Albert Lea Standard; William Hinds, Shakopee Argus; Hans Mattson, Minneapolis North; A. W. McKinstrey, Faribault Republican; F. S. Verbeck, Northwest Printer; Joel P. Heatwole, Northfield News; V. C. Seward, Stillwater Messenger; Lewis Baker, St. Paul Globe; S. P. Jennison, Red Wing Republican; W. E. McKenzie, Crookston Times.

The committee on organization appointed last year made its report and strongly recommended an organization of the association on business principles.

Mr. John J. Dobson of the Northwestern Newspaper Union made an offer to furnish law supplements to the newspapers of the state at a price cost of twenty five per cent. less than the "Actual Cost" price of the Editorial Association in 1889 provided the Association would withdraw from the business of publishers—The offer was referred to the committee, upon laws with power to accept or reject.

In concluding the business of the session the retiring president, Mr. L. P. Hunt, thanked the editors for past and new honors. He contended that this session was the most profitable one in the history of the association. Three cheers were then given for him and the convention was over.

An Accomodating Domestic.

Why didn't you come when I rang," said a Texas lady to her servant.

"Because I didn't heah de bell," replied Matilda Snowball.

"Hereafter when you don't hear the bell you must come and tell me so."

"Yes'm."

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Tuesday Feb. 10.

SENATE.

When the session of the senate opened Senator John Day Smith presented another batch of petitions from Minneapolis people against extending the saloon limits.

Senators Burkhardt, Craig and Dean presented petitions asking to have the age of consent raised.

When general orders were reached the senate went into committee of the whole, with Senator Stevens in the chair. The second bill on general orders was Senator Donnelly's joint resolution providing for a conference with the legislatures of the states of the Mississippi valley in reference to the interest on money. The house resolution which contained the same provisions was defeated in the senate on Saturday. Senator Donnelly offered an amendment providing that the commission to be composed should not meet with commissions of other states to consider the questions of interest and usury, but should instead carry on a correspondence with the committees of other legislatures, with a view to agreeing upon a uniform rate of interest and a common usury law. The amendment further provided that nothing in the resolution should be construed to mean that the states were to favor any league or conspiracy against the authority of the United States.

A roll call was demanded, and Senator Donnelly's motion was defeated by a vote of 19 yeas to 28 nays.

The bill of Senator Hompe submitting an amendment to the constitution providing that the legislature can make any appointive office in the state elective, was referred back to the judiciary committee.

Senator Lienau, from the committee on beet sugar, reported in favor of establishing that industry in Minnesota, and presented a bill providing that instructions in sugar beet raising and beet sugar manufacturing shall be given at the agricultural farm, and appropriating $35,000 to establish a sugar manufactory at that point.

The senate committee on state institutions yesterday gave a hearing to a delegation of citizens from St. Cloud, upon the question of employing skilled labor in the granite quarry at the state reformatory. J. H. Drake spoke in favor of restricting the output of granite from the reformatory, while J. H. Cooper took the part of the institution.

HOUSE.

Yesterday morning the house was occupied with a large amount of small business arising out of reports of committees and the introduction of resolutions. Mr. Bell's bill for the abolition of wolf bounties was unfavorably reported upon by the committee on agriculture, and Mr. Furlong made a strong speech in favor of retaining the bounties. Mr. Bell sent a communication to the clerk's desk to be read from the auditor of Polk county requesting the passage of the bill, and this was supplemented by a statement from Mr. Capser showing that Polk county drew over $1,300 in wolf bounties, and the adjoining county of Douglas but $39. The committee's report to indefinitely postpone the bill was adopted, with the understanding that Mr. Bell is to bring in another bill to meet the existing abuses of this bounty system.

The committee on towns and counties reported the West Duluth incorporation bill favorably, but after a lively spat between Messrs. Kendall and Boyd the bill was referred back.

The joint resolution relating to the Niagara ship canal was reported favorably upon by the committee on commerce.

The judiciary committee reported back the single tax bill without recommendation, and also recommended that the preamble to Mr. Keyes' resolution calling a constitutional convention be stricken off. The bill recommending an amendment to the United States constitution in the method of electing presidential electors was recommended to be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. Smith's bill, H. F. 321, has the effect of making the state bear the expense of certain state prosecutions for offenses, and not the county. Mr. Moore introduced a free text book bill.

Mr. R. A. Walsh introduced a bill which proposes to obliterate the dividing line which separated the election districts of justices of the peace in St. Paul into east and west of Wabasha street. This bill will greatly simplify the election of justices by making their election at large.

Wednesday, Feb. 11.

SENATE

The senate met to day, but did not transact much business owing to the absence of a large number of senators at St. Cloud. It was nearly 11 o'clock before there was a quorum present, and then such business as could be dispatched without a roll call was speedily finished. When it came to passing bills there was often considerable difficulty in getting a sufficient number of votes to pass, and finally the senate gave up the attempt in disgust and adjourned.

Senator Borchert presented a petition from citizens of Renville county relating to the building of warehouses on the rights of way of railroad companies.

Senator John Day Smith introduced a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the work of Platt B. Walker for the state in connection with the securing from the United States a return of the money collected as a war tax. The measure also authorizes the payment to Mr. Walker of such sums as it is found he is entitled to. The committee of investigation is to consist of two senators and three members of the house. Later in the session Senator Leavitt introduced a resolution authorizing the president of the senate to appoint a committee of three to look into the matter of Mr. Walker's services, to find out who appointed him, by what authority he acted, and how many other attorneys were appointed to look up the same matter.

HOUSE.

The members of the lower house were off on a junket to St. Cloud.

Thursday, Feb. 12.

SENATE.

The senate put in a full day yesterday—mostly in making speeches. The work actually accomplished did not amount to as much as on the previous day when there was barely a quorum present and the senate was not actually at work over an hour and a half.

The morning session was taken up with a discussion of the question of printing the evidence taken by the investigating committee of two years ago, and although there was a clear majority in favor of such action from the start, nevertheless it took nearly two hours to come to a vote.

In the afternoon the bill submitting to the people a constitutional amendment providing for an income tax was debated for two hours and a half, and then the bill was defeated, but by a blunder of its opponents the vote was immediately reconsidered, and the measure is now on the calendar again, where there will be another chance to debate it.

Senator Crandall brought up the matter of filling the vacancies on committees caused by the unseating of Senator Searles, and it was agreed that the vacancies should be filled by the Republicans. The Democrats will make vacancies on committees for Senator O'Brien.

HOUSE.

Among the most important mundane matters introduced was a bill by Mr. Foley of Aitkin county regarding the taxation of railway lands. It is known as house file 360. The title of the bill is:

RAILROAD LANDS TAXATION.

> An act relating to the taxation of certain lands owned by railroad companies in this state and repealing laws and parts of laws relating to the taxation of the same, and to provide for the submission of this act to the people of the state for their approval or rejection.

Another bill was submitted by Mr. Stockwell of Hennepin, providing for giving to women the power of voting for all city offices at municipal elections.

PASSES FOR LEGISLATORS.

Mr. Wacek of Le Sueur introduced a bill requiring all railroad companies in the state to give free transportation to all members of the legislature. This is diametrically opposed to Mr. Gildea's bill and to the provisions of Mr. Currier's railroad bill.

Mr. Tripp of Hennepin introduced a bill providing for the levying of a tax of 5 per cent on all inheritances of $500 or over. The money so raised is to go to the state and probate judges, and county auditors will be responsible for the assessment and collection of the tax. Administrators are also held responsible for the payment. This bill is based on the New York collateral inheritance tax law.

Mr. Bell's bill, relating to grand juries, making the minimum number sixteen and the maximum twenty-three, was recommended to pass.

Mr. Gildea's bill, prohibiting members of the legislature and state and county officials from accepting free passes from railroad companies, after being amended to take effect on April 15, 1900, was recommended to be indefinited proposed by a vote of 52 to 30.

Mr. Caswell's bill, house file 222, relating to the liability of a husband for a wife's debts and vice versa, was recommended to pass.

House file 222, Mr. Bjorge's bill for the abolition of capital punishment, was the next taken up. Mr. Bjorge, in moving that the bill be recommended to pass delivered an eloquent and able address against what he termed judicial murders. The address was too lengthy for publication, but it consisted of a comprehensive review of the whole question. Mr. Feig moved that the bill be recommended to be indefinitely postponed. There were several speeches more or less eloquent and then Mr. Reeve moved that the bill be made a special order for Thursday afternoon, Feb. 26. Mr. Bjorge seconded the substituted and it was carried.

Friday, Feb. 13.

SENATE.

The senate put in another full day yesterday considering the legislation upon its table, but did not get within sight of the end. Several important measures were acted upon in committee of the whole, and others were considered without any action being reached.

Senator Sevatson introduced a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to consider the subject of establishing courts of conciliation, and providing for a safer, cheaper and more perfect system of land transfers.

Senator McHale's bill relating to notaries public provides that the name of the notary shall appear on his seal.

Senator Donnelly presented a bill instructing the railroad commissioners to fix rates of transportation on farm products at rates based on rates of transportation of similar products east of the Mississippi river and between Chicago and New York.

HOUSE.

Yesterday morning the house transacted but little business of any importance, devoting the major portion of the time to the discussion of several minor resolutions. Several bills were introduced, one of which was by Mr. Bjorge, providing fixed freight rates and classification for railroads, and another by Mr. Boyd, providing land for the Duluth & Winnipeg Railroad company's land grant.

Saturday, Feb. 14.

SENATE.

The senate yesterday held a three hours' session, in which a good deal of business was disposed of, the table being nearly cleared when an adjournment was taken.

In the committee of the whole, with Senator Hompe in the chair, several bills were considered and recommended to pass. The bill detaching Itasca county from Aitkin was recommended on motion of Senator Allen, to lie on the table. This action was taken for the purpose of allowing the house bill to be taken up by the senate. The bill which provoked most discussion was that introduced by Senator Tawney taking away from judges of probate the authority to select the papers in which legal notices shall be published and giving it to the administrators or executors of the estates of deceased persons. No conclusion was reached and the committee reported progress.

HOUSE.

A number of bills were reported back by various committees and placed on general orders, among others being the so-called anti-Pinkerton bill.

A number of new bills were introduced, among them being two by Mr. R. A. Walsh of Ramsey county providing for the vacation of Oakland and the Lutheran cemeteries in the city of St. Paul and giving the city power to have the same vacated for the purpose of making streets, parks, etc. The bill will not, if it becomes law, necessarily entail the immediate vacation of these burial grounds, and several years will elapse before they are absolutely vacated.

On motion of Mr. Diment Senate File 106 was ordered returned to the senate.

On motion of Mr. Feig House Files 308 and 379 were recalled from the railroad committee and sent to the public lands committee.

Monday, Feb. 16.

SENATE.

Shortly after the senate came to order yesterday Senator Sanborn introduced a series of joint resolutions concerning the death of Gen. Sherman and Admiral Porter.

The resolutions were passed under suspension of the rules and sent to the House, which body also adopted them.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION.

Senators John Day Smith and Dean presented petitions against the enactment of legislation increasing the liability of employers of labor, or which shall change the now well defined law of negligence as at present established by legislation and judicial determination.

Senator Lienau's bill relating to chattel mortgages provides that all such mortgages upon household goods must contain the signatures of both husband and wife.

HOUSE.

The house reassembled at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon and after prayers, roll call and other preliminaries Mr. Feig called up his resolution regarding the passage of the joint resolutions of condolence and regret regarding the deaths of Gen. Sherman and Admiral Porter, and the report of the house thereon was presented and adopted. The same report was made in the senate and appears in the proceedings of that body.

The reports of regular and select committees were then presented and accepted, a number of bills being reported back.

Mr. McAllister offered a resolution empowering George H. Miller to draw the pay of a page whose position he has temporarily filled. Referred to the committee on legislative expenses.

On the motion of Mr. Kendall the joint resolution to congress in favor of building the Niagara ship canal was taken up under a suspension of the rules and passed.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

MAYOR SARGENT'S MESSAGE.

One of the most remarkable inaugural addresses ever made by the mayor of a city was that of Hon. Joseph B. Sargent, who, on January 1, was sworn into office as mayor of New Haven, Ct. Mr. Sargent is a well-known manufacturer and a student of political economy who has advanced views on social questions, and he evidently has the courage of his opinions. The first part of the message relates to the improvements necessary to New Haven's growth and prosperity. He recommends the ownership by the municipality of gas, water and other works and the street car lines, and the establishment of new public parks and public comforts and conveniences.

The message closes with a discussion of the relations of labor and capital, and a flat-footed declaration for the single tax in the following words:

"Capital is absolutely necessary to the civilized employment of labor.

"None of the operations of business, manufactures, building or farming can be carried on successfully without the friendly union of the three elements. Labor without capital is the labor of the crude barbarian working without tools.

"A country with no capital, but with labor and directors of labor (or chiefs), is in a savage stage. A country with all three of the elements harmoniously united is civilized, enlightened and prosperous. Civilization can not exist without capital.

"No civilized community would for a moment think of taxing labor nor managing ability. No intelligent community would attempt to tax either of those two elements of all successful industry and business for fear of driving them away. Why should civilized society punish successful industry by taxing the results of it? Why should civilized society punish capital, the savings from successful labor, and try to banish it and leave labor unemployed?

"Capital is timid and flies away on the first approach, or apprehension of danger. 'It worketh where it listeth and we know not whence it cometh nor whither it goeth.' It surely will not remain when in danger, nor will it work in any community except at market prices over and above all charges and risks.

"It seems to me that it would be for the benefit of all labor and all enterprise in the city of New Haven and would greatly increase its growth in business, population and capital, if capital were as free of taxation as is labor and as is managing ability. If such were the permanent policy of New Haven, capital would make its home here and work at a lower rate with labor, securely free from punishment for coming here and feeling safe in abiding here. Neither labor nor enterprise is taxed, nor should capital be taxed.

"Land, as our forefathers found it, is not capital. It was not created by the labor of the hand or head of man. Nature's God gave it to humanity and to the animals without price. It should supply funds for all needs of government, and the rate of taxation on the land in the various localities should be in proportion to market price. It can not be concealed and all owners can be served with exact justice. No encouragement should be given, through low taxation, for the holding of land out of use in order to compel the land-needy to pay profits to the early possessor.

"In the taxation of land only, for all necessary public revenues, the distribution of the tax over the whole community would be equitable and in proportion as nature's God intended.

"Capital may be driven away and labor paralyzed by the taxing of capital, but the land can not be driven away. The owner can annually or monthly recover from the user or renter the tax he has paid on lands used or occupied, but the tax on lands not in use, but held waiting till the increase in population compels its purchase at an expensive price, can not be recouped by distribution over the people in the form of rents or otherwise. The owner of unprofitably used or vacant lands would thus be tempted to sell for occupancy or use, and thus poor men might get homes and the city would grow in consequence.

"It is claimed by students on the subject of taxation that the taxation of capital and all other personal property is unequal and unjust to the conscientious and truthful, because only the few give true statements of their personal wealth. One of the commissioners of taxes in New York has recently testified, under oath, that 'the taxation of personal property is almost an entire failure; that it leads to efforts, and very strenuous efforts, on the part of capitalists (all owners of personal property are capitalists) to remove their property beyond the jurisdiction of the city and State. It offers no encouragement for capital to come here; that the law, as construed by the courts, enables any one who chooses to so dispose of his personal property that the tax department can not reach it. Those who understand the law and can take advantage of it, do so in a majority of cases. Those who are ignorant of the law and do not understand their rights pay taxes.' The foregoing testimony was given concerning the present tax laws of New York which were made for the express purpose of increasing and equalizing the taxes on capital or other personal property, but resulting, as usual, in harm to enterprise and labor, and in no corresponding gain to any other property nor to the body politic in morals or wealth.

"It is claimed by investigation that tax on buildings discourages the erection of buildings, and that old, small and unsuitable buildings are allowed to remain on valuable city lands, because of the fear of taxes on expensive and more useful buildings, and thus building enterprise and employment of builders' labor is not encouraged, and the land is not put to the best use for the interests of the whole public. Chapel, State and Church streets in New Haven are evidences.

"It is claimed that by the taxation of personal property, liberal expenditures in proper articles of use, or art in all forms, and home adornment are discouraged to the injury of labor.

"That if personal property in a city were free from taxation more people of wealth would permanently reside in that city, and there expend their incomes and invest, or lend, their capital for use there, to the great benefit of labor.

"That much capital now invested in other States or foreign countries would come to the place of security and of freedom from taxation, to the great benefit of enterprise, labor and permanent wealth.

"That all mechanical, manufacturing and commercial industries would increase to the great benefit of labor, the necessary co-partner of capital in all such enterprises.

"Any disadvantage or harm attempted to be put upon capital always reacts upon labor, while capital silently flies away to a place of security if not of profit.

I do not point out nor consider what is sometimes claimed to be the inherent wickedness of forestalling the distribution of land to the whole people, but only its remedy, and the good of the city as a whole.

"Equitable taxation is most surely and easily arrived at by putting all taxation upon one article of such universal use that no person can exist without its direct or indirect use. Pig iron might be selected as the article, or pig iron and other metals. The taxes, if all of them were collected from metals, would be immediately and equitably spread over the whole community in just proportions. But the difficulty in taxation upon metals is first that there might be concealment of quality, and, second, it would interfere with the manufacture of metal goods for export.

"Taxation of land only has no valid objection in equity, can not interfere with manufactures and labor, and would tend to wider distribution of land and homes among the people.

"But whatever may be the future methods of taxation or sources of revenue for the support of local, State or National Governments, let us hope that there be no more collected than is absolutely necessary for the proper and economical administration of governmental affairs, and that there may be no direct nor indirect imposition of unnatural and therefore unjust burdens upon the whole for the benefit of any favored or grasping few."

Spurious Land Reform.

William Wolff, formerly an active worker of the Manhattan Single Tax Club, of New York City, is now in Germany. In a letter to Mr. Klein, of the club, he describes a so-called "free land" movement that is being vigorously pushed by a Dr. Hertzka, of Vienna. Mr. Wolff heard that free land societies were being started in Germany and Austria, and literature was being distributed, and he wrote to Dr. Hertzka for information. He learned that the whole social problem was about to be solved and the millennium forthwith introduced—unfortunately, however, not in Germany or Austria, but in Central Africa or the Islands of Polynesia, or wherever the societies could get some free land on which to start socialistic communities. The scheme is not to make land free, but to find some free land; to stave off the struggle at home by shipping the malcontents to foreign shores.

From the days of the Roman republic, when the soldiers and citizens were kept quiet by gifts of land in the conquered provinces, down to these times of Salvation Army colony schemes, this form of soothing syrup has been prepared and administered to the people by statesmen, philanthropists and knaves. In the present instance the socialistic idea of common ownership of land and capital, and of every body belonging to a trade or professional guild, is introduced to make the drug more palatable. Germans, however, are fond of their fatherland, and whenever they realize that all the people need is access to the land, they will find the necessary land a good deal nearer Berlin than Central Africa. The Single Taxers of Germany, of whom there are now quite a number, will do their part in correcting this bogus "free land" idea, and common sense will do the rest.

The Detroit Free Press on the Farmers and the Single Tax.

In response to a letter written by L. W. Hoch, of Adrian, Mich., the Detroit Free Press defends the income tax as a step toward compelling the very rich to bear their share of the burden of taxation, and in answer to a question concerning the single tax the paper says:

"As to what the effect would be of the operation of the 'single tax' it is pure speculation, and involves so many considerations that in the absence of any pressing question of its present adoption it can hardly be worth while for us to take the time and space necessary to discuss it. One thing, at least, can be said for it. It is the only method of taxation, probably, which would enable the government to collect the entire amount of tax levy without any discrimination between those on whom the levy falls. We are inclined to think, moreover, that the imposition of the entire tax on land—not necessarily in the Henry George fashion—would eventually make the burden of taxation press more evenly all around than can be done in any other way. This is a hard doctrine for the farmer to accept with his present notion that the exemption of personal property from taxation would make him pay the tax of the merchant, who has only personal property. It is not improbable, however, that at a comparatively early day the farmer will be foremost among those asking for the single tax on land as the only method of compelling the dwellers in the cities to bear their just share of the burden of taxation." * * * *

CREOLE AND PURITAN

"You seek me," he said shortly. "What is your business?"

"Admit me into your garden and you shall have it. You are afraid of nothing," he added, as Everett hesitated, "but I may add that the danger is only to myself."

Everett threw open the little gate, stooped to fasten the latch inside, and as he raised his eyes the dark, glowing pupils of Adrien Latour burned into them.

"Dale!" "Adrien!" And they were in each other's arms. For them at that instant there had been no war, no sufferings, no victories. They were boys once more by the banks of the far rolling Hudson.

"Dale, old boy," the Creole said after a pause, "madame told me all, and I felt I must see you once more. I shadowed your camp, but you were so busy training I guessed you were to ride, though I never could catch you alone."

"I felt some strange magnetism," Everett broke in, "when you startled my mare last Sunday, though I could not analyze it. Ah, you dear old fellow!" The strong arm crossed the other's shoulder as the two men sat on a low bench under a flowering orange tree. "It seems too good to be true, Adrien, to have you back again."

"It seems so to me, Dale, after all I have been through. But I must not let you compromise your ideas of duty. I am still a rebel. I believe I am dogged by spies. If I am recognized, presto! your provost marshal!"

"Nonsense! The war is over," Everett answered cheerily. "You are perfectly safe to return to madame and the old home. Not as my friend, but as my late foe, I offer you unconditional parole."

"You cannot understand my feelings," the other said sadly, turning his face aside. "As victor you can afford to be generous. But Dale, I fled to Mexico because I would not take the oath to the government that had beaten me. We made the election of ordeal by combat, and I accept the verdict in honor and in candor. But I cannot take the oath."

"No argument need ever come between you and me," Everett answered frankly. "I think I understand your feelings; I certainly respect them. You need take no oath. Your simple parole is all that shall be asked."

The Creole again shook his head sadly "I cannot ask protection of the government I tried to overturn," he replied "To-morrow at dawn a smuggler slips out for Cuba. While the bells call you to church I shall be on my way to voluntary exile."

"But, Adrien, this is folly."

"Very like," Latour answered, with something of his old smile. "I always did talk wisdom and act folly. But dear old boy, I cannot do it. Better enter some foreign service, where my sword can buy me place."

"This is mawkish sentiment," Everett replied seriously. "It is neither reasonable nor manly. Besides, remember your words to me before you resigned—that our old school did not educate Hessians! Aha! you remember? Yet you will sell your sword to some cause where your heart is not, purely from bitterness and pique!"

"You wrong me, Dale," the other answered gently. "I have no pique, and I know the true soldier accepts the turn of battle. God knows there is no bitterness in my heart for those who fought for what they believed the right! I honor them all—love as well as ever those I loved before."

"And can you imagine we respect you less who took up arms believing you were right?"

"I do not," Latour answered frankly. "You could not. Had I dreamed that would I have risked this dress, however I had yearned to take your hand before I sailed? No, no! Politicians can break up governments, Dale, but not friendships like ours."

"Then why leave your country?"

Again the Creole turned away his face, though he held firmly the hand in his.

"I have no country now," he answered firmly. "It is not your fault, but the iron heel grinds upon us all. God alone knows when it may be lifted—what may be left when it shall be! Ah, Dale, you remember the German's poem, 'None but the freeman hath a fatherland!'"

"You are the same old Adrien," Dale answered regretfully: "gentle as a woman in your loves, obstinate as a broncho in going your own way; but what of your life all these years?"

Then, under the oranges whose perfume struggled with the sweet olive for the mastery, each told his story; and as they talked, heedless of time, the moon rose, bright as daylight, and frolic songs of maskers were borne to them on the soft night wind. At length, after a pause, Dale Everett laid his hand on his friend's shoulder, his voice softening as he asked:

"And in all these years have you never loved again?"

Latour sprung to his feet, took a rapid turn under the trees, then turned and stopped in the deep shadow.

"Loved again?" he repeated scoffingly. "Why, man, a dozen times! I have sworn the lips that were nearest were the lips that were dearest! I have cast off the black eyes only to tire of the blue"——

"Stop! You are not speaking honestly." Everett's voice was cold and stern. "I still believe the brother of my boyhood a true man, and such do not forget lightly."

There was a long pause. Thought in the brain of each peopled the silence with memoried shapes too fast to admit of words. Everett spoke first—hurriedly, as though the words cost him an effort and he would be rid of them:

"Adrien, Beverly Mason died four years ago—a singular death, on the anniversary of his wedding day almost to the hour. He was found in his chair, a candle lighted on the desk by his side and a charred paper on the salver by it. Heart trouble, the doctors said." The silence was unbroken and he went on slowly, "One tiny scrap only of that paper was unconsumed, and, Adrien, that scrap bore your name!"

The Creole still stood silent, but his thin lips closed tighter under his mustache, and the haggard look on his dark face sorted but ill with the mountebank garb. At last he spoke calmly, but with great effort:

"Dale, if you value our friendship never speak of this again. That woman's name has been blotted from my brain since the night she sold herself! It shall never cross my lips again, so help me God!"

He raised his hand in the moonlight as Everett turned away and cried:

"How she sold herself you have never dreamed!"

Then silence again fell between them. Adrien's face was dark and set. Over Dale Everett's emotions played and flickered like clouds across the moon's, tempering, not hiding, the great light of pity that shone upon his friend as he thought:

"Dare I tell him—now?"

At length Latour turned and asked, not in raillery, but in interest:

"And—you?"

"I have and do," Dale answered. "No, do not start: I am not married. But one woman is far more to me than wife could ever be! I am true to her as though the sacrament had made us one; my highest happiness to make her the pride, the envy of all other women!"

"You!" The Creole stared at his friend. "You waste your life for a woman!"

"No, not waste it," Everett answered gently. "But I do all this—for love!"

There was silence. Busy thought in Everett's brain was again shadowing the face he raised to the moonlight. Latour kept his bent in the shadow of the orange tree.

Suddenly Dale started up, muttering to himself, "There is one way only!" Then he turned to Latour. "Wait!" he said quickly. "You shall see my excuse!"

Hastily drawing the domino over his uniform the Federal general passed into the street. And as he went on rapidly he repeated:

"Even that may fail, but it is the only hope."

"He, too! Dale Everett the plaything of a woman!" he thought aloud. "And bled so, too! Well, we are all fools for them, each in his own way! I am bitter enough, God knows! yet I can never part with this!"

He drew from his breast a woman's glove, white once, and delicate, but soiled and worn now. Dropping heavily upon the bench he looked upon the glove long and dreamily. The hard glint faded out of his eyes; the better nature lit them softly as he murmured:

"Six years ago I stole this from her wedding! And through toil and danger and death this toy has lain on my heart! Even now it wipes out all between and carries me back to the cottage on the river—before she lied at the altar and I lied when I cursed her!"

The proud head drooped in deep and motionless reverie, the little glove still held in the battle browned but delicate hand.

So deep was the man's thought that he heard nothing of an opening door on the gallery behind him, of a woman's step upon the walk, or the rustling of her train on the fallen orange leaves. He did not even hear her laugh, so low and musical it almost seemed to melt into moonlight, as she regarded him, around the tree against which he leaned.

Developed in the fullest splendor of womanhood, she was still lithe and graceful enough for girlhood, the perfect neck and rounded arms glittering with diamonds, and the whole toilet—a Pompadour costume—combining costliness and taste. A satin half mask, with lace fall, hid the face, but through it two bright eyes peered curiously at the dress of the figure before her, half hidden in the shadow. Then she advanced on tiptoe, saying to herself:

"So this is our general's excuse for delay! I must be hours late at the balls, while he plays mountebank among the people. Di donc, Monsieur Pierrot!"

She spoke the last words aloud, and again laughed softly; but Adrien Latour did not look up. He started vaguely, as though the laugh were an echo of his own memories, now far away by the fast rolling river of the north. She laughed again softly behind her mask.

"Come, Dale," she said, "give me credit, and I'll offer two pennies for the thoughts— Merciful heaven!"

The rich satin draperies crumpled back against the tree, and the little hands clinched tightly over the heaving bust. For, at the first words he heard, the Creole had stooped forward, thrust the soiled glove into his breast, and then turned full to the speaker. Now he looked with half sorrowful, half curious air upon the startled, palpitating form before him.

"So this is Dale's expensive toy!" he muttered. "Truly he pays well for it—silks and diamonds! Confound the jade! I'm sorry she caught the meaning, though. I wonder if she saw."

In a husky voice, forced out of her in half gasps, the woman answered his thought in two words:

"That glove!"

Hardly recking to what manner of woman he spoke, and more in mockery of himself than of her, Latour replied:

"The glove? Oh, that is only a souvenir of one man's idiocy, of one woman's sin, long years ago."

"Where you have never been, pretty Creole," he answered, all the lightness in the words, none in the voice. "On the cold banks of a northern river, where one woman's one act killed the future of two men and her own honor as well!"

A quick gesture tore away the satin mask, and Bennie Standish raised her head haughtily to the speaker. There was small reminder of the pert girl of the past in that proud pose of head and stern compression of lip; and the man, never changing his attitude of easy grace, gazed at her with a dumb horror freezing his eyes.

Then out of his face fell every drop of blood, leaving it blanched and sallow. But its lines grew hard, and the bloodless lips set in a straight cruel line. Still he moved no muscle; only the eyes dilated and glowed with evil fire.

Equally motionless was the woman; but she regarded him half in sorrow, half in anger. When at last she spoke the voice had only coldness in it, neither menace nor entreaty.

"Adrien Latour, the last time you saw that woman it was to insult her. Do not let six years' malice prompt you now to slander her!"

"Slander—you! How could I?" There was infinity of scorn in the man's tone, but even through that struggled surprise.

Bennie Standish advanced one step toward him.

"Those days were so long ago," she said more gently. "Even then you never dreamed all I suffered. Since, we both have suffered more. Let us forgive at least, even if neither can forget."

She held out the dainty, diamond covered hand. He seemed not to see it, yet the flash of the moonlight on the stones made him shudder.

"Oh, God!" he groaned, in bitterness of soul, "this cursed war has passed over our country like a blight. It has dried up the springs of honor in men, poisoned the founts of purity in women!"

Then, as though in mockery of the strong man's agony, a snatch of merry song, with glad refrain of laughter, broke on the night air, floating to those two under the orange trees.

If Latour heard it his face underwent no change. But a flood of pitying memories swept over the woman's, leaving it very gentle, as she said:

"Have time and memory made you only more bitter?"

"Bitter? I am scarcely just!" he said, in a dry, hard voice, more to himself than in reply to her. For a second he looked full in her eyes, his own glinting with cruel, steely glitter. Through set teeth, with effort to speak calmly, he added:

"That day I told you that you sold yourself. It was only your body then; now it is body and soul!"

For some seconds the woman stared at him in dumb wonderment. Suddenly she recoiled as if he had struck her with his fist; surprise, horror and contempt sweeping over her face. She dropped her eyes, but held out her hands to him, entreating piteously:

"Adrien, you must hear"——

He broke in almost brutally.

"Go! Go at once!" he cried hoarsely, "or you will force me to do what I never feared before—insult a woman!"

There was no mistaking the tone, even had the mere words been less plain. Instantly her face changed. The hard, proud look rose to it and set there. Without another glance at him Adrien Latour's old love turned her back upon him and, drawing her rich laces about her, passed under the orange trees out of his sight.

And again the mocking maskers' chorus, ringing out upon the night, was borne, meaningless yet jarring, to his stunned sense.

For a full minute he stood still as though carven stone. Then he dropped upon the seat, the proud head buried in his hands, with the wrung cry:

"Fallen! and through him!"

For minutes, that might have been hours for aught he knew, the still moonlight flooded the motionless figure.

Then the street gate opened again, and Dale Everett, followed by his two aids, re-entered the garden. Passing straight to Latour he dropped his hand upon his shoulder as he began:

"I just missed her. Arnold says she"——

At the touch the Creole had sprung to his feet, his face full in the moonlight. Something in that face cut off speech as a thunderclap might. It was marble calm, but the set lips and the ugly gleam in the eyes there was no mistaking. The cold steel ring in the voice nullified the excess of courtly polish in manner, as Latour said:

"Pardon! but you have been at too much pains to amuse me. And truly your new carnival does show strange sights?"

"What do you mean?" Dale asked wondering.

"It unmasks characters, while it masks faces," the other went on coldly. "It teaches that in your service, Gen. Everett, a man may rise to his brigade and yet be a—scoundrel!"

The quietly whispered word fell so distinct and clear that Everett recoiled as though he had stung him.

"You say—that!" he exclaimed in surprise, almost breathless.

The Creole drew one step nearer. An ugly smile twisted his lips, that scarcely moved, as he whispered:

"You shall fight me—here—now! I have used one word; do not force me to use another—coward!"

For a single instant Everett's right hand clinched, his arm half raised as his brow grew black and knotted. The next, the arm fell, the hand unclosed, but the teeth were set through which he forced the words:

"Had another spoken either word, I had stretched him there! From the brother of my boyhood I must better understand"——

"Do you understand—that?"

With the quickness of light, Adrien had drawn the torn glove from his breast and passed it sharply over the other's face. But, vivid as was the motion, Dale had seized his wrist in a grip of steel and held it motionless.

While one might count five seconds no sound, no movement, was made. Then Everett softly loosened his grasp and dropped his hands. His face bore no trace of anger, his voice only a solemn pity, as he said:

"Adrien Latour, you have put blood between us. Why, God alone can tell. May he pardon you in your madness!"

Dale Everett had no bigotry. As a soldier he used the soldier's weapon, and if he condemned he followed the tenet of the school he was reared in. Five minutes sufficed for preparation. Neither the general's humor nor his rank brooked question. The two aids acted as seconds; their sabers went into the opponents' hands.

"Capt. Arnold, you will act for Gen. Latour," Dale had said, as calmly as if he gave the aid an order to form parade. "We prefer this matter kept absolutely private. Should I chance to be hurt, remember, Gen. Latour is to be passed by you, masked, by all sentinels. We are ready."

While he spoke Everett had thrown off his uniform coat and vest and cast his hat on the ground. Baring his arm above the elbow, he took his saber from the young captain and stood still.

Then, in the calm moonlight sifted through the oranges, the friends of boyhood looked into each other's eyes as men look when they kill. The even skill, that years gone had been the wonder of West Point, was now to have its deadly test. The sabers crossed, shivered the moonlight into silvery spray, from feint and thrust and parry. And the giddy song of the maskers, nearer and more gay, swelled in the chorus of a wild scream, as Bennie Standish flew from the distant shadows toward the combatants.

At the same instant, Everett's saber—made by contract for other work than this—shivered at the hilt, flying ten yards away.

Before the fragment touched the ground, the Creole had stepped back one pace and grounded his point, just as the terrified woman fell between them in a dead faint.

For an instant Latour stood like a statue. Then he said to Capt. Arnold:

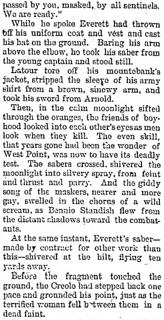
"The general does not demand another sword. His life is his. Please say to your commander, captain, that if he desires to have the rebel arrested he must do so before the dawn. For your service to me, thanks!"

Dale answered nothing—seemed to hear nothing. He was bending over the prostrate woman as tenderly as though no deadly combat had ever known him. With a courteous salute to the young captains Adrien Latour put on his hideous mask and passed from the garden into the shadows of the street.

PART III—UNDER SHADOW OF THE SPHINX.

CHAPTER I.

OLD FRIENDS IN NEW PLACES.



Latour started forward and grasped Lord Martindale's hand.

One of those delicious December afternoons, only dreamed of elsewhere, but common under Egyptian skies, was settling down over Cairo.

Warm, soft and hazy as the "Indian summer" of America, the day was dropping half reluctant in the lap of night. The red globe of the sun hung low over the distant desert across the Nile, its ever shifting sand waves motionless now, under the light breeze, and the refreshing moisture of night beginning already to creep into the air.

Far to the southward showed the dimming line of the Mokattam hills, while away toward sunset rose the tall cones of the pyramids; the Sphinx a grave and silent sentinel thrown forward in advance. Between them and the city the immemorial Nile sent her current racing to the sea, low now and curving like a silver serpent between retreating banks fringed with tall topped palm trees and dotted with splendid palaces.

Within the city sights and sounds began to make themselves known which ever shun the day in this strange land; for day is dull and still in Egypt to all save those unfortunates whom need and toil call into activity; and there, by the fiat of climate, only night lives.

Central in El-Kehirah, the victorious city, is the great groved public park covering several acres and known as the Ezbekieh. Ancient—for what is young in this land which makes Antiquity herself look new?—and unique, too, this common breathing place of all the mixed races combines the gayety of the Boise 'a Boulogne with the chaffering of the George's Birthday.

Becomingly Observed in Red Lake Falls—His Valor and Nobility of Character the Theme—A Successful Entertainment by the School Children.

If Washington, before he laid his head down to rest on that fateful 14th of February, 1799, could have looked but for a moment into coming years and seen the homage that is tendered him at all times, and especially on occasions like his birthday anniversary, he must needs have felt that this was the crowning blessing of his life, and have breathed his last with a sweeter contentment than even he experienced. The future is left to honor such memories as those of him, else gratitude must, in many cases have gone a-begging, as it too often did in the case of ancient, and even modern heroes of war or science or art, till the light of time kindled the flame of smoldering appreciation. It needed no enthusiastic patriot to kindle to the air of "Hail Columbia" as it swelled in pleasing unison from a hundred childish voices Saturday night at the school entertainment. Ere the last echoes of the hymn had died away there arose a sonorous and wholesome applause. The other numbers of the program followed in rapid succession, and each seemed to add to the pleasure of the audience, which, by the way was very large and filled every available seat in the hall. The recitation by Della Wilkins, "Birthday of Washington ever Honored" was feelingly renderd, and well received. Samuel Hunt followed with a declamation, "Washington's Birthday." Judging from his rendition, we feel safe in predicting that if he is ever elected to the presidency and makes a tour of the states he will be capable of delivering good speeches to his constituents. The next number on the program, by William Krueger, was entitled "Washington's Day." William was impressed with the necessity of speaking loudly and distinctly, and carried the audience by storm. Then came a pantomime. It was calculated to impress upon all whom it might concern the fact that Washington's-never-tell-a-lie story, was not a fake; and every detail was illustrated from the abject misery of the negro accused, to the incident of George "owning up" to his guilt. The audience at this point were confirmed in belief that Jim Mead lives in the wrong century, and should have been a New England father at the time of the revolution, to gain laurels as a general. Willie Smith acted the negro and Ned Taylor, "George." Agnes Garceau recited "Not George Washington" to the satisfaction of all. A dialogue followed by Antonie Schusser and Henry Zutz. The boys are but little chaps, and this rendered the dialogue the more pleasing. Maggie Brady then recited "Paul Revere's Ride" Miss Maggie is an elocutionist, (there is no doubt of it) and received hearty applause. "The Minute Men" was next in order. It took considerable time to prepare them. During the meantime the audience was treated to a feast. The clarionette player rendered a selection that was at once a mastery of art and the embodiment of nonchalance. He is undoubtedly one of the best clarionette players in the world, and the audience went frantic over his execution and forgot the entertainment. Finally the clamor ceased, and the curtain arose on the "Minute Men." The representation was assumed by six small boys dressed from head to toe in a brilliant uniform that at once elevated them to the rank of soldiers. The uniform was a delight to the eye and no detail was omitted, from the three-cornered hat of revolutionary day, to the braided hair falling dignifiedly to below the shoulder. Each carried a rifle and assumed an air that seemed to express a knowledge of their application. The boys were Noah Bottineau, captain; Scott Hall, Alfred Schafer, Sammy Hunt and Fred Smith. To Noah Bottineau fell the responsibility of commander, and we must say he was equal to the position, and his interpretation of that role would have done credit to the original captain of the Minute Men. The boys were recalled, and this proved the first encore of the evening. Clara Simenson then pleasingly rendered "Lexington." Mamie McNerthney followed with "Independence Bell." Mamie's rendition of this popular selection evoked flattering comments from all present. William Smith's declamation, "Warren at Bunker Hill," was good, and demonstrated that his talents were diversified, as he had still left a few traces of the pantomime in which he played the colored slave. Solo, "The Soldier's Motherless Daughter," was taken by Ella Sprague, a little mite of a girl, and S. J. Sprague, as the soldier. The child completely upset the audience with her sweet voice, plaintive accent and clear intonation. The next feature was "Household Fairies," a pantomime. The pantomime represented a housewife with her multiferious duties, such as churning, ironing, washing, mending clothes, sweeping, chopping meat, etc. Miss Martha Riechel assumed this role, and when, with her work only begun, she sank down to rest, it was evident she represented one of these much abused and overworked housewifes, which throng our land, much to the detriment of patriotism. She soon fell asleep, when, to the time of music, in came tripping six fairies. Nothing could be more realistic. The little girls were all so childish and small, none being older than seven years, and their dresses so pure white, and so short, and charmingly puffy (just like part of a round ball) and the stars and ornaments so shiny, wings so charming and so real, and the tread of their little slippered feet so noiseless, that for a time it seemed the audience were endeavoring to cast off the impression that these little creatures were fairies and not little girls, each one capable of all sorts of mischeif, from playful restiviness to downright ill-nature. It did not take them long to do up the work and disappear. Of course the audience could not hear of such a procedure, and soon called them back by the most clamorous enthusiasm possible. The second was as charming as the first. After this, recitations, "Death of Nathan Hale," rendered exquisitely by Lydia Fletcher, "New England's Dead," by Ellen Brady, and "George Washington," by five boys, followed in quick succession. Then the Glee Club rendered "The Banner of the Free," and to the encore responded with "Under the Blue." The audience seemed inclined to want another song, but the precedence of the evening set the limit at one encore. Tableau, "George and Martha," was the next. Two little tots, Drew Marshall and Mildred Smith were the characters, and the audience evinced a keen appreciation. Martha Riechel then read her essay "History of Our Flag," which we publish. Miss Martha was loudly applauded, as she well deserved. "Our Flag," recitation, and "The Grave of Washington," recitation, by Rachel Taylor were then rendered delightfully. "Mount Vernon Bells," was sung by Lurena Schreiter, Edie Koke, Aggie Rodgers and Lillie Zutz. Miss Fairweather presided at the organ. Thirteen boys and girls then favored the audience with a recitation each bearing a banner representing one of the original states. Then there were two grand tableaus, and "Yankee Doodle" by four little boys. The audience couldn't think of letting the musical chaps off with one rendition, and called them back. They had been drilled by Mr. Emard. They have exquisitely charming puerile voices. Their names are Alfred Schafer, Scottie Hall, Sammie Hunt and Albert Lonson. The fan drill was immense. Another encore, and the entertainment was done. It was the best entertainment the schools ever furnished, and deserved and received credit from every quarter of the hall. The receipts wer $33.15 and go to purchase new books for the school library. Not only was the audience delighted, but the teachers and scholars as well. They felt very grateful for the large attendance and especially for the assistance and good will of the many ladies and gentlemen whose invaluable services in one way or another had helped to make the entertainment such a glowing success.

The Pulpit and the Stage.

Rev F. M. Shrout, Pastor United Brethern Church, Blue Mound, Kan., says: "I feel it my duty to tell what wonders Dr. Kings New Discovery has done for me. My lungs were badly diseased, and my parishoners thought I could live only a few weeks. I took five bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery and am sound and well, gaining 26 lbs, in weight."

Arthur Love, Manager Love's Funny Folks Combination, writes: "After a thorough trial and convincing evidence, I am confident Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, beats 'em all, and cures when everything else fails. The greatest kindness I can do my many thousand friends is to urge them to try it." Free trial bottles at Schreiter's drug store. Regular sizes 50c. and $1.00.

A Farmers' Elevator

At Minneapolis—After a Straggling Existence of Short Duration, it

Succumbs to Disaster—A Polk County Farmer Considerably in the Hole.

The Alliance Elevator Company, of Minneapolis which made an assignment last week, seems to have been left in a far from healthy condition, says the Northwestern Miller. The affairs of the company are in a good deal of a tangle, the business being handled in a loose manner. The corporation was originally organized as the Scandinavian Elevator Company, in 1888, and through its medium the farmers were led to expect that the export wheat trade was to be revolutionized, and that they were to derive some of the excessive profits which the elevator companies were credited by the grangers with receiving. C. C. Wolcott was at that time the manager, but the manner in which he found it convenient to go abroad very suddenly will be remembered. The name was than changed to the Alliance Elevator Company. H. L. Loucks, a leading spirit in the Farmers' Alliance of the state, has figured at its head, serving as pressdent. Courtland Skinner, a young man from St. Paul, appears to have acted as secretary.

From publication in the organ of the State Alliance, it would appear that both Loucks and Skinner desire to avoid being held responsible for recent transactions to which the elevator company has been a party. The assignment was made by L. H. Loucks, Peter Larson, Sr., and A. W. Mertons, as directons.

The company has posed as strictly a representative of the farmers, but it has done only a nominal business. It had no membership in the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce, and whatever wheat it handled for its constituents, had to be sold by a third party, Woodward & Co., acting in that capacity. The capital stock was fixed at the formidable figure of $2,000,000 but this was not all issued. The stockholders are almost intirely farmers and the amount held by each is small. There were several elevators which the company formerly had some claim to, but they are all encumbered by chattel mortgage to their full value. Assignee White, who was attorney for the company estimates total liabilities at between $15,000 and $16,000, and the assets at $7,000 to $8,000, but as the stockholders are liable for double the amount of stock they subscribed for, he thinks the creditors will probably not lose much. There are $5,000 of unpaid wheat accounts, $5,000 due Pennsylvania parties on notices and accounts, and between $7,000 and $8,000 due Woodward & Co., of Minneapolis, but the latter is secured by mortgage on five or six houses.

A farmer named Joseph Chevalier, of Polk county, was here Monday, with an attorney, endeavoring to see what satisfaction could be obtained for two cars of wheat, valued at $987, which had been shipped by him to the company in January and for whice he had received no compensation. Mr. Chevalier, having confidence in the corporation, left his money with it until he came to town on Feb. 12 to pay a mortgage on his farm. On arrival he found that an assignment had been made two days before. It is claimed that Secretary Skinner, at a meeting of the directors in December, called attention to the fact that the company was insolvent and urged an assignment. This was, however, not done and an effort will be made to prosecute the officers for accepting the Chevalier money while knowing the defunct condition of the concern.

Specimen Cases.

S. H. Clifford, New Cassel, Wis., was troubled with Neuralgia and Rheumatism, his Stomach was disordered, his Liver was affected to an alarming degree, apetite fell away, and he was terribly reduced in flesh and strength. Three bottles of Electric Bitters cured him.

Edward Shepherd, Harrisburg, Ill., had a running sore on his leg of eight years' standing. Used three bottels of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's arnica salve, and his leg is sound and well. John Speaker, Catawba, O., had five large Fever sores on his leg, doctors said he was incurable. One bottle Electric Bitters and one box Bucklin's Arnica Salve cured him entirely. Sold by W. A. Schreiter.

CASUALTIES.

Rivers in Pennsylvania and Ohio are rising. Considerable damage has already been done, but no lives have been lost.

The Grand opera house at Rochester, N. Y., has been destroyed by fire. The Windsor hotel adjoining was also damaged. The total loss is about $100,000.

At Denver, A. Hartung, his wife and three children were poisoned by eating raw pork. One little girl, Lizzie, ten years old, is dead, and all the others are in a dangerous condition.

A freight collision occurred on the Atchison road, near Shoemaker, N. Mex. Two engines and eight cars were destroyed. Engineer Adams and Brakeman Rueb were killed and Engineer Edmonds fatally injured.

The North German Lloyd steamer Havre while on her way down the bay at New York collided with an Italian bark inbound. The bark sank almost immediately. Thirteen persons were aboard the bark, of which all but two boys were saved.

A rock weighing at least 200 pounds fell from Duquesne Heights, near Pittsburg, and crushed into a passanger coach on the Pan Handle road, instantly killing one passenger, Miss Clara Fleming, and seriously injuring J. T. Donahue, Miss Mamie Baldwin and an unknown young man. All were students of Duff's college.

WICKEDNESSES.

C. H. Martin, a loan agent of Beatrice, Neb. has swindled several people out o $60,000, and has fled to Canada.

James B. Kinsley, a wool commission merchant of Boston, is under arrest charged with embazzlement of $34,000 from the Boston banking houses.

Banker S. B. Cowles of Clark, Neb., has been arrested, charged with the murder of his wife, killed a few days ago it was at first thought by burglars.

The bondsmen of ex-State Treasurer Woodruff of Arkansas have paid Treasurer Morrow, $63,740.50, the full amount of the shortage shown to exist in Woodruff's cash account.

At Providence, R. I., Earnest J. F. Barton, an artist, sixty-three years old, was found dead in his studio by his son. He sat with his face buried in a sponge saturated with chloroform.

While trying to rob William Reimer in the woods near Tomahawk, Wis., Jim Crow was killed and two other Indians were badly wounded by Reimer, who is handy with the pistol.

In Dallas, Tex., Edwin T. Young was shot and instantly killed by W. T. Nash of McKinney, Ky. Nash walked up to his victim and said, "You have debauched my wife and by heaven you shall die." Two shots followed and Young fell dead.

Stephen Billings, who was under a six years' sentence for attempted wife murder, killed himself in the jail at Freehold, N. J., by cutting his throat with a penknife. Billings was the father of the two jockeys o that name.

A brutal murder has occurred at Bloomfield, Iowa. Ed Ward, an insane man confined at the county house, escaped, and going home struck his father, seventy-three years old, with a billet of wood, facturing the old man's skull and causing death.

The wife of Daniel Bagley, a farmer in the town of Brunswick, Wis., woke up in the night and saw a man filling a bag at the corn crib. She roused Bagley, who rushed to the door with a shotgun and fired, hitting the thief, who fled, leaving the bag and his hat. The snow was covered with blood, but trace of the man was lost, and it is not known who he was or how badly he was injured.

A man dying of a pistol wound in the abdomen was found by an officer in an upper room on Twenty-eighth street, New York. A handsome woman bent over him and, as the officer entered, the wounded man said to her: "You've done me this time, but keep your mouth shut." The couple gave fictitious names. He is in the hospital. She is locked up, and says he attempted suicide.

John Spelman, the son of Distiller Edward Spelman, of Peoria was marched to jail by his father, where he now is awaiting the pleasure of the government officers, from whom he escaped from a train a few days since. For several days he has been paying short visits to his father's home in this city, but always in absence of Mr. Spelman, Sr. Next morning, however, when his father laid eye on him he grabbed him and marched him to the jail and delivered him up.

Sheriff J. H. Hyland, of Hastings Minn., brought in Herman Darsov of Mendota on a charge of assault in the first degree upon his nephew, William Darsov, Jr. The prisoner has had repeated quarrels with his brother, William Darsov, the complainant in the case. On the 14th inst., it is alleged, the former came to the latter's premises and fired through the window. The charge of shot took effect in the faces of the wife and son of William Darsov. The preliminary examination was commenced.

Charles Ridgely of Springfield, Ill., has purchased the stallion Chitwood, a six-year-old chestnut, by Nutwood, dam Margaret Wilkes, by George Wilkes. It is said the price paid was $15,000.

Jack Kelly of Boston and Al Burke of Galveston fought in Houston, Tex., for the welter-weight championship of Texas. Kelly knocked Burke out in the fourteenth round. The men fought at 125 pounds, Queensberry rules.

Abe. Willis, the Australian bantam, who is now in San Francisco, is credited with having bested Ike Weir in three rounds at his benefit in Sydney. Weir, on the return trip, stopped off at Honolulu. Willis will probably be matched against the winner of the McCarthy-Dixon contest.

IN GENERAL.

The Oregon senate has indefinitely postponed the house bill appropriating $50,000 for a world's fair exhibit.

The barbed wire manufacturers and the representatives of the Washburn-Moen patent monopoly have failed to bring their negotiations to a conclusion.

The Northern Pacific directors declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1 per cent. They also decide to resume work on all projected extensions and push them to completion.

The bill making prize fighting in Texas a penitentiary offense has passed the house. The term of imprisonment provided for ranges from two to five years. This measure is a substitute for the senate bill.

A resolution relative to uniting all of the Western States in a general reduction of interest to 6 and 8 per cent has been defeated in the Nebraska legislature. This means no change in the interest laws in Nebraska.

Two hundred and fifty members of the Cigar Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association of Chicago have signed an agreement to advance the price of cigars 10 per cent on account of the increased cost of tobacco under the McKinley bill.

At a meeting of the citizens of Chippewa Falls, Wis., Assemblyman J. A. Taylor was instructed by a unanimous vote to procure the passage of a bill authorizing the city of Chippewa Falls to issue $100,000 bonds for the purpose of procuring new manufacturing industries for the city.

Master in Chancery Boyesen began taking testimony at Chicago in the application of W. S. Alley for the appointment of a receiver for the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago. Before the investigation was fairly commenced, however, it was agreed to suspend proceedings, in order that the Monon people may have a chance to file an answer to Alley's sensational bill.

Private dispatches from New York state that the New York owners of the Pacific short line have sold that property to the A. S. Garretson syndicate, which secured an option on it and that the line is to be built through to Ogden unden traffic contracts with the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific and the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, which companies are having a war with the Union Pacific.

It was given out at the Illinois Central offices at Chicago that the Dubuque & Sioux City has been leased to that company. While the lessee agrees to pay as rent the net earnings of the property, it assums none of the debts or other liabilities of the lessor, and reserves the right to terminate the contract on two months' notice. As the Illinois Central owns substantially all the stock of the Dubuque & Sioux City, it is evident that the end sought is merely to simplify accounts and reduce expenses.

A Chicago evening paper says: It may now be said almost positively as though it had been formally determined by the directory that the lake front will be entirely abandoned as a site for the world's fair and that the big show will be held under one tent, as it were, at Jackson Park. It appears that the trades unions are not satisfied with the contract made by the directory for the work of preparing Jackson Park. The clause forbidding the employment of aliens is all well enough, they say, as far as it goes, but they want the unions and the eight-hour day recognized and they want a permanent board of arbitration appointed.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

FARMERS AND THE SINGLE TAX.

Walter Muir, President of the North Dakota State Farmers' Alliance, Writing to the New York Journal.

A goodly number of single tax men were among the delegates to the recent Farmers' Convention at Ocala, Fla., where I represented North Dakota. A resolution would have been presented at the convention favoring the single tax had we been sure that the members were not in want of thorough information on the subject.

I am a single tax man, and recommended it to our people in this State. I would not do this if I held to the belief that the single tax would increase the burden of the farmer. That is a myth that will be exploded among the farmers in a few more months of educational work.

Then they will see, as the Knights of Labor have long seen, that a single tax levied solely on the value of land, irrespective of improvements, can not burden a worker, be he farmer, mechanic, or professional man.

The adoption of the single tax by the Colored Farmers' Alliance is but an indication of what is coming. When the farmers of the country take up the single tax there will be such an awakening as this country has never seen. It will be greater than the anti-slavery movement because it will not be sectional.

The man who is riding the storm of rural discontent is Henry George.

Once the single tax is "platformed," there will be a fighting issue that will wipe out all past issues of race, section and religion. The farmers of to-day are not the farmers of twenty years ago. This time they are going to the root of our social troubles. They are coming to see that all other reforms are fruitless if monopoly and speculation are permitted in land—the source of all wealth. The eastern farmer needs the single tax just as much as the western. If it were not so the single tax would be but a local and temporary expedient of relief. The farmers are a liberty-loving class, and the single tax, in levying no tax on the products of labor, and in giving to individualism the freest scope, feeds their aspirations for freedom.

I have sometimes irreverently made fun of those opponents of the single tax who insist that it will be distributed just like a tariff tax, and, therefore that it has no advantage over any indirect taxes. If it were in the least likely that the chief opponents of the tax reform would believe this theory, we would keep silence on the subject, because nine-tenths of all the opposition would be removed, and the single tax would at least be adopted in several States.

But landlords are not so simple-minded as to be deceived by any such plan as this. They know very well that they now charge all the rent for land which they could possibly get, tax or no tax. Not one of them can be persuaded that a tax on ground-rents can ever be shifted upon tenants. So we must meet this idea with facts and figures in order to convince the tenant majority of the Ricardian doctrine that a tax on ground-rents will always be paid by landlords alone.

Suppose the ground-rent of the United States to be $900,000,000. Suppose the single tax, unlimited, to be adopted; and this is the particular form of tax which Mr. Edward Atkinson and the other advocates of this distribution theory are considering. Something over $800,000,000 would then be collected. On Mr. Atkinson's theory, the landlords would add this to their rents, and the tenants would add it to the prices of goods. Very well; then rents would be raised to $1,700,000,000. Instantly the taxes would be raised to about $1,600,000,000. Rents are then put up to $3,300,000,000. But the taxes are just as quickly put up to $3,200,000,000. Rents are again raised to $6.500,000,000. Taxes instantly swallow up $6,400,000,000. Rents are now raised to $13,000,000,000. But taxes as swiftly follow, absorbing $12,900,000,000. The all-powerful landlords once more raise rent to $26,000,000,000. But, as this is more than twice as much as the whole productive power of the whole United States, how are the landlords going to get it? And if they could get, how can they keep it?

There is no use in going any further, although the figures might be carried into infinite numbers. The idea that landlords can add to their ground-rents taxes on ground-rents, so long as the people are determined to take even half the ground-rents in taxes, is transparently absurd. But the idea that they can add any taxes at all to ground-rents, when they are already charging all the rent which they can possibly obtain, is equally absurd, though not perhaps so transparent. The American landlord very properly charges now all the rent for land which he can possibly get. He can get no more, if compelled to pay a quarter or a half of the whole of his rent in taxation, for the plain reason that he gets now all which he possibly can, and no man can get more than he can get.—Thomas G. Shearman, in the Standard.

Australia.

The Legislative Assembly of Queensland has passed a bill for the imposing of a tax of three pence on the pound on capital land values, irrespective of improvements. The upper House, however, threw out the bill on the second reading. This is the first start of the single tax in Queensland, and a good one it is. The landlords of the upper chamber may resist for a little while, but will soon have to give way.

Sir Henry Parks for the Government of New South Wales has introduced a most sweeping elective reform bill, which provides for all that the most thorough Democrats have asked. It gives female suffrage, provides for single electorial district, abolishes property qualifications and cumulative voting, does away with hustling nominations, provides stringent provisions against fraud, and compels the closing of liquor saloons on election day. The bill also admits the military and police to the franchise. This is the most sweepingly radical measure that has ever yet been proposed, but it is likely that it will go through. The Government have not yet announced specially their financial proposals, but they have hinted at sweeping reductions to the tariff and the imposing of taxes on land values and on property to supply the loss on customs revenue. The single tax men welcome the proposition but will fight the property tax.

The single tax men throughout Australia seem to be in the highest spirits. Although the great strikes have resulted in much loss, they have done a great deal to call the public attention to the social problem. The Government of New South Wales has appointed a Royal Commission to take evidence and report upon the cause of the conflict between labor and capital, and the best means of preventing labor disputes. Several single tax men have been named on this commission, Mr. Frank Cotton being of the number. Rev. Dr. Roseby, of Sydney, Chairman of Congregational Union, the leading man of the Congregational clergy of New South Wales, has delivered an address upon the relations of Christianity to the social question which has attracted much attention. He declares that it is hopeless to attempt to elevate men so long as they are placed in conditions where their integrity is impossible. Hence the most urgent reform is the adjustment of the land laws on the basis of justice to all.

An Amusing Economist.

The Peoria (Ill.) Journal prints, with editorial commendation, a communication from Eli C. Lisk. Mr. Lisk declares that the farmer now pays ninety-two per cent. of the taxes of this country. One reason for this is, that "all his property lies open to the assessor and it all goes on the assessor's books," whereas "the rest of the community, manufacturers and merchants excepted, have their wealth laid aside in their drawers and safes and can not be seen by the assessor, but he has to depend on their word alone for the correctness of their listed property." Mr. Lisk is a little foggy in his English, but his meaning is quite clear, and he sensibly declares that "this mode of assessment is all wrong." What do our readers supppose is the remedy Mr. Lisk proposes? It is to exempt land entirely from taxation and assess improvements and personal property alone. Of course he suggests new and drastic methods for ascertaining the amount of bonds and mortgages, etc., held by each individual, and equally, of course, fails to remember that those concerned have a perfect right to remove themselves and their possessions out of any State adopting such a law. Having started out by showing that personal property can not be equitably taxed, he insists that it alone shall be taxed. The Peoria Journal sapiently remarks that "it will be observed that the writer does not espouse the theories espoused by Henry George, but, on the contrary, takes just the opposite view." Yes, this will be observed.

The Single Tax in Minneapolis, Minn.

C. J. Buell, of Minneapolis, writing to the Standard, says: The single tax is moving right along here. The fact that Mayor P. B. Winston has joined our league has caused considerable comment in the newspapers. Very many of our leading business men here are single taxers; while as to the masses of the people, I have very little doubt that they would give a large majority for the single tax, if the matter could be presented to them on its merits. In the meantime we are trying to so amend the constitution that the people of any country or city, or of the State at large, can vote upon the matter. There are a good many single taxers in the Legislature. The entire Democratic contingent from this county—nineteen in number—with one possible exception, will favor our bill, and one of the two Republicans will also favor us. Mayor Stivers, of Brainard, who is in the House; also John Sheets, of Todd County, Mr. Bull, of Wright County, and John A. Keyes, of Winona, are single taxers. It was Keyes who put through the Australian ballot law two years ago, and he is now at work on a bill to apply the reform to the entire State. I don't know how many other single taxers there may be in the House, but our bill is so framed that any opposition to it has got to deny the Democratic principle of local self-government. We have great hopes of being able to carry the measure through.

The Single Tax Principle.

The single tax idea is steadily commending itself to earnest thinking men. It is a rank injustice that a man should hold property vacant, with nominal taxes, and gain the increment of value produced by the improvements made by his neighbors, who pay taxes upon those improvements. The bed rock of taxation is this: no tax on the products of labor. This principle is world-wide. It applies with equal force to the town, the State, the Nation, the world. By its adoption labor would receive a healthy stimulus, and would create wealth as never before. Throughout the world the burdens of taxation have fallen upon labor, and in all forms of indirect taxation the burden falls with almost equal weight upon all, regardless of their circumstances. But place this burden upon land values only and at once the basis of taxation becomes absolutely equitable, land speculation becomes unprofitable, and the inducements to labor to place improvements upon the land and to advance to its more general ownership are vastly multiplied.—Grand Rapids Building and Realty.

When land increases in value it does not mean that its owner has added to the general wealth. The owner may never have seen the land or done aught to improve it. He may, and often does, live in a distant city or in another country.—Social Problems.

THE DEADLY PIE

It Is the Great American Depopulator, Says This Authority.

"The risks which New York men take with their digestion," said the proprietor of a group of well-known down-town restaurants to a New York Sun man, "is a constant source of surprise to me. Heavy pie and pulpy pudding are bolted at the very time when careful eating should be rigorously attended to. I sit and look on at times in my different restaurants with absolute amazement at the judgment, or rather lack of judgment, which men exhibit at the table. We have two throngs of customers. The first rush comes about 9:30 in the morning. It is composed of brokers, business men, clerks, and office employes, who have grown into the habit of rising late and rushing down to the office without breakfast so as to start the work of the day on time, They could easily get their breakfast at their boarding-house or at home if they rise a half-hour earlier, but most of them are up late at night and the temptation of a longer nap in the morning is too alluring to resist. So they hurry down-town, open the mail, start things a-going, and then rush into the nearest restaurant for breakfast. It does not hurt any man to take a little exercise before he eats in the morning, and undoubtedly a delay in the first meal of the day would not do them any particular harm if they would be careful about the character of their food. But after working two hours on an empty stomach they come in in violent hast, order a cocktail, and then eat pastry and sweets enough to ruin the digestion of an ostrich. They usually start in with roast beef or some other dish that is ready and wind up with mince pie or a boiled apple dumpling. I know many a business man who comes in and consumes three or four dishes and is out of the place again in less than fifteen minutes. At lunch-time they come in again and load up with an oyster pattie or beefstak pie or some other dish in which rich pastry is an important factor. This second rush of trade is even more interesting than the first, because it shows how the habit of eating pastry grows. It is no unusual thing to see a man of 40 years of age take wheat cakes, sausages, and mince pie for his luncheon. He bolts the sausage, covers his cakes with rich syrup, and his pie served hot and sprinkled an inch deep with powdered sugar. He is invariable an advanced dyspeptic in appearance, and for some unaccountable reason he seems to succeed in business. It does not do any good to sneer at the pie-eaters of New York, because half the railroad presidents, telegraph superintendents, and influential men of affairs of this town eat things which cause a man of gastronomical intelligence to shudder. Most of the absorbed and nervous financiers and business men die at 50, and everybody says it is due to over work. All a mistake. Pie is the fell destroyer."—New York Sun.

A SUGGESTION FOR TABLEAUX.

A VERY successful tableau-entertainment was recently given in New York, the subjects being taken from illustrations in the current magazines. The idea is a simple one, and if the subjects are well chosen it can be made very interesting.

The Century Company has prepared a list of suitable pictures with suggestions for any one who wishes to get up the entertainment. They will send it free on request.

IN the tariff discussions of recent years, sisal has been one of the articles most frequently mentioned. How it is produced and what it looks like may be learned from the fully illustrated article on CULTIVATION OF SISAL IN THE BAHAMAS, which Dr. JOHN I. NORTHROP will contribute to March Popular Science Monthly.

When that famous epidemic, "la grippe" prevailed in Europe and America thousands of people used Scotts, Emulsion and were benefited. Such a signal proof of the efficacy of a medicine had scarcely ever before been known. It is not only efficacious in influenza, but in consumption in its early stages, bronchitis, whether acute or chronic, and, in fact, in all diseases of the respiratory organs. If you "have a cold" DO NOT WAIT until it develops into some disease that is difficult to remove, but get Scott's Emulsion at once, and thus save yourself much suffering, and avoid the danger of its settling into a chronic cough. Those who are subjected to great changes of temperature, and are therefore liable to contract colds, should keep it on hand. For use in families, it is a food medicine that will give speedy relief and save many doctor's bills.

"German Syrup"

G. Gloger, Druggist, Watertown, Wis. This is the opinion of a man who keeps a drug store, sells all medicines, comes in direct contact with the patients and their families, and knows better than anyone else how remedies sell, and what true merit they have. He hears of all the failures and successes, and can therefore judge: "I know of no medicine for Coughs, Sore Throat, or Hoarseness that had done such effective work in my family as Boschee's German Syrup. Last winter a lady called at my store, who was suffering from a very severe cold. She could hardly talk, and I told her about German Syrup and that a few doses would give relief; but she had no confidence in patent medicines. I told her to take a bottle, and if the results were not satisfactory I would make no charge for it. A few days after she called and paid for it, saying that she would never be without it in future as a few doses had given her relief." ①

YOUR NAME BY MAGIC.

A Simple Device That Will Reveal Any Number of Secrets.

By use of the table given below you can ascertain the name of any person or place, providing the rules below the lettered diagram are strictly observed:

A	B	D	H	P
C	C	E	I	Q
E	F	F	J	R
G	G	G	K	S
I	J	L	L	T
K	K	M	M	U
M	N	N	N	V
O	O	O	O	W
Q	R	T	X	X
S	S	U	Z	Y
U	W	V	Y	Z
W	W	W
Y	Z

Have the person whose name you wish to known inform you in which of the upright columns the first letters of the name is contained. If it is found in but one column, it is the top letter; if it occurs in more than one column, it is found by adding the alphabetical numbers of the top letters of the columns in which it is to be found, the sum being the number of the letters sought. By taking one letter at a time, in the way outlined above, the whole word or name may be plainly spelled out. Take the word Jane for example. J is found in two columns beginning with B and H, which are the second and eighth letters down the alphabet: their sum is ten, and the tenth letter down the alphabet is J, the letter sought. The next letter A, appears in but one column, the first, where it stands at the head. N is seen in the column headed B, D and H, which are the second, fourth and eighth letters of the alphabet; added they give the fourteenth, or N, and so on.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The Future of Hogs.

The following correspondence will be of interest to the hog growers of the Northwest. The first letter was written by R. C. Judson, to Gen'l Mark D. Flower, president of the St. Paul Union Stock Yards Company:

Gen'l Mark L. Flower.

Dear Sir:—You are aware of the great interest taken by myself in the hog and sheep raising industry of Minnesota. Years ago, I became convinced that diversified farming was necessary to the success of husbandry in this state. The exclusive wheat grower year by year became poorer, until he was forced to diversify. My great hope for the farmers of Minnesota has been in hog and sheep raising, and I have viewed with pleasure the growing cash markets here for all kinds of stock. However, I now hear more or less complaint of the prices secured this year for hogs, and fear the low prices will tend to decrease the hog product of Minnesota next year.

What explanation can you give for the unusual low prices at all of the leading markets of the country? Is my cherished hope in the utility of hog production as the one sure winner for the farmer likely to be blasted?

The following is Gen'l. Flower's reply:

"The tendency of the hog market has been generally downward during the past four months, and the farmers of Minnesota, like those of other states, have been compelled to either refuse to sell or to accept unremunerative prices. In November the hog market at Chicago, Kansas City and other leading markets were lower than at any time during the preceding twelve years. Considering the exceptionally high price of corn and other grain this would seem to be a strange circumstance, but it was due alone to the high price of grain that hogs became a drug in the markets! The farmers who had little or no grain could not afford to buy it for feeding purposes, and those who had grain preferred to rush their immature hogs and shoats upon an overstacked and demoralized market at any price it would give, and convert their surplus grain into cash.

"On the part of the farmers with one accord, there existed a mania to sell hogs at any price, to save feeding, and this intemperate desire to sell extended to brood sows and stock pigs, thus making it next to impossible to seasonably supply the markets next year.

"What will be the sequence to this "tale of woe"? Next year, with the same intemperate zeal and unanimity that has characterized their action, this season as to hogs, will impel them to raise grain and abandon hog production. The logical conclusion is that grain will then be the drug in the market, and the few farmers who are wise enough not to abandon hog-raising will surely be recompensed for their foresight and judgment."

Dr. Dauphin's Successor.

The Board of directors of The Louisana State Lottery Company met yesterday morning and elected Mr. Paul Conrad president, vice Dr. M. A. Dauhlin, deceased.

Mr. Conrad has practically managed the affairs of this great corporation for the past five or six years. He has been an attache of the company in varions capacities since 1870, and has earned the good will, confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact.

Born in this city in the year 1840, he entered the Confederate army soon after attaining to manhood and his record as a soldier was as enviable and gallant as that of any of Louisiana's sons who wore the gray. He served with distinction to the end of the war. He was a member of Capt. Henry St. Paul Chasseurs a Pied, a part of the Army of Northern Virginia, and is one of but a few of the survivors of that famous command. The company left New Orleans April 22, 1861, for Pensacola. Thence they went to Virginia, and other companies being attached, St. Paul's Battalion was formed. Their first big fight was at Seven Pines, where more than half the command were killed or wounded—among the former being young Bourges, Conrad's first cousin.

He is and always has been strictly speaking a man of the people. Of a genial and pleasant disposition and possessing rare business qualifications he is eminently fitted to fill the responsible position to which he has been elected. He is an honest, upright and faithful business man, whose word is as good as his bond, and, having a thorough knowledge of the intricate affairs of the corporation over which he now presides, the interests of the stock holders may be said to be in safe and careful keeping.

Repulishing this notice from the New Orleans Picayune the Mobile Register says:

His Mother-in-law.

Numberless have been the jokes, witty and otherwise, which have been from time immemorial hurled at the helpless mother-in-law.

Her daughter's husband, now that he has married her daughter, takes toward her a very different tone from that of his courting days, when it was impossible for him to propitiate the old lady, as he calls her now, and when he promised Fanny that come what would, mother should always find a home with them.

It is curious to note the difference in sentiment with which the married man regards his wife's family, as compared with the effusion of his courting days. Then the very dog and cat were dear to him, as something pertaining to her. He respected the door-mat. He revered the front gate. The bell-pull was not like other bell-pulls, for through its mysterious agency she came to the door to greet him with a smile. Then, her mother was such a charming lady. She made such delicious rolls, and such translucent jelly. She contrived so admirably for him to be alone with Fanny, and that they might not be disturbed by Fanny's little brothers and sisters.

But when the march of events made her a widow, and she came to his home to live with her daughter, everything changed.

He had never before noticed how sharp her nose was. He had failed to observe that she always wore soft-soled shoes; and had a habit of putting in an unexpected appearance. When he and Fanny were having a little connubial set-to about the dress, maker's last bill, or the way the housekeeping money went. And she always sided with Fanny.

But when the children came along in due season, then his mother-in-law fretted him most severely. She wanted to name all the babies after her folks' and Fanny was sulky and unhappy if he resisted. She believed in homeopathy. She trotted the babies—he thought churning them up in that way was the worst thing that could be done.

She ordered the meals. She gave him hash for breakfast. He detested hash. She had the Sunday baked beans warmed up for Monday. He despised warm over baked beans.

She and Fanny joined the sewing society. He looked upon the sewing society as a priestly device to win women away from their homes, and didn't care a picayune whether the heathens baked or boiled their missionaries.

But by and by, when Fanny fell sick with fever, and he went the same hot and uncomfortable way, and it seemed as if there was a pile-driver set up inside his head, and the mammoth Kentucky Cave was small compared to the vacuum in his stomach, and the water of the Rio Grande would not have quenched his thirst—then his mother-in-law came bravely to the front, and physicked him, and poulticed him and smeared him with liniment, and bathed his head, and got him on his legs again—and now he thinks there is nobody like her.

And there are thousands of families where the mother-in-law is unwelcome, and where her presence is undesired when all is well: but when sickness and sorrow come, she is the mainstay, and everybody is glad of her help.

So let us cherish our mother-in-law; for we cannot have a great many of them, and when we come to think of it, we are satisfied on the whole that she is unjustly dealt with.

Where Nickel Comes From.

From the Youth's Companion.

In the Cooper Cliff Mine near Sudbury, Canada, it is said, more nickel is being produced than the entire market of the world calls for at current prices. A little branch railway off the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, four miles in length, leads out to the mine, which opens into the face of a crag of the brown, oxidized Laurentian rock, characteristics of this region. The miners are now at work at a depth of about 300 feet below the surface. As fast as the nickel and copper-bearing rock is hoisted out it is broken up and piled upon long beds or ricks of pine wood, to be calcined, or roatsed, for the purpase of driving out the sulphur which it contains. The roasting process is of the nature of lime kilning or charcoal burning. Each great bed of ore requires from one to two months to rcast. When roasted, the rock goes to the principal smelter, a powerful blast furnace, "jacketed"—in mining phrase—with running water, to enable it to sustain the great heat requisite to reduce the crude, obdurate mineral to fluidity.

The dross of the molten mass is first allowed to flow off, and afterward the nearly pure nickle and copper, blended together in an alloy called the "mat," or matte, is drawn off at the base of the furnace vat into the barrow-pots, and wheeled away, still liquid and fiery hot, to cool in the yard of the smelter. The mat contains about 70 per cent. of nickel, the remainder 30 per cent. being mainly copper. When cold, the conical pot-loaves of mat can easily be cracked in pieces by means of heavy hamers. The fragments are then packed in barrels and shipped to Swansea, in Wales, and to Germany, where the two constituent metals are separated and refined by secret processes which are very jealously guarded by the manufacturers.

So jealously is the secret kept that no one in America has yet been able to learn the process, although one young mettallurgist spent three years in Swansea working as a common laborer in the factories in order to procure it. At present there are produced daily at the Copper Cliff Mine about ninety pot-loaves of mat, each weighing near 450 pounds, an output which yields an aggregate of more than 4,000 tons of nickle a year.

A Joke that Ended in Death.

Entertaining are some anecdotes told of Gonella, jester to Borso, Duke of Ferrara, in the fifteenth century. As Gonella was on his way to mass three blind beggars implored alms of him. "Here is a florin for you." He gave nothing and passed on. The beggars invoked blessings on him, each supposing that one of his fellows was in possession of the coin. When they wished to divide the gift not one of them would allow that he held it, and they mutually accused each other of cheating, and from words proceeded to blows. Gonella watched the fray with great complacency, and when the beggars were all bruised and bleeding he went to church with a clear and calm conscience. The Duke of Ferrara fell ill, and the doctors declared that only a sudden fright would restore him to health. He was too great a man for anyone to play tricks on except his fool. Gonella was with him in a boat, and cleverly pushed the Duke into the water. Aid had been previously provided, and the Prince was drawn ashore and put to bed. The fright and the bath and the bed cured the invalid, but he was so enraged with Gonella that he exiled the man who was both a fool and a physician. Gonella returned in a cart filled with Paduan soil; an evasion of the edict of banishment said to have been practiced by many a jester. The Duke ordered him to be beheaded, but saying privately that he would only repay fright with fright he directed the executioner not to use the axe, but to let fall a single drop of water on the culprit's neck. Gonella was led to the scaffold; all the usual gloomy preparations were made. He was blindfolded and made to lay his head on a block. The executioner, from a vial, let fall a drop of water on Gonella's neck. Then amid shouts and laughter the jester, silent now, was bidden to rise and thank the Duke for his clemency. But Gonella never moved; he was dead—killed by his master's jest.—From the Cornhill Magazine.

"Tipping."

Nothing is more amazing to the American than the hauteur and arrogance of a typical London man, or gentleman, since the distinction is very sharp in the English metropolis, when dealing with people who servo him.

He says, "Please do this," and "I'll thank you for that." because it's the jargon of the town; but his politeness is put forth with such an indescribably arrogant air that it is scarcely less offensive than a slap in the face. It is accepted everywhere with the inevitable "Thank you, sir."

The old story is still told of the Yankee who stood on the stern of the steamer as she swung out of Liverpool, and, holding a shilling aloft, cried out:

"If there's a man, woman or child on this blessed island I've not tipped, come forward now, for this is your last and only chance!"

I remember very well an experience I had on my first day in London. I started out with a typical London man to lunch at his club, and we stopped at a druggist's—or chemist's, as they say in England, with the ch pronounced softly—to make some purchases. My companion bought a few shillings' worth of one thing and another, and when his change was brought to him he pushed two coppers toward the druggist, and said carelessly:

"Heah, you take these."

The druggist picked them up with a grateful smile, and muttered, "Thank you very much, sir."

It was a fine, large shop on the corner below Bond street on Piccadilly, and the druggist was a handsome, full bearded, and perfectly dressed man of about 60 years. Fancy making the proprietor of a showy New York drug store a present of a few centel—New York Sun.

The Indians Not Dying Out.

The novelists, reporters and others who write Indian speeches, beginning with the words "I am the last of my race, the red man is vanishing before the white man as the leaves, etc.," had better look upon the facts. It now seems that any statement to the effect that the number of our Indian population is slowly decreasing is not in accord with the truth. The Indian is not dying off and vanishing from the earth any more than the Caucasian is. They have, for the most part, adopted semi-civilized habits and quiet lives. They are increasing rather than decreasing. In the quiet, orderly communities of the Indian Territory, in the reservation of Dakota and in the pueblos of New Mexico and Arizona, the Indian is encamped peacefully, and his children are being educated. He is fairly prosperous, provided the Indian agents and the contractor do not try to starve him, and he is raising his family and increasing in the land. —Boston Advertiser.

THE NEWS.

Official Paper of the City.

Jas. Meehan, Jr. Editor and Prop.

Every city and village in the Red River Valley should have within it an immigration bureau. The people interested in immigration must not expect the newspapers to do all the work and receive no remuneration.

Crooksten has bought one alliance They resolve that two counties out of Polk would suit—but four counties ah! they don't want it at all. There are eleven hundred people in Com. DeMers district who want a division of four or wish to be set off from the rest of the county.

For the next two years Congressman John Lind will no doubt be busy attending to the wants of all Minnesota Republicans. He is the only republican representative in the house. Democrats have more representation but they must be patient and await the coming of Whitneys before many favors will be granted.

In the event of Democratic supremacy in '92, there is one consolation the rock-ribbed democrat has, Wm. F. Vilas, being in the senate, will not resign to accept a cabinet position should one be offered him. Vilas was the peacock of the Cleveland cabinet; when approached by a plebian his aristocratic feathers would flutter his authority, and every request would be denied.

It is a noteworthy fact and one that cannot be gainsaid that the tendency of our modern legislators is toward boodle. From what we know of the present body we venture the assertion that if a United States senator was to be chosen this session he would be compelled to water his stock more than once to secure the seat. The poorer the body the more financial vitality required, Messrs. Resolution and Investigation to the contrary notwithstanding.

Brother Bierley says we are "beefing" because one third of the county printing is given to a North Dakota man. We suppose he alludes to our "beefing" because of the bull headed work of the Commissioners in going out of the state to have the printing done. No part of the News is printed out of the state. Whatever money the News ever received for county printing, remained in Polk county. We shall continue to beef so long as the County Commissioners continue to be such bovines.

The republicans of Minnesota have insulted the farming eliment. Besides their committee of one hundred there is another committee at large. "Everyone knows," said an alliance man, "that the laws of our state are against allowing anything to run at large. The republicans cannot impose upon me and if I find their committee (which I suppose is a high falutin name for some kind of blooded stock) running at large—you can bet I'll empound 'em and prosecute 'em to the fullest extent of the law—I will; by the great horns of my dead stag, I will". It would be well for Joel to lasso that committee.

The readers of the News and especially those who are at present engaged in the noble work of honest farming, will peruse the article in another column desctiptive of the organization, life and failure of an alliance elevator company. This failure comes home to their own doors. We call the attention to it because a Polk county farmer, Mr. Jas. Chavalier and no doubt, an alliance man, was mulcted out of two cars of wheat valued at $987. The officers of the company are liable to criminal prosecution as they accepted the money of Jas. Chavalier with a full knowledge of their insolvency. Perhaps it may not be out of place to remind some of our farmers who are embarking in associations and stock companies that they are liable for double the amount of stock they hold in the concern. Judging by the past these cooperative institutions are dangerous investments—few of them have been successful and many have been failures. It is seldom the live qualities of merchant and farmer are combined in the same individual—the qualities that go to make the one are in contradistinction of those which make the other. A successful farmer, and this is a comprehensive term, is a man whose inclinations, whose heart and spirit are enwrapped in the pursuit of husbandry When you take him outside of this sphere he is, as it were, lost. His early training calculated him for the farm and when destiny placed him upon his quarter section the great godess of fortune expected that by judicious means, by economy and proper management he would reap a just reward. So it is with the merchant—he trained for the merchantile pursuits of life—place him behind a plow and his energies wither. To our farmer friends in this section who run the risk of a pecuniary gain by enlisting in gigantic corporations, we would send the admonition—beware lest you regret the step you have taken or are about to take. The laws of commerce are intricate. It is hard to comprehend them; before your fondest expectations are realized the labors of a life time may be sunk in the bog of misplaced confidence. Unless you are possessed of that cunning which was a charactaristic of the money changers, when they were driven out of the temple—refrain from embarking in stock organizations. If you have made money enough out of the farm for outside investment farming has to you been profitable—use the money that has come from the farm upon the farm—but don't engage in an undertaking where every dollar you invest makes you liable for two and you must rely upon others, and trust to their honesty and ability in handling your hard earned dollars. It very often happens that inexperienced men are placed at the head of those stock associations, those co-operative institutions, and it is only a question of time when insolvency steps in—ruin follows in its shadow—the farm is mortgaged to meet stock assessments—and all is lost.

A Good Man Gone.

Hon. John Lawlor of Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin, has passed to the last resting place. He was one of the pioneers of Wisconsin. Coming to Milwaukee in an early day, without resources, other than what nature gave, he steadily climbed the ladder of success and had scarcely reached the noonday of life ere he had risen in business circles and coupled his name as well as his fortune with such men as Alexander Mitchell, Plankington and others. His charity knew no bounds. He was philanthropic in the grandest sense of the word. He was the founder of St. John's College at Prarie du Chien and the thousands of young men who received an education at that institution of learning now bow their heads in deep sorrow for one whom the students could always call a friend, and to whom they never lost an opportunity to do honor. The young lady's academy at the same place is another monument to his benevolence. We might speak of his inventive genius—his energy—but if he had not done nothing more than erect the two great institutions of learning which now are a credit to the Northwest these would have been sufficient to perpetuate his memory. He leaves a family of five sons who are daily gaining distinction in the business and professional work. His memory shall long be honored by citizens of Wisconsin, the state of his adoption—for which he labored to such a good end.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage containing a power of sale dated April 5th, 1887, duly recorded in the office of register of deeds of Polk county, Minnesota, on April 8th, 1887, in book 30 of mortgages on page 338 whereby Wilfred Cyr and Emma Cyr, his wife, mortgagors, mortgaged to F. T. Day, mortgagee, the west half (w½) of the south east quarter (se¼) and the south east quarter (se¼) of the south west quarter (sw¼) and lots nine (9) and ten (10) all in section twenty-five (25) in township one hundred and fifty one (151) of range forty-five (45) in Polk county, Minnesota containing one hundred and seventy-four and 25-100 acres, by which default the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof and there is claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice, the sum of $90.30.

Now, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of siad power, said mortgage will be foreclosed and said premises will be sold at public auction by the sheriff of said county or his deputy on the 21st day of February 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county, to pay said debt and interest and taxes and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees and disbursements allowed by law.

Dated Jany 6th 1891,
F. T. Day, Mortgagee.

De Forest Bucklen,
Attorney for Mortgagee, j1f12
Crookston, Minn.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure.

Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, and in the payment of the debt secured thereby, which said mortgage bears date July 31st 1882, and on said date was duly executed and delivered by Samuel Meunir, mortgagor, to the Colonial and United States Mortgage Co., (Limited) mortgagee, a corporation duly organized, and authorized to transact business in Minnesota, and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of register of deeds in and for the county of Polk, Minnesota, on the 31st day of July. A. D. 1882 at 4:45 o'clock p. m. in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 508, 509 and 510. That thereafter, to-wit: On the 16th day of August, 1887, said mortgagee, for value received, sold and duly assigned said mortgage to Albert W. Knaak, by an instrument in writing duly executed and delivered on said date, which said assignment was duly recorded in the register of deeds office in said Polk county, Minnesota, on the 5th day of September, 1887, at 11 o'clock a. m., in book 32 of mortgages, on page 410.

And whereas, there is now claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, the amount of four hundred and seventy-six dollars, together with the additional amount of seventy-two dollars, paid by said asignee for taxes on the premises described in said mortgage, and interest on the taxes so paid, which amount is also claimed as a lien on said premises and secured by said mortgage and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been had or instituted to recover the debts secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and therewith recorded, which by reason of the default above mentioned, has become operative, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the land and premises described in and covered by said mortgage, to-wit:

The fractional north-west quarter (¼) of section number three (3), being the south half of said northwest quarter (nw¼) and lots numbered three (three) and four (4), government subdivisions of said section three, (3) in township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of range number forty-two (42) west, containing one hundred and fifty nine 16-100 acres, and situated in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage and debt secured thereby, taxes and interest, together with all foreclosure expenses and lawful disbursements including twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, stipulated to be paid in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Polk county or his deputy, at the front door of the First National bank in the village of Red Lake Falls in said county of Polk, Minnesota, on Saturday, the 14th day of March, 1891, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of that day.

Dated Dec. 5th, 1890.

Albert W. Knaak, Assignee of Colonial and United States Mortgage Co., (Limited), Mortgagee.

Fresh fish at W. A. Schreiter's.

Jas. C. O'Brien is again in the city.

Pure Honey 15cents a pound at Schreiter's.

The contractors are at work on the artesian well.

Fred Lowe went to Crookston returning Saturday.

A. D. Wishard visited Ada Friday. He returned Saturday.

The snow came with a vengeance this week. It is several feet deep now.

Attorney R. J. Montague of Crookston came up via Grand Forks Saturday evening.

Wanted—A competent girl to do general housework. Good wages. Enquire at the residence of Jas. Meehan Jr.

H. C. Hansen has been under the weather and unable to attend to his duties. His friends hope to see him around soon.

No doubt the happiest people in the world to day are Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schmidt. A baby arrived last week to brighten their home.

Mr. Morisette father of Napoleon and Peter, of Emardville, has been suffering with paneumonia the past couple of weeks. He has been very seriously ill.

Joseph Thompson was up from Faribault this week. He returned Tuesday accompanied by the remains of Adolph Riechle, which will be interred in the cemetery at Fairbault.

Mrs. Egan, mother of Mrs. W. T. Spillaine and Mrs. J.A, Duffy, has been very ill with neuralgia of the heart, and requires the constant care of a physician. She is living with Mrs. Spillaine.

The following parties went to Thief River Falls Monday night: Mr. and Mrs Otto Zaiser, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Zaiser Miss Rosa Zeh, Fred Zeh, Jim Mead Charlie Mead, Murry Sanders and Geo Bottineau.

Joe Bray has not yet ceased to mourn the loss, by death, of his much beloved dog Sank. If veterinary, and several dollars, worth of medicine, had proved of avail the dog would be yet alive. But they didn't.

We are pleased to state that Edmund Bray's physician considers him out of danger, and over the pivotal point in his illness. He will from now on continue to improve unless complications set in—which is not feared.

A snow plough along our sidewalks woul be a mighty serviceable thing at present. Snow several feet deep on the sidewalk doesn't make walking that would tempt Hop Sam's wife with her little feet if she were here.

Alponse Paradis, the enterprising Lamberdite, was doing the city Friday. He will probably put in a cheese factory here if proper encouragement is given. A factory would be a good thing in more ways than one, and we ought to secure it.

Mrs. Borum arrived with her son from Virginia Monday evening. She is now a guest of Mrs Jas. Meehan. Jr. Mrs. Borum has not a few friends in this city, which was for a time her home; they will all be pleased to see her after an absence of over four years.

A social hop was held at the Northwestern hotel Thursday night, and despite the rigors of the Lenten season a goodly crowd assembled and enjoyed for several hours t e charming dance.

Miss Katie McNerthney received the appointment of teacher of the Terrebonne school Monday. She will open her term the coming week. Miss Katie is making a success as a teacher, and the Terrebonne school will be alright while she is in charge.

Mrs. Lambert Benoit and Miss Benoit of Crookston drove over Friday to visit at the residence of Geo. LaBissoniere. This is the first time Mrs. Benoit has been home since her marriage and her relatives and friends were much pleased to see her.

Henry Jacklin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Jacklin died after an illness of two hours Thursday night last, of convulsions, aged 3 years. Ever since eating the poisonous berries last fall, which neariy resulted in his death, the child has been subject to spells of convulsions.

The Glee Club.

Saturday night was the first public appearance of the Glee Club, and their executions aroused considerable interest. This society is comparatively in its infancy, being able to boast of but a few months' existence, and the work already done shows that rapid progress is being made. Societies of this kind, when successfully managed never fail to result in pleasure both for members and the public, which always, and perhaps not unreasonably, expects to share the fruits of labor. Stephen Sprague instituted the club, and though articles of incorporation were not filed, still from the first it seemed to carry within it the germs of success—planted there, no doubt, by his characteristic presistency and energy. A.D. Wishard was soon unanimously elected leader, and has since filled the position. The members present Saturday night were Mrs. J.D. Marshall (pianist) Mrs H. B. Davis, Mrs. Crowell, Mrs. A.D. Wishard, Misses Musetta and Lydia Fletcher, sopranos; Mrs. Ovide Emard and Miss Fairweather altos; Messrs. John Rodgers, S.J.Sprague and Ovide Emard, tenores; Messrs. H. A. McClatchie, A. D.Wishard, and F. Zeh, bassos. It is said the Glee Club will soon give and entertainment. They will not doubt meet with a crowded house.

A Satisfied Man.

Did you ever see him? It seems as if the search for him would be more hopeless than Diogenes' quest. One man is saving money to build a house; Another is trying to sell his for less than it cost This young man is spending all the money he can earn in theatre tickets, boquets, and livery hire, to persuade a girl to marry him: that middle-aged man is paying lawyers big money to get a divorce. The Eastern man wants to go West; the hungry and crop-less Western farmer wishes that he could go back to the old home in the East. Farmers wish they had a soft snap keeping store; the merchant with notes coming due in the bank wishes he could have as easy a time as "that old Granger." The children are in a hurry to be "grown up folks." The old folks would like to be young again. However, the above does not show that all are dissatisfied. The man who buy his railroad tickets over "The Burlington." secures a berth in their elegant sleepers, and awakes to breakfast in their peerless dining cars—in him you have "A Satisfied Man." For tickets over this popular line, or any information, apply to the nearest ticket agent of "The Burlington" or connecting lines, or write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C B. & N. R. A History of Our Flag.

BY MARTHA K. RIECHEL.

To a reflective mind the sight of a nation's flag suggests the nation itself; its history, its people and its civilization. The flag of every important country carries its meaning, calls up memories and inspires some sort of emotion in the heart of the citizen who beholds it floating in the breeze. It is in some vital manner interwoven with the social and political life of the people; every color and device has its origin somewhere in the gradual development of political ideas. The liberty loving Frenchman understands the meaning of the tricolor; Resurrected Italy is seen in the simple crown and shield of the new ensign; and the subject of Scandinavia comprehends the significance of the union so ingeniously represented in the upper corner of his nation's flag. The flag of "Old England" is more than the cloth merely; there rises before the mind's eye the proud aspect of that monarchy which more than any other on the globe has advanced its banner for liberty, law, and national prosperity.

But we Americans have a flag that excels all others in simple beauty and eloquent meaning; and whenever we behold it streaming aboad we see daybreak floating before our eyes, for it is the very light of liberty.

Our flag in its unique design has an origin that furnishes a new illustration of the fact that we derive many of our most valuable possessions from the "old home" across the sea. At a church in Brighton, near Althrop, there is an old memorial brass plate of the Washingtons bearing the arms of the family—the stars and stripes. There are other brasses on the tombs of different members of the family as far back as 1560, all bearing the same design—stars and stripes.

When John Washington, who was great grandfather of our "George" emigrated to America, the family shield and crest was not forgotten. In the course of time the great Washington of Virginia came to wear the emblem in many ways about his person. There were two watch-seals, and a book-mark, and the design, too, was blazed on the panels of his carriage.

No item was omitted—the red bars, the five pointed stars and the raven issuant out of the ducal coronet, were all there. But one curious fact is, that what we call stars were not originally intended as such, but were simply meant to represent the rowels of spurs.

After the Declaration of Independence had been adopted it was thought that the United States, as an independent nation, ought to have a flag of its own; and what could be more natural than that the family coat-of-arms of George Washington should be adopted as the national emblem by the country he had stood ready to serve. At the beginning of the war, however, a variety of flags were used. Under the old elm at Cambridge a new standard was unfurled before the army of the commander-in-chief. It consisted of thirteen stars of red and white, and a red and white cross which then marked the British flag.

On June 17, 1777, congress voted that the flag of the United States be thirteen stripes of red and white, and that the union be thirteen stars in a blue field. There were seven stripes of red and six of white so that a red stripe would come at both the top and bottom, and a blue union sprinkled with as many stars as there are states. There has never been any rule stating how the stars, of which there should be now forty-four, shall be placed, so in making a flag they may be arranged as one pleases.

In the flags used by the army they are generally made into large star. The first flag was made of a soldier's white shirt, a blue army overcoat and a red flannel skirt. The first person to hoist the flag over an American sloop of war was Captain Paul Jones. It is said the flag was made and given to him by the patriotic ladies in Philadelphia, and that he procured a small boat and sailed up and down the Schuylkill river to show the people what their nation's ensign was to be. Since then no other flag on the globe has had such an errand or gone forth upon the sea, carrying everywhere, the world around, such hope for the captive and such glorious tidings! The stars upon its blue union have been to suffering human hearts like the morning stars of God, and its stripes like beams of morning light. Wherever it has gone men have seen in its sacred emblazonry no rampant lion or fierce eagle, but only light, and every fold significant of liberty. The history of our flag is the history of a nation triumphant over foes at home and abroad.

It cheered our discouraged army in its march across New Jersey, and streamed in light at Valley Forge and Morristown Its stars gleamed in the cold morning at Trenton and a new day dawned on the despondency of a nation.

Under its folds marched the brave of New England, and before it Burgoine laid down his arms. It rose victorious over many a Southern battle-field, and at last after many years of weary war, Washington led it at Yorktown when our struggles ended in victory. Since then it has floated at Lake Erie and New Orleans and led in triumph on the plains of Mexico.

When internecine strife threatened to divide our growing galaxy of stars it floated supreme on many a bloody battle field Barbara Fritchie waved it in the face of an advancing foe, and no rebel could raise a hand against its sacred colors.

It saw Vicksburg and Gettysburg and led the hosts of freedom at Atlanta and Appomatox. To-day our banner has a new meaning; it represents a nation reunited and insoluble, and speaks the words "Liberty and Union one and inseparable." Let us, then, twine each thread of the glorious tissue of our country's flag about our heart strings, and come weal or woe, in life or in death, now and for ever, stand by the Stars and Stripes! They have floated over our cradles; let it be our prayer and our struggle that they shall float over our graves.

"Flag of the free heart's hope and home:
By angel hands to valor given,
Thy stars have lit the welkin dome,
And all thy hues were born in heaven,
Forever float that standard sheet!
Where breathes the foe, but falls before us,
With freedom's soil beneath our feet,
And freedom's banner streaming o'er us!"

The Atlanta Constition.

The growth of the WEEKLY CONSTITUTION has been phenomenal. Its history accurately written, would read like a romance. Six years ago it had less than 10,000 subscribers. To-day it has over 153,000 regular paid up subscribers. It is decidedly a paper for the people. The fact that its circulation has increased so rapidly shows in what estimation it is held by the public.

It is Democratic to the core and uses its best influence in maintaining that doctrine. As a newspaper we do not think there is one on the American continent that gives fuller and better reports of what is occurring in not only the South, but throughout the United States and the world. It has twelve to sixteen pages chock full of the best reading matter.

Mr. Joel Chandler Harris writes regularly for it.

Mr. Wallace P. Reed, the South's great story writer, contributes an articles each issue.

Bill Arp's weekly letter affords amusement for thousands.

Plunkett's letters are entertaining and instructive. One letter alone is worth the price of the paper.

F. L. Stanton and Montgomery M. Folsom are its poet editors. Their genius will gladden the hearts of all who read its pages.

Mrs. Dr. William King still has charge of the Woman's Kingdom and Children's Department.

In addition to these regular salaried editors, the CONSTITUTION has many special contributors, to which they pay large sums of money. The Weekly this year will be made of special interest to all, and every home in the country should have it upon their center table. It is a clean, bright, newsy journal. Its subscription is only $1.00 per year. Send your name for a sample copy. Address,

Sea Fishing Off the Cape.

If you wish to make the best of your time, and the breeze is not too strong, you can let go drift lines from the stern on the chance of Cape mackerel, a finer specimen than that caught off the Devonshire coast—fat and smooth and about eighteen inches long. The bait used is very often a bit of dried shark's skin, or, when you have caught a fish, a bit of mackerel itself sliced off above the tail. If you get among a good shoal the tugs on the lines are constant.

But the chief fish of commerce in the Cape is the "snoek" (Thyrsites atun), a long, hawklike looking fish, with sharp dorsal fins. It is these that the fishermen are chiefly occupied in catching. Their employers give them 1½d. for each fish, and those that are not sold in Cape Colony are split and salted and dried for exportation, chiefly to Mauritius. A single fisherman can often earn 25 shillings to 30 shillings a day at snoek fishing. These snoek have curious habits of their own, as they will disappear altogether during the months of June, July and August. During these—the winter months—they probably go to their spawning grounds off the banks. The best time for catching them is in May, and in that month there are generally vessels bound for Mauritius and the east loading up with the dried fish, which are stacked in sheds close by.—Blackwood's Magazine.

The Bacteriological institute, of Vienna, has been conducting experiments on dirt taken from finger nails, and seventy-eight examinations have been made. The process was to put the dirt in "cultivating mixtures," such as are used for supplying germs with food on which to develop. The crop that grew from the germs in the dirt was a varied one, and included thirty-six kinds of micrococci, eighteen of bacilli and many others.

A Deaf and Dumb Rooster.

A gentleman living on the outskirts of Buffalo, near Black Rock, owns a curiosity the like of which Barnum never dreamed of. It is a deaf and dumb rooster—a full grown, brilliantly plumed, brown Leghorn chanticleer—that has lost his voice, can neither crow nor cluck, nor make any other audible sound with his vocal apparatus, does not wake up the neighborhood at 5 o'clock in the morning with an everlasting cock-a-doodle-doo; does not give an alarm of hawks every time a black cloud crosses the sun, but is still as much the lord of the chicken park as ever.

He has not always been thus. Up to the time he was eight months old he was as noisy as any young rooster need be. Then he got his head caught in a barbed wire fence in such away as to mangle his neck and probably tear out the vocal chords. Losing the power to make sounds he evidently forgot how to hear them. At least now, at the age of 3 years, he gives no evidence of hearing. But he makes his eyes answer for ears and voice, too. If any one wanted proof that he was really deaf and dumb those eyes would be convincing.

There is nothing he does not see. When the first glow of sunrise appears he begins the duties of the day by rousing all the rest of the fowls in the hennery in his original way. He walks around to each one and kicks it off its perch. There is no resisting such an invitation to get up. It is much more effective than crowing. When he gets a challenge to fight he does not stop to announce what he can do. He goes and does it. And his battles are all victories.

The most remarkable thing about this intelligent bird, however, is the fact that, though deaf, he can distinguish between an admonition to "shoo" and a request to come to dinner. How he does it is a mystery, but it is believed that he tells by the motion of the lips and general attitude of the person who addresses him.

A course of instruction in a deaf and dumb institute is all the rooster needs to learn to talk with his spurs.—Buffalo Express.

Thoroughbred Horses in Battle.

"When I went to the war in 1861," said Senator Wade Hampton, "I took with me three thoroughbred stallions that were worth a prince's ransom. One was as black as night, one was a dark chestnut, and the other was a chestnut sorrel. You are perhaps aware that my father was not only a noted importer of running horses, but a famous breeder of the thoroughbred as well.

"I rode the black stallion at the first Bull Run battle, where I commanded the Hampton legion, comprised of infantry, cavalry and artillery. At the famous cavalry fight at Brandy station with Pleasonton in 1863 I rode the chestnut. He was a hard horse to control in a charge, and he nearly carried me into the enemy's lines on that day twice. I rode the chestnut sorrel at the great cavalry fight in the rear of Mead's army on the third day at Gettysburg, and came near meeting the same fate as that I escaped from at Brandy station a few weeks previous.

"My experience with thoroughbreds is in time of war that they are safer horses to get away from the enemy with than when you are going toward him, especially when on a gallop. But when it comes to endurance one thoroughbred will kill three cold blooded horses in a campaign. They will go further with less food, go faster, and show more courage in the face of danger. I have ridden the stallions I mention into federal batteries, and they never once flinched. All of them were wounded three or four times, but they pulled through."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Everybody knows the history of the great auk's extermination. A single shell of one of its eggs without the contents was sold at auction for $1,500. And yet this bird was found on Funk island, off the Newfoundland coast, sixty years ago in numbers that were simply countless But the people from the mainland used to go over to the island in summer and kill them by myriads to eat and for their feathers. They were very appetizing roasted, and were so fat that they served for fuel also, so that half a dozen great auks did to cook a meal of their brethren for dinner

The result of this was that forty years back the last of these interesting fowls perished, and there is no longer one of them in existence. The Smithsonian has practically a corner on their bones. A while ago the institution sent a distinguished osteologist, Professor Lucas, to Funk island for the purpose, and he brought back nearly a barrelful of such remains. If you want a skeleton now you will have to send to Washington for it, and it will cost you about $600.—Rene Bache's Letter.

Humor in a Beanery.

In one of those all night restaurants where the succulent fruit of the beanstalk is deftly served by muscular Ganymedes to a public with an equal muscular digestion humor of a grim, remorseless order occasionally asserts itself. It was the hour when the brawny cup bearers were busily engaged in bringing out the relays of heavy crockery to meet the rush of the midnight attack, with broad triangles of "hickory" pie or the round ring shot crullers. Above the roar of battle there suddenly rang out the clarion tones of a muscular servitor as he glanced about for a stray spoon. Seeing none at hand he turned to the steaming sanctuary at the rear, where the esculatory gods were at work, and in thunderous tones broke forth with, "Hey, Jimmie, bring out der silverware!"—New York Times.

A Snake from the Clouds.

A snake story which has the novelty of being true comes from Lackawaxen, Pa. Courtney Kenneally devotes considerable time to the gun and rod, being proficient in the use of both.

A few days ago Kenneally saw a huge hen hawk flying over the house, and taking quick aim sent a charge of duck shot into the bird. It fell almost at his feet, and his astonishment was great at finding in its talons a rattlesnake measuring 3 feet 8 inches. The snake was alive, but Kenneally quickly dispatched it, and kept the wings of the bird and the skin of the "rattler" as "trophies of the chase."—New York Herald.

IT would be difficult to say whose cause the late James Redpath championed the more vigorously, that of the negro in this country or that of the poor people in Ireland. Both have lost a very stanch and true friend by his death.

As the celebrated actress, Sarah Bernhardt, has taken a fancy to guinea pigs on account of Dr Gibier's inoculation experiments, it is said that the price for those interesting little animals will advance to two or three guineas.

AN old lady in Boston over eighty years of age is supporting herself by making articles of underwear at four cents apiece, including buttonholes, and as she can make only one dozen a week, can earn less than a half-dollar a week.

MISS NELLIE GOULD, daughter of King Jay, has announced her determination never to marry. This will be sad news to many a poverty stricken duke who has had hopes that he might some day confer his title and his appetite upon America's royal family.

THE action of the New York police in bringing a sweet-voiced Irish girl before the lunacy commission deserves censure. The reason they did it was that when questioned as to her identity, she replied, say the police: "I am Patti." What she did say was probably, "I'm a Paddy."

Now it turns out that all the blame for the recent mine horror in Pennsylvania rests upon the shoulders of a drunken fire-boss who was too maudlin to look after his duties. Men in whose hands are intrusted the lives of others can not be allowed to get drunk, and fire-bosses will have to be added to railroad engineers on the tee-total list.

WORTH, the Paris dressmaker, speaking of colors, says: "I always go to nature for my combinations; there is no surer guide. Not in the flowers so much, they are apt to be gaudy, as a rule, although I have made some beautiful things with their help; but in stones, lichens, the barks of trees, the combinations of tints are wonderful and may be taken as unfailing guides."

CHICAGO need not feel discouraged because Rudyard Kipling did not find things here to his liking. Even if he had been most favorably impressed with the city he would hardly say so. It would not be in keeping with his assumed character of a shrewd and observing critic, nor would it permit him to indulge in that peculiar grotesquerie which is the chief mark of distintion between him and the ordinary, herd of scribblers.

IN discussing the project of M. M. Besancon and Hermite to explore the North Pole with the assistance of a balloon, no mention is made of possible uses of the pole in aerial navigation when they reach it. They could tie their balloon to it and shin down to look over the country, and when they got ready to come back they would simply untie the string and let the air ship flicker.

IN Cornell University there is an organization of students known as the "Mock Congress." It has a speaker and committees like the House of Representatives. Its members represent the States and the opposing political parties. Bills are introduced and acted upon. It elects a functionary known as "President of the United States," who appoints his Cabinet and is empowered to send in messages.

GENTLEMEN who because of a temporary financial depression find it inexpedient to buy overcoats during this weather, and who accordingly enjoy the full force of the winter breezes, will of course not grind a growl between their teeth when they think of Mr. Gould's advice: "If you can't afford two coats, wear one." It is however, unwise and imprudent in a degree to repeat Mr. Gould's merry epigram to gentlemen thus situated. They may not discern the humor of it and will possibly find it disagreeably personal.

THE LAST OF EARTH.

Gen. Sherman Reaches His Last Camping Ground in the City of the Dead.

An Imposing Military Pageant, in Accord With the Last Request of the General.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 21.—To-day bade an impressive farewell to the soldier whose military genius was excelled by none and equalled by few.

No higher tribute of reverence, love and regret could be paid any hero in any clime.

The hearts of the people were saddened, and with one accord all manner of men abandoned their earthly pursuits and assembled along the line of the funeral procession to do homage to the honored dead.

The day was all that could be desired, so far as sunshine and a cool, clear air were concerned. Discomfort prevailed only under foot. A recent snow, followed by several days of rain, left the streets where there were no granite pavements in a thoroughly muddy condition. And to this rain storm is due largely the meager mourning decorations. But the bad condition of the streets and roads could not prevent the people of the city and of the country for miles around from doing honor to the remains of the great commander.

At the union depot and in all the streets in the immediate vicinity the crowds of people were just as great as farther up town.

THE FUNERAL TRAIN

arrived at 8:30. As it crossed the bridge a salute from a near-by battery announced its approach. Emerging from the tunnel, it was compelled to proceed slowly while the police cleared the tracks of people. The train entered the station on the track nearest Poplar street, and stopped with the funeral car opposite the carriage entrance on Poplar street. On the platform was Gov. Francis, with his staff and the members of the general reception committee, headed by Messrs. James C. Yeamen and Henry Hitchcock.

As soon as the train stopped Gov. Francis boarded the car Lancaster and paid his respects to Generals Schofield and Howard and the other military officers accompanying the funeral party.

Meantime outside the military companies were moving into position. The caisson on which the body was to be borne from the train to its resting place was on Poplar street, at the entrance of the carriageway. It was from Battery E, First artillery, and was under Lieut. Wilson, with Sergeant Cannon in immediate charge. It was drawn by six bay horses. The riders were the men who worked the Hotchkiss gun at the battle of Wounded Knee creek during the recent Indian war. They belonged to the Seventh cavalry, known as the "Fighting Seventh." Their names are: Privates Mallory, Ryan and Krauss.

THE BODY BEARERS

were eight sergeants, four of them—Sergeants Connelly, Lange, Hennessey and Ziegher—were from the Seventh cavalry. The other four sergeants—Hunneman, Lavay, French and Donough—were from Battery E, First artillery. In front of the caisson on Poplar street was the Twelfth infantry, from Fort Leavenworth, under command of Col. Townsend, drawn up in line facing the depot. On the opposite side of the street were the members of Ransom post, who were to act as guard of honor.

The horse that was to be led behind the caisson, equipped with the dead general's saddle, bridle, boots and spurs, stood next the caisson. He was a black horse belonging to Troop D, Seventh cavalry, of Fort Riley, Kan., and was brought from there especially for this purpose.

At 10:15 an open barouche drove into the carriageway. All the floral pieces brought from New York and those received during the trip were put in this coach to be conveyed to the cemetery.

Gen. Merritt and staff arrived at the depot at 10:30. At this hour the adjacent streets and the Twelfth street bridge were fairly black with people. The police had all they could do to keep room enough for the procession to move in. Immediately after the arrival of Gen. Merritt and staff preparations were made where it had rested during its long journey. The eight body bearers took up positions at the car door, four on each side. Directly behind them, six on a side, stood the honorary pall bearers. They were:

TO REMOVE THE BODY FROM THE CAR

Citizens—Judge Samuel Treat, Col. George Leighton, Col. Charles Parsons, Byron Sherman, Esq., Dan R. Harrison, Esq., Isaac Sturgeon, Esq., Thomas E. Tutt, Esq., R. P. Tansey.

Ranged in line on each side of the carriage entrance were the military and public officials who accompanied the remans from New York, Gen. Merritt's staff and Gov. Francis and staff. Three comrades of Ransom post, G. A. R., entered the funeral car and assisted the sergeants in charge to lift the casket out through the door to the shoulders of the waiting body bearers. As the end of the flag-covered oaken box was passed through the door every head was uncovered, and silence reigned supreme.

Slowly and carefully the burden was taken from the car and placed on the shoulders of the stalwart sergeants. As they started with slow steps out through the carriage way to the waiting caisson, the Twelfth infantry presented arms, flags were dipped and the regimental band played Pleyl's well known hymn.

MANY HEARTS WERE TOUCHED

by the sight and veterans and comrades of the dead general could be seen crying on all sides. Generals Howard and Slocum were so overcome they could not speak for several minutes.

The casket was placed lengthwise on the caisson and strapped in place. On it were placed the hat and sword of him who lay inside. The delivery of the remains to the St. Louis body guard relieved the six sergeants who had accompanied it from New York of all further care.

When the fastening of the casket was finished Col. Townsend gave the order to march, and the Twelfth infantry wheeled into line and marched up Eleventh street, to the corner of Clark street. Here they halted. The open carriage with the floral offerings followed close behind. Then the order was given by Lieut. Wilson, and the caisson with its sacred burden moved slowly up Eleventh street to a place next the carriage containing the flowers. On each side of the caisson walked the four military body bearers.

THE OLD THIRTEENTH.

Following came the survivors of the Thirteenth regiment, Col. Sherman's command, which acted as special body guard. The complete list is as follows:

W. H. Keeling, Falls City, Neb.; Patrick Healy, Rock Island, Ill.; L. H. Condit, Illinois; Richard H. Willis, St. Louis; Henry Hase, Milwaukee; H. T. Sterling, Chicago; Francis A. Karsch, inspector of customs, St. Paul; State Treasurer Bobleter, St. Paul; W. H. Davenport, Chicago; Rev. Daniel Ryan, Irvington, Ind.; Henry W. Harris, St. Louis; Harry J. Sunner, Cobden, Ill.

Directly the caisson started the 400 members of Ransom post, G. A. R., who had made up the guard of honor, marched up in two columns, one going to one side and the other on the opposite side of the caisson. The saddle horse bearing the riding equipments of Gen. Sherman was led just behind the caisson and between the columns of Ransom post.

Meanwhile the immediate members and relatives of the Sherman family had filled coaches, and were now driven into a place in the process next to the guard of honor. Behind the family were carriages in which were the people who had come from New York to attend the funeral.

In the first coach were Secretary and Mrs. Noble, Judge Hough and Maj. Randolph; in the second Secretary Rusk, Assistant Secretary Grant, Carlos A. Greeley and Capt. Kingsberry; the third carriage contained ex-President Hayes, Gen. Schofield, Gov. Stannard and Lieut. Anderson; the fourth Generals Howard, Slocum and Broadhead and Lieut. Howard; the fifth Gen. Alger, James E. Yeatman, Col. McCroory and Gen. James D. Moore.

THE LAST MARCH.

When these carriages had taken their proper places in the line Gen. Merritt with his staff galloped to the head of the procession which was at the corner of Clark and Eleventh streets. At just 10 minutes after 11 o'clock, all division commanders having reported everything ready, Gen. Merritt gave the order to march.

The funeral column was made up of six divisions, composed of the regular military escort provided by army regulations; Grand Army posts, Loyal Legion, Sons of Veterans, civic societies, state militia of Missouri and Ohio, legislatures of Missouri, Illinois and Kansas; governors of states and staffs: unorganized bodies and citizens in carriages and on foot. The route of the funeral procession from the depot to Calvary cemetery, a distance of nearly eight miles, was through some of the principal streets and avenues of St. Louis. After starting from the junction of Eleventh street and Clark avenue, the cortege moved up Eleventh to Market street, though Market to Twelfth street and through Twelfth to Pine street. The route was through the business portion of the city. The stores were closed, but the windows of nearly all the big blocks were filled with spectators, and the sidewalks were filled with a surging mass of humanity.

MANY AFFECTING SCENES

were witnessed as the division with the caisson moved along the line of march. At one point on Grand avenue, an old colored man with a Grand Army badge on his breast, went down on his knees by the side of the road as the cassion approached, and with tears streaming down his furrowed cheeks, raised his hands over his head in the attitude of prayer.

Hundreds of people showered bunches of roses, violets and other flowers upon the gun carriage as it passed. At the corner of Washington and Grand avenues a number of Grand Army veterans reverentially uncovered their heads and said "good bye" as the casket passed out of sight.

Many of the old Thirteenth survivors who surrounded the cassion were in tears from the beginning of the journey until the gates of the cemetery were reached.

On Pine street it was estimated that there gathered over 100,000 people. This is one of the principal streets of St. Louis, and is lined on both sides with handsome residences, many of these houses being decorated with mourning emblems and displaying flags at half-staff from the windows. The broad asphalt pavement of the street was swept clean.

Marching through Pine street over this pavement the magnificence of the military display was best seen. Truly it was just what the old hero wanted—a military funeral.

ARRIVING AT THE CEMETERY

Father Thomas E. Sherman retired to the shelter of an adjacent tomb within the circle of blue-coated soldiers, who held the crowd in check. He hurriedly donned his priestly vestments, and, prayer book in hand, returned to the head of the grave, where the other members of the family were gathered in a semi-circle. When the bearers placed the casket on the supports above the grave the bugles blew a solemn call, and the band played the first few bars of Pleyel's hymn. As the sound died away Father Sherman removed his hat, and, opening his prayerbook, began the services of the Catholic church over the remains of his distinguished father. The relatives and friends of the family gathered in a close group about the grave, and stood with heads uncovered and reverently bowed as Father Sherman read in Latin and English the simple, impressive prayers for the repose of the soul of the dead.

When the services began the battalion of infantry stood at present arms, facing the little group about the grave. In the midst of the services a hoarse, low voice gave the command, "Carry arms," "order arms," in quick succession, and the sharp click of the musket barrel and the ring of the butt as it struck the graveled road, gave a singularly impressive accentuation to the words of the young priest.

In the midst of the service the supports were removed from the casket, and it was lowered into the big, brass-bound oaken box placed just aboue the grave to receive it. The service was the

for the burial of laymen. Father Sherman was assisted by two acolytes. He concluded with "may his soul depart in peace, amen. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Amen."

As the last words were being uttered, the bearers removed from the cover of the casket the beautiful flag with which it was draped when it left New York and covered the box in which it rested. Six of the undertaker's assistants seized the straps, removed the supports from the oaken case and quickly lowered it into the open grave. Then two of them sprang to the top of the pile of earth which stood at the side of the grave, while the others attacked it from the bottom, and, with long-handled spades, they quickly filled in the earth above the coffin. Father Sherman had retired to remove his vestments. Returning, he placed his arm about his older sister, who was much overcome by her grief, and whispered words of comfort and encouragement to her. The members of the family stood by the grave until it had been filled completely. Then ex-President Hayes and Gen. Schofield came over to Mr. Fitch and young Mr. Sherman and, at their suggestion, the family retired to the carriages, which stood in waiting for them. "Clear that space beyond the grave," cried Gen. Forsyth. The crowd cleared a space just beyond the grave and directly opposite the line of infantry. Quick and sharp came the commands, as quickly obeyed: "Load; fire by battalion; ready, aim, fire." There was a rattle of musketry and, as a cloud of smoke rolled over again the command came: "Load." Another volley was fired, and another. Sharp on the echoes of the last came the heavy explosion of cannon at a distance. A triple cannon salute was fired. The bugler mounted the little mound, and, standing at the foot of the grave, blew a mournful, solemn call: "Taps," "Lights out."

As the final note died slowly away the mourners turned their faces from the grave. The crowd began quickly to disperse. A guard of infantry—six men—was detailed to watch the grave, and then orders were given to the troops to take up the march to quarters.

The Bagpipe.

The bagpipe is almost universal throughout Asia, though at present not so much in use as it seems to have been in former ages. It is used among the Chinese musicians, and is met with in Persia, where it appears to have been more general in former ages than at present. Where is also a Hindoo bagpipe, and in Egypt it was used to some extent, but is now rarely met with. In Italy it is common. It is said that the Italian peasant believes that it is the best beloved music of the Virgin Mary; also that it is the instrument upon which the shepherds expressed their joy when they visited the Saviour. When the Italian peasant visits Rome on the anniversary of the birth of our Saviour he always carries his bagpipes with him. The Romans are said to have been acquainted with this instrument, and most likely the Greeks also. In Scotland it is the national instrument, but even there its use is dying out.—From The St. Louis Democrat.

A TRIPLE TRAGEDY.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 25.—A horrible triple tragedy occurred here to-day. Two men were killed and several wounded in a fusillade of pistol shots. The affair was the outgrowth of a newspaper feud, which has been raging for several weeks between the publishers of the Sunday World and Sunday Capitol of this city. Col. W. J. Elliott, editor of the Capitol, shot and instantly killed Albert Osborne, city editor of the World. W. L. Hughes, an old gentleman, who was standing near by, was shot and killed by a stray bullet from Elliott's pistol.

The tragedy, as before stated, was the result of a newspaper war. Two weeks ago the World made charges against Elliott's family, insinuating that a female relative of Elliott was unchaste. Elliott retaliated in the following Sunday with a four-column article, charging F. W. Levering, editor of the World, with being the joint proprietor of an assignation house, being associated with a woman named Lou Burtin, in the disreputable enterprise. Levering is an assistant of the state oil inspector and prominent in politics. The charge, therefore, created a profound sensation. The charges against Levering also implicated Claude Meeker. Levering and his city editor, Osborne, retaliated yesterday with a sensational article, charging Elliott with nearly all the crimes in the calendar.

Elliott, with his brother Patrick, and Osborne, met this afternoon on High street, near the American hotel. Patrick Elliott opened fire upon Osborne, and Osborne returned the fire. A running battle ensued, in which W. J. Elliott joined, all three men as rapidly as possible. One of the shots from W. J. Elliott's gun grazed Osborne's arm, and he turned and fired at the former. The shot missed its mark, and Osborne fled into Malcolm McDonald's hat store. As he did so he turned and fired at W. J. Elliott. The latter fired his weapon almost simultaneously and the shot took effect in Osborne's chin. It went clear through his mouth, upward and backward through the brain, and came out at the base of the skull.

Elliott had followed Osborne into the store, and, as he fired the last shot, grappled with him. In the scuffle which followed both their guns were discharged, and Osborne fell to the floor dead, although the last shot, it is said, did not take effect in either man, the ball which caused Osborne's death having entered his face as he came in through the doorway.

Elliott retreated out the front door and disappeared in the crowd with the revolver in his hand. W. L. Hughes, a highly respected citizen and formerly steward of the imbecile asylum, was struck during the running battle. The ball entered Hughes' head immediately over the left eye, and he immediately dropped upon the iron grating in front of Ambros' restaurant, expiring instantly. Patrick Elliott was shot in the back and arm, and has a frightful wound on top of the head.

The bodies of Osborne and Hughes were removed to the coroner's office. Among the wounded spectators were John H. Reese, government statistical agent, shot through the left leg, not serious; C. W. Sullivan, bookkeeper, shot through the arm; R. E. Gardner, Danville, Ohio, shot through the ankle; G. W. Reifschneider, struck in bosom by spent ball.

W. J. Elliott was at one time state supervisor of printing, and has taken an active part in politics. He is a personal friend of Charles Stewart Parnell, the deposed Irish leader. Both of the Elliotts are locked up at the station house.

In the senate to-day a bill was introduced which was suggested by the tragedy. It provides that any editor, proprietor, owner or correspondent who publishes, or permits to be published, any attack upon the private character of any citizen with intent to injure his credit or standing in public, or to publicly charge any citizen with unlawful practices in private affairs shall be deemed guilty of a felony, and fined not less than $1,000 and confined in the penitentiary not less than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court.

TARBELL'S TRICKS.

More Serious Charges Made Against the Former St. Paul Man.

FAIRHAVEN, Wash., Special Telegram, Feb., 25.—In an interview at Vancouver, B. C., P. E. Tarbell denies attempting to fire the building in which his printing office was located, and charges the Fairhaven Land company with persecuting him. Officials of the latter company emphatically deny that they have ever threatened or antagonized him in any way.

Some of the officers and stockholders state that Tarbell was employed by the Herald company about five weeks, but was discharged. Since he quit their employ they claim it has been discovered that he has embezzled upward of $1,000 which they have already detected and attempted to secure by an attachment suit. Some of the money was obtained, they further allege, through forgery committed eight days after his discharge. The evidence of this is in drafts and vouchers now in the secretary's possession.

Tarbell also says his own attorney, Mr. Logan, advised him to go to Canada. Logan denies having recommended such a proceeding, though he admits that it was not a bad thing to do under the circumstances.

Mrs. Tarbell, who is sorely grieved over the affair, is urging her husband's return. To-day she received a letter from him, saying he would come back and stand trial if informed that a warrant had been issued. His proposition is generally regarded as capping the climax for audacity.

Coming to America.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—Mr. Abraham, M. P., will go to America with the Irish mission. Messrs. Flynn and Kenny will sail for America next week. Mr. Cox will embark for Australia on Friday next, and Mr. Sullivan will join him as soon as possible, traveling part of the way overland.

Celebrated Washington's Birthday.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Washington's birthday was celebrated here to-day by a parade of civic and military organizations which passed in review before President Harrison. Several of the organizations after the parade were addressed by District Commissioner Douglass, who made a speech suitable to the occasion. The Oldest Inhabitant's association observed the day in their time-honored way by listening to the reading of Washington's farewell address. All the executive departments were closed, and after 12 o'clock business was generally suspended.

THE WORST OVER.

Parkersburg Being Uncovered by the Receding Waters of the Ohio.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Feb. 25.—The worst of the flood is now over. The Ohio has receded from the business and factory sections of the city.

In the Ohio valley not less than fifteen thousand men have been thrown out of employment. This will entail great suffering. A close observer who has passed through the inundated district estimates the loss at $4,000,000.

Only two cases of drowning are reported—William Powell, who lived near Benwood, and Harry Westgate, whose home was at Torch, on the Ohio side of the river.

News from Pocahontas county says that many people in the upper part of that county are in a starving condition.

NEARING THE CREST.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 24.—The Ohio at Cincinnati at 10 o'clock to-night was 56 feet 3½ inches. The flood has begun to falter, and before morning it is thought the water will be stationary, and by to-morrow midnight will begin to fall, provided there is no rain in the meantime. If fair weather continues all inconvenience and delay to business will be over by Friday noon.

TERRIBLE FLOODS IN ARIZONA.

GILA BEND, Ariz., Feb. 24.—The second suspension of traffic on the Southern Pacific railroad in Arizona occurred Saturday. Salt river, near Phoenix, rose ten feet in an hour, sweeping away many houses. Thousands of people in the valley of Salt river are houseless. One hundred adobe houses have been washed down in Yuma, and 300 people are homeless. Great distress prevails for want of food, clothing and shelter.

THE WOMAN WORLD.

Representative Women From All Parts of the Country in Session.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The first triennial meeting of the Woman's National Council of the United States was held at Albaugh's opera house to-day.

The body of the theater was crowded with intellectual women, with a fair sprinkling of men, while on the stage were seated the delegates, many of whom were the most conspicuous figures in the woman world.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Mary H. B. Hitt, after which the delegates were introduced by President Frances E. Willard, who then delivered a long and most interesting address, which was freely interrupted by storms of applause.

The general topic of discussion at the evening session was "Women in the Church." The first paper on the special subject of "Woman's Status in the Church To-Day" was read by Rev. Mila Frances Tupper of Grand Rapids, Mich. She said that woman's place in the church was being agitated in some form all over the United States. Woman's ministry is past the theoretic stage, and has become an established and well grounded fact. In this country there are 720 women who have been regularly ordained as ministers of the gospel. There was a great and growing need of women in the ministry.

NINETEEN LOST.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 25.—The loss of lives by the wrecking of the clipper ship Elizabeth off North Head Saturday night is now estimated at nineteen, including Capt. Henry, of the local live-saving service.

Eleven persons, including the wife and children of Capt. Colcord, of the Elizabeth, were saved. The list of survivors so far as known comprises Mrs. Colcord, the captain's wife, their son and daughter, Chief Mate Barclay, James Taken, Wheelman and six seamen.

Capt. Colcord, Second Officer Pendleton, William Redmand and Edward Miles, boatswains, Carpenter Smith, twelve seamen and the Chinese cook were drowned.

The vessel, which was from New York, with a cargo of general merchandise consigned to William S. Dimond & Co. of this city, was owned by Pendleton & Co. of New York and was valued at about $75,000. The cargo was valued at $125,000. There was no insurance on the hull in this city, but the cargo was insured in several insurance companies represented in California and the Atlantic Mutual of New York. The amount of insurance is at present unknown.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

A Plan to Display Pictures of Prominent People at the World's Fair.

CHICAGO, Feb. 25.—There has been submitted to the sub-committee on art of the world's fair a plan for a national portrait gallery. It is proposed to have in it the portraits of all men and women who have attained prominence and distinction in the nation.

The collection would include portraits of all the presidents, all the state governors, the signers of the Declaration of Independence, prominent historians, army and navy officers and inventors. In extent such a collection would be enormous, but it is believed that it could be easily secured, as the various states would feel an interest in getting it up. It is proposed that a separate pavilion be erected, as the collection would require too much room to be included in the art exhibit. The plan is well thought of by such members of the committee as have heard of it.

Director C. L. Hutchinson will bring it before the meeting of the joint sub-committee on art, which meets in New York this week.

SIX SCORE OF VICTIMS.

SPRING HILL MINES, N. S., Feb. 25.—The work of recovering bodies has been carried on throughout the day most successfully. A revision of the list shows the number of dead to be 120. Of these, 54 were married men, 41 single men and 25 boys.

The scene of the explosion is about three-quarters of a mile from the bottom of No. 1 slope. In all the bores in that district the men were killed. Their bodies are being recovered quite rapidly.

There is no sign of the body of Manager Swift. He is thought to have been covered by the fall of one of the levels.

This afternoon a broken hearted Frenchman named Oliver Dupre took from the morgue the body of his son, James, who was killed in No. 1 slope. His other little boy ran out to meet the sorrowful father, slipped on the ice and struck his head with such force that he was instantly killed.

Idaho's Fourth Senator.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 25. W. H. Claggett, the fourth senator from Idaho, has arrived in the city, and is ready to show reasons why he should be seated in the senate. Secretary of State Pinkham to-day filed in the senate his reasons why he could not attach the great seal to Claggett's certificate. He says he has sealed the certificates of three senators during one short session of the legislature, and he thinks that is enough. Fred Dubois hopes for an extra session of the senate so that the contest may be settled at once. He has no doubt as to the decision of the senate, but wants it settled early.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Tuesday Feb. 17.

SENATE.

When the session began Senator Donnelly presented a petition from Douglas county citizens asking for annual sessions o the legislature.

Senators Davis and Stockton presented petitions against the passage of laws increasing the liability of employers to employes.

The first bill upon the calendar was Senator Leavitt's measure proposing an amendment to the constitution authorizing an income tax. Senator Dean made a strong speech against the bill.

After some further debate the bill was passed by a vote of 30 to 14,

Senator Mayo, who left before a vote was reached; and who favored the bill, was paired with Senator Morse, who opposed it.

Senator Crandall's bill appropriating money far the state public school at Owatonna provides for the following sums for the porposes named: Wing to the main building, $15,000; cottage residence, $5,000: electric dynamo, $1,000; water mains, $15,000; fire pump, $1,000; water reservoir, $1,000; water closet, $1,000; hen house, $500; engine for laundry, $200; library, $400; fencing, $200; workshop, $500; cisterns, $500; sidewalks, $500; current expenses for 1892, $7,800; expenses for 1893, $7,800.

HOUSE.

The house expressed its disinclination yesterday morning in a very emphatic manner, to legislate on educational matters with a view to making compulsory regulations in regard to the age of pupils or to the exclusion of any other than English from the public schools. Mr. Stockwell's bill fixing the age at which children shall be compelled to attend public schools, and Mr. Knudson's bill providing that for twelve weeks, six of which shall be consecutive, the English language alone shall be taught in all private and public schools, were both reported back from the committee on education with recommendation that they be indefinitely postponed.

After some discussion a vote on Mr. Stockwell's amendment was taken, and it was lost—68 to 13. Those voting in the affirmative were Messrs. Bjorge, Carleton, Coburn, Darelius, Gilmore, N. P. Nelson, Penney, Price, Sheets, Stockwell, A. Thompson, Tripp and Wahlund. Total, 13. The committee's report was then adopted.

Mr. Knudson's bill was indefinitely postponed without any further discussi on.

On the motion of Mr. Zelch the privileges of the floor were granted to all members of the Grand Army while attending the state encampment.

On the motion of Mr. Keyes the clerk was directed to transmit all bills to the engrossing committee before they were placed upon the calendar.

Wednesday, Feb. 18.

SENATE

The senate session was largely taken up yesterday with a discussion of the reports of the special committee to which was referred the election bills introduced by Senators Dean, McMillan and Leavitt. The majority report recommended the McMillan bill, while Senator Dean presented a minority report, recommending that the bills be all referred to the judiciary committee. The final result was to adopt the minority report, four Alliance Senators voting with the Republicans.

Soon after the session had opened, Senator Stearns announced the death of Gen. Sibley and introduced the following resolutions, which were adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, by the senate, the house concurring:

Whereas, The legislature of the State of Minnesota has learned with profound sorrow of the death of Gen. Henry H. Sibley, which occurred in this city at an early hour this morning; therefore

Resolved, That in the decease of this distinguished soldier, patriot statesman, who was the first governor of this state, and has ever been foremost in the hearts of its citizens, the State of Minnesota has sustained great and irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a joint committee of three on the part of the senate and six on the part of the house be appointed by the presiding officers thereof, respectively, to draft and present suitable joint resolutions upon this melancholy event;

Resolved, That a joint committee of three on the part of the senate and six on the part of the house be likewise appointed to attend the funeral exercises on behalf of the legislature of the state;

Resolved, That from and after the adoption of this resolution and until after the funeral exercises are ended the flag upon the capitol be displayed at half-mast.

Resolved, That out of respect to the memory of our distinguished fellow citizen the legislature do adjourn at 12:30 oclock.

HOUSE.

When the house met yesterday morning the speaker announced that the funeral of Gen. Sherman would take place on Saturday, and the house would adjourn on that day.

Mr. Capser made the announcement of the death of Gen. H. H. Sibley, and made a feeling allusion to "the pioneer statesman-soldier of the North Star State." A set of resolutions on the death of the general were then read and adopted by a rising vote. The text of these resolutions appears in the proceedings of the senate.

Thursday, Feb. 20.

SENATE.

Senator J. D. Smith presented a communication from Judson N. Cross and M. F. Griswold of Minneapolis offering to give the state 100 acres of land near Norcross if the state would erect thereon an experimental station for manufacturing beet sugar.

When the senate reached Senator McMillan's bill providing that all franchises for the use of streets shall be sold to the highest bidder, and that no grant shall be for a longer period than twenty years, Senator Keller asked for unanimous consent to amend, but failed to get it. Then the bill was referred to Senator Keller for amendment, and he reported it back with an amendment exempting his district and all places with less than three thousand inhabitants. The report was rejected by a vote of 17 to 25. The bill was then put upon its passage and was passed by a vote of 34 to 15.

The most of the afternoon session of the senate was taken up with the consideration of general orders, Senator S. D. Peterson in the chair. Senator Dedon's bill to license peddlers was recommended to be referred to the judiciary committee. There was considerable discussion of Senator Hompe's bill providing for the erection of grain warehouses and elevators on railroad rights of way, and for condemnation proceedings in connection therewith. Several amendments were made, the most important of which takes away from elevator companies the sole right to decide whether such condemnation shall be made and a yearly rental paid, one year's rental to be paid in advance. The amendment makes the terms of rental a matter of agreement between railroad and elevator companies. The bill was recommended to pass as amended.

HOUSE.

When the house had settled down to business yesterday morning petitions were received protesting against the passage of the employers' liability bill and favoring the woman's elective franchise bill.

Mr. Ames' bill to prevent corruption at elections is a copy of the New York law regarding the same.

Mr. Smith's bill is to repeal the charter of the St. Croix River Boom company. It is a bill in the interest of the steamboat men, who claim that the St. Croix river is a navigable stream and that the existence of the booms impedes navigation.

The bill introduced by Mr. M. Walsh, H. F. 82, is to submit to a vote of the people an amendment to section 3, article 9, of the constitution relating to the taxation of property, real and personal. The bill proposes to give to municipalities and to counties local option on the adoption of the single tax system. There was considerable debate on the question, Messrs, Turrell, Greer, Tucker and Searle opposing it for the reason that it was the duty of the house of representatives, and the purpose for which they were elected by the people, to decide upon all these questions and not to shirk responsibility by sending the question back to the people for them to decide upon.

Friday, Feb. 21.

SENATE.

The senate held a two hours' session yesterday, adjourning at noon to attend the funeral exercises for Gen. Sibley.

There were several petitions against any legislation increasing the liability of employers. Also one favoring prohibition.

Senator Dedon presented a resolution providing for the appointment of clerks for the committees on public lands and labor, each to receive $5 per day.

When Senator March reported back from the Hennepin county delegation the bill requiring the park board of Minneapolis to get the sanction of the city council before issuing bonds, Senator Bell moved to refer it back to the delegation, saying that the full delegation had not yet considered it. His motion was seconded by Senator Phillips, and it was adopted by a vote of 15 to 10.

S. F. No. 334—Authorizing village of Luverne to issue bonds for waterworks.

S. F. No. 296—Allowing village of St. Hillaire to appropriate money for use of School District No. 101.

S. F. No. 293—Providing for filing resurvey of Minnesota Lake in Faribault county.

HOUSE BILLS PASSED.

H. F. No. 49—Providing for the loaning of money to certain persons for the purchase of seed wheat.

H. F. No. 105—Restraining animals from running at large in township of Home Lake in Morrison county.

H. F. No. 98—Providing for phonographic reporters to be appointed by judges of the district court of Hennepin county.

The senate adjourned until 2 p. m. Monday.

HOUSE.

The house yesterday morning expressed its unanimous concurrence in the joint resolution brought in from the senate regarding the death of Gen. H. H. Sibley, and decided to adjourn at noon until 3 o'clock p. m. on Monday next.

Mr. Chesley presented a petition against the bill relating to extending the powers of mutual insurance companies, with especial reference to a Norman county company. Mr. Lockwood offered a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to visit the Nebraska beet sugar factories, which was laid over on a notice of debate by Mr. Furlong.

Mr. Bonde introduced a bill which is intended to prevent loss to shippers of milk, while the milk is in transit.

Mr. Waeck had a bill which provides for the appointment of a game warden in each county of the state.

Mr. Chesley introduced a bill which gives plaintiffs against railroad companies the power to institute suit against the companies in the district in which the plaintiff lives.

The following bills were passed by the house under suspension of the rules:

H. F. 258—Incorporating the city of Chaska in Carver county.

H. F. 249—authorizing the village of Gaylord to issue $5,000 of bonds to build a village hall.

H. F. 309—to annex the village of Moritzes to Monticello in Wright county.

The house then adjourned to Monday at 3 o'clock.

Saturday Feb. 21.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

Not in session.

Monday, Feb. 23.

SENATE.

The senate met at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the members appeared somewhat refreshed after the vacation, as a motion to adjourn, made immediately after the approval of the journal, was defeated by a vote of 22 to 4.

S. F. No. 354—By Senator Craig—Reapportioning the state into congressional districts.

S. F. No. 355—By Senator Donnelly—Amending General Laws relating to county commissioners and care of poor.

The bill authorizing the city of Mankato to donate to the general government a site for a public building was passed under suspension of the rules.

The senate adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

Senator Craig, chairman of the senate committee on reapportionment, yesterday introduced a bill reapportioning the state into seven congressional districts, in accordance with the bill passed by congress which gives Minnesota seven congressmen instead of five. The bill is not a committee bill, but embraces Senator Craig's personal ideas of what the new apportionment should be. The basis of the bill is the population, according to the census of 1890.

HOUSE.

When the house assembled at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon Mr. Bell drew the attention of Mr. Bjorge, speaker pro tem., to the fact that copies of the journal were not on the desks of members, as the rules provided, and that the rules would have to be suspended. A vote to suspend the rules revealed the fact that there were sixty members in the house, 48 of whom voted aye and 12 no. There not being sufficient votes to suspend the rules the motion was lost, but the house by unanimous consent decided to proceed with business, and the journal was read.

Mr. McAllister moved that the house adjourn until 10 o'clock the following morning, out of respect to the memory of the late, lamented Gen. George Washington. This, the house by a vote of 42 to 8 declined to do, and the reports of committees were read.

A number of new bills were introduced, among them being one by Mr. Gallagher providing for the redistricting of the Twenty-ninth senatorial district in Minneapolis. This district comprises the First and Third wards, the First being a strong Democratic ward and the Third doubtful. At present the two representatives of the district are voted for separately in each ward, and Mr. Gallagher's bill provides that the dividing ward line be obliterated and the two representatives voted for at large in the district.

Another bill, and one of general importance, was House File 495, introduced by Mr. Tripp of Hennepin. This bill makes a uniform method of controlling the pawnbroking business. At present it is left to each city, there being no state law.

Mr. Coates of Benton introduced two bills of deep interest to the owners of livery and feed stables. The first bill regulates the business, and is in the interest of the general public, while the second bill is designed to protect the proprietors from loss by bad debts, etc.

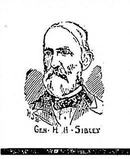
GEN. SIBLEY DEAD.

After Three Days of Unconsciousness, the Ex-Governor Slowly Passes Away.

He Was the First Governor of Minnesota and Was Everywhere Honored.

At 4:30 o'clock yesterday morning the solemn silence in the room where Gen. Sibley had lain for twenty weeks was broken by a far-away, muffled note from the Swiss clock on the mantel down stairs, and at the same instant the heart of the famous man throbbed for the last time, and the foremost man in Minnesota sank into eternal rest.

Last Friday it became apparent that the end for him was very near. From that time he gradually sank away until on Sunday morning he fell into a stupor from which he never rallied. It was a long and peaceful descent to the valley of the shadow.



There were about his bedside all the immediate members of his family; also his physician and son-in-law, Dr. Abbott; Gen. R. W. Johnson, his brother-in-law; and many other relatives. For nearly four days the loving watch of family and friends was unbroken.

If Gen. Sibley, before he fell into his last stupor, was aware that death was so near, he never indicated the fact to his family or any one about him. Friday he talked over some business matters with his son, Mr. C. F. Sibley. His mind seemed perfectly clear, but in no way did he indicate a realization of the situation. However, the general was by nature inclined to be reticent upon such matters, and hence it is believed that in reality he was well aware of his condition. It was but a short time after the conversation with his son that he became unconscious.

All day yesterday St. Paul friends and acquaintances from outside the city called at the family residence on Woodward avenue to extend sympathies, and many telegrams of condolence were received from all over the country. Among the telegrams was the following:

NEW YORK, Feb. 18.—Crawford Livingstone: Please convey to Gov. Sibley's family the assurance of my profound sympathy and grateful remembrance of personal kindness.
HENRY VILLARD.

THE FUNERAL.

The funeral will be held from St. Paul's church at 2:30 o'clock Friday afternoon. The arrangements will be conducted under the direction of William Dampier.

Rev. John Wright, rector of that church, and Bishop M. N. Gilbert will conduct the religious ceremonies.

The actual pall bearers will be Judge Greenleaf Clark, Harvey Officer, J. I. Beaumont, J. D. Ludden, Gen. G. W. Bishop, Gen. George L. Becker, Prof. Folwell of Minneapolis and T. B. Campbell.

The honorary pall bearers will be ex-Gov. Alex Ramsey, Hon. John S. Prince, ex-Gov. John S. Pillsbury, Judge C. E. Flandrau, Judge Westcott Wilkin, Capt. Russell Blakeley, Hon. A. H. Wilder, Judge R. R. Nelson.

The funeral will be of a civic nature, though Col. Mason, commandant at Fort Snelling, will probably send down a military escort. The colonel will be in St. Paul to-day and decide definitely upon the matter.

A PROCLAMATION.

Gov. Merriam issued the following proclamation yesterday:

It becomes my sorrowful duty to announce the death of Hon. Henry H. Sibley, the first governor of the State of Minnesota.

A long and useful public career, involving positions of trust of the highest order, is brought to a close in the demise of this illustrious and honored citizen. The greater portion of his life has been spent within the borders of the state he loved so well, and to whose service he devoted so much unselfish labor.

All the people of our commonwealth will cherish the memory of his noble nature and generous deeds. His pure and spotless character, his eminent civil and military services, his magnanimous conduct and his many private acts of charity, have endeared him to all good citizens.

Now, therefore, as a token of public grief and veneration, I do designate and appoint the following citizens of the state to attend the funeral ceremonies: John S. Pillsbury, James Gilfillan, William Lochren, Thomas Wilson, William Dawson, G. S. Ives, E. T. Champlin and E. M. Pope.

As a further manifestation of the sorrow felt by all, and as a mark of respect, I direct that on the day appointed for the funeral all state offices be closed to public business: that the national flag be displayed at half-mast on the capitol until sundown; and I further direct that the building be draped with emblems of mourning for the period of thirty days.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Minnesota to be affixed.

Done at the capitol in the city of St. Paul, this 18th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one.
WILLIAM R. MERRIAM,
By the Governor,
F. P. BROWN, Secretary of State.

HONORING THE DEAD.

Senator H. F. Stevens introduced appropriate resolutions upon the death of Gen. Sibley in the senate early yesterday morning, which were passed, and concurred in by the house. After this both the senate and house adjourned for the day out of respect to the memory of the deceased. These resolutions appear in full in the report of the proceedings of the senate.

Lieutenant William Loebren, commander, yesterday issued an order that the Companions of the Commandery of Minnesota of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion shall assemble at the Ryan at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, to attend the funeral in a body. The order also appointed ex-Gov. Ramsey, ex-Gov. Pillsbury, Hon. H. M. Rice, ex-Gov. Marshall and Gen. J. W. Bishop a committee to prepare resolutions to be presented at the meeting of March 10.

Acker Post, G. A. R., of which the deceased was a member, will attend the funeral in a body, as will also nearly every post in the city.

The directors and members of the chamber of commerce meet at the chamber at 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon to attend the funeral of their ex-president.

CLOSED ITS DOORS.

The American Loan and Trust Company Financially Embarrassed.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—The American Loan and Trust company closed its doors to-day. Three savings banks, one in Syracuse, one in Rochester and another outside bank, the names of which are not known, demanded payment of deposits amounting to $360,000. The institution could not pay, and at the request of one of the savings banks the superintendent took possession.

This evening Bank Examiner Preston made a verbal statement as follows; "The liabilities amount to $2,824,827; the apparent deficiency is $656,789. Since the company closed the doors to-day I have been waited upon by influential men, and I have strong reasons to believe that it is possible that certain securities which I have estimated at a low figure may be paid to-morrow in full. If this is done we will have reduced the deficiency to $175,000. I believe that the remainder will be made good by the stockholders of the institution, and it may be placed on its feet again. I am confident the depositors will be paid in full.

"The papers served to-day for the appointment of a receiver are returnable on Friday, but if the negotiations looking to a revival of the institution appear tangible the court proceedings may be adjourned to enable the officers to carry out their plans. The indications of to-morrow will decide this question."

ASSETS AND LIABILITIES EQUAL.

KANSAS CITY, Feb. 19.—The Union Investment company has assigned. The liabilities of the company are about $1,000,000, and its assets are an equal amount. The assignment was made for the reason that the company thought it the best way to protect all of its creditors alike. The cause of the failure is given as the difficulty in calling Western loans and negotiating paper in the East.

A BANK FAILS.

TOPEKA, Kan., Feb. 19.—The John D. Knox & Co. banking house closed its doors to-day. The liabilities are said to be $250,000. The assets are principally land equites, unpaid coupons, bills discounted, tax sale certificates, etc. The total value of the assets cannot definitely be determined, but Mr. Knox claims that at a fair valuation they will aggregate $450,000.

PURELY ACCIDENTAL.

Fire in a Tenement House Causes the Death of Four Persons.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—A woman and four children were suffocated, and a man was probably fatally burned in the fire that occurred at Delmonico Place and Hopkinson avenue, Brooklyn, early this morning. The building in which the fire occurred is a three-story frame structure. The basement and ground floor were used as a bakery, and two families lived on the floors above.

Jacob Enrich was at work in the basement over a pot of boiling fat, when the fat boiled over and set fire to the surrounding woodwork. In a few minutes the building was on fire and dense smoke was pouring through the halls. Enrich was badly burned, and the doctors say he cannot recover.

The firemen managed to subdue the flames after the bakery and second floor had been gutted. Then a search of the building was made, and on the top floor Mrs. John Henry and her four children were found dead. The woman and her childran were asleep when the fire broke out, and were overcome by the smoke before they could escape.

GERMANY AND FRANCE.

A Member of Germany's Royalty Now on French Soil.

PARIS, Feb. 19.—Empress Frederick, accompanied by Count Seckendorf and Countess Perponcher, arrived here at 11:45 p. m. She was met at the station by Count Munster and the members of his staff, and all preceeded to the German embassy.

Ex-Empress Eugenie arrived at the Northern railway station at 9:30 to-night from England. She alighted in the midst of the crowd awaiting the arrival of the ex-empress of Germany, and, being mistaken for the latter, was followed to her carriage by a silent and respectful multitude.

ENTENTE CORDIALE.

BERLIN, Feb. 19.—Emperor William is gratified at the decision of the French artists to send works to the art exhibition to be held in Berlin.

The German embassy in Paris admits that Empress Frederick will visit the leading studios in that city, and it is believed there that by Emperor William's express desire she has gone to Paris to accelerate an entente cordiale between the two countries, and so forestall Italy and Austria should they secede from the dreibund as foreshadowed in the fall of Premier Crispi and Austria's rapprochement with Russia.

Without a Quorum.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The senate to-day proceeded to the consideration of the substitute for the house bill to provide for the adjudication and payment of claims arising from Indian depredations. Mr. Edmunds moved to strike out section 3 of the substitute, which prohibits the allowance of any claim made by Indians on the testimony of any witness of the Indian race. Mr. Walthall moved to amend the section by making it read "on the unsupported testimony of any Indian." Mr. Walthall's amendment was agreed to, but when a vote was taken it showed the lack of a quorum. A recess was taken until 8 p. m., but a quorum was not present at that time and the senate adjourned.

Wants the Bill Amended.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 19.—F. D. Pease of Livingston, Mont., is in Washington. He desires to have the Crow Indian reservation bill amended so as to give the squaw men and half-breeds an opportunity to select lands on the ceded lands before the white settlers have a chance. In this he will not succeed. Maj. Pease is now endeavoring to assist in passing Senator Casey's amendment to the Indian bill to ratify agreements made with the Fort Berthold Indians in North Dakota. He says that justice and humanity demand the passage of this bill and the payment of the money to the Indians.

An Account of a Scandal.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—It is announced that Prince Albert Victor of Wales will visit Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilson's house at Doncaster, where the recent card scandal occurred. The Pall Mall Gazette to-day publishes a two-column account of the scandal, giving diagrams showing the table and the positions the prince of Wales, Sir William Gordon Cumming, Lord Somerset, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilson and others occupied during the much talked of game of baccarat.

A Mysterious Shooting.

NEW YORK, Feb. 19.—Early this morning a man dying of a pistol wound in the abdomen was found by an officer in an upper room on Twenty-eighth street. A handsome woman bent over him, and, as the officer entered, the wounded man said to her: "You've done me this time, but keep your mouth shut." The couple gave fictitious names. He is in the hospital. She is locked up, and says he attempted suicide.

Bowery. About this great open park group the principal hotels and many residences of the better class of European population, occasional palaces rearing their lofty domes among them.

Over one of these last, at the gateway of which an armed soldier walked his post, in place of the usual bowab or porter floated the crescent flag of the Sublime Porte; for the semi-sovereignty of Egypt, under the firman granting its powers, is permitted no separate flag. In its spacious court yard and garden was stabling and grooming space for a cavalry detachment, the lower range of rooms being used for offices and barracks.

In the main apartment above, stretched upon a divan and enjoying the long, deep whiffs from his nargileh, reclined an officer of the army of the Khedive Ismail Pasha, for that luxurious grandson of a warrior grandsire—Mehemet Ali, "the Lion of Islam"—now held the reins of a government almost independent of Stamboul. This soldier's lithe but powerful frame was half hidden in the full folds of pajamas of India silk, but the languid pose and femininity of dress were negatived by the clear, strong lines of a face out of which flashed black eyes, restless and defiant even in his reverie. The thick, short black hair, touched with white about the temples, proclaimed him a Christian, spite of the red fez lying near upon the cushion, and the features were those of a Frank, though their swarthy olive denied his being Ingleeze.

Even an old acquaintance might have needed a second glance to recognize in Latour Bey the Creole youth so famed for manly prowess at West Point a decade gone Yet Time had set no special pressure of his signet on him, spite of the light snow round his brow and the stray white threads marking the drooping mustache. The change was that nameless something which indurates characteristics, impressing the inner upon the outer man; that something which whispers, even through casual expression and movement, that the man has lived.

His head resting on hands locked behind it, Adrien Latour gazed through the western casement long and without motion, but his eyes—in which the light flickered, glowed and died in turn—held little of the level landscape there.

But whatever his eyes saw they came back promptly as the curtain, ever replacing doors in eastern houses, was raised and the tall, lank form of an orderly entered, saluted and stood at "Attention!" like a statue. The man was a Syrian, gaunt as a greyhound and as deep chested, and his eyes and position as he waited would have challenged score from the keenest judge of competitive drill. For three years had given the Creole soldier time to bring the Egyptian cavalry arm into discipline equal to its former efficiency, and nothing of a martinet, he had yet taught his troop commanders that the faults of subalterns and men would be visited on them.

On leaving home — forever, as he thought—Latour had been among the first Cenfederate officers to accept the offer of service made by Ismail soon after his succession to his uncle, Said Pasha, in 1864. His keen soldiership and strong personal traits had early made him a favorite with the vacillating viceroy, who, by taste and education more a Frenchman than a Turk, ever had a weakness for the Frangi not pleasing to his people. But Latour's good work in the council and the field had proved the wisdom of his choice for the high rank of colonel, and the campaign in Abyssinia earned the brevet of bey, the khedive not being permitted under the firman to give the rank of general.

"Well, orderly?" the colonel said, in Arabic.

The man stepped forward and presented a letter in long official envelope. The only thing about it un-English was the Turkish signet in a great splay of black wax. It was very brief, stating from the minister of war, the court being then at Alexandria, that British visitors of great consideration and largely interested in the Suez canal would at once visit the capital, and that his highness desired every courtesy shown them by the ranking officer then at Cairo.

"Peki! Oa!" he said to the orderly in Arabic; the man saluting, making the rightabout and disappearing like an automaton.

"More of these cursed English!" Latour added to himself in French, as he rose and strode about the room. "More boredom with titled donkeys, all whiskers and eyeglass, and frowsy old red faced dowagers! Nom du diable! why cannot his highness keep them within the light of his own face! It is bad enough to command his black soldiers and train his infidel officers! Not much better than if I had taken the oath and applied for a nigger regiment! But this bear leading for John Bull is worse! I'd rather, ten to one, have the Sheik Abou-Ali refuse to pay the tribute, and be sent to squeeze it out of his black hide. Ah! Ahmed's escort back? Perhaps I may!"

With a smile at his own warmth over a trifle the Creole changed his mood, walking calmly to the window that overlooked the court below. The clatter of hoofs and challenge of the guard had died away; and he saw a handsome young officer dismount, give an order to his sergeant and, as the troopers of the escort rode off, disappear under the portal. The next instant, preceded by the orderly, he entered the chamber and saluted.

"Well, captain," Latour queried in French, "what did the sheik answer?"

"Literally nothing, colonel," the other answered in the same tongue. "We smoked many pipes and drank much vile coffee, under his tents at Minieh, and we also paid many compliments. Sheik Abou-Ali spoke most loyally of his highness; but I could only induce him to promise to send a trusted messenger of his own to Cairo with a letter regarding the tribute."

Captain Ahmed Mustafa was a high Turk of influential family, young, talented and soldierly. One of the young Egyptians sent to Europe by Said Pasha for education, his tastes were Parisian rather than oriental. He was Latour's adjutant, and more nearly his friend than any native officer.

"But you know these Arabs, colonel," Ahmed added. "From our conference I have no idea that the sheik will pay the tribute."

"Then we will doubtless be sent to bring it," Latour answered. "It will be a pleasant change from garrison routine, captain. But you have a hard ride, and need food and rest."

As the younger soldier saluted, about to turn away, the sharp note of the bugle rang out clear in stable call, floating fainter from across the river at the cavalry barracks.

"By the way, captain," Latour added, "order the officer in charge of evening stables to report the number and condition of the extra mounts. His highness sends a fresh squadron of beefeaters to be furnished with horses. That is all."

As the other disappeared, Latour clapped his hands to summon his Arab servant, soon donning his brilliant, gold incrusted uniform of the staff. For Ismail Pasha delighted to load his officers with more gold and color than most of them could carry gracefully.

Scarcely was the military toilet complete when the clang of the sentry's musket sounded from the court, followed by his call for the sergeant of the guard. Almost immediately heavy feet hurried up the stairs, and the orderly appeared, almost brushed aside by the close following visitor. He was a burly six footer, red faced and with long flowing yellow whiskers. A huge veil turbaned his linen helmet, and black straps crossed and recrossed the broad chest that seemed struggling to escape from his wax fitting cutaway of dingy plaid tweed.

"Delighted, my dear boy! delighted, really!" he cried heartily. "Didn't have an idea, you know, till they told me at the Hotel d'Orient. Knew you were in Egypt, my dear Latour, but hadn't guessed our good luck!—hadn't, 'pon honor! Lady Martindale will be delighted, as I am, really!"

Latour started forward and grasped Lord Martindale's hand warmly.

"I am equally charmed," he said cordially. "How this does bring back old times! Why, I was a cadet, my lord, the last time we met; and Lady Martindale is with you? A double pleasure."

Throwing himself on a divan, the Englishman ran on about the boredom of travel, Lady Edith's insatiable desire for change, his interest in Suez canal matters and the extreme courtesy of the Khedive Ismail. Meanwhile he drank all the coffee and smoked all the pipes steadily provided by the diligent chibouque-ghi of the host.

Latour listened courteously with his ears, but not with his brain. That was filled with confusion of memories conjured up by this sudden visit. He heard the rush of the Hudson as he walked round "Flirtation," the swirl of the riding school and the "sound off" of the band at dress parade. But the voice that spoke softly to him, the eyes that looked approval from the gallery, the hand that waved "Au revoir!" from the plain were not another's, but those of Edith Van der Huysen!

That rich, dark face, with its mobile features; those sensitive lips, parting in rare smiles over perfect teeth; those marvelous eyes, that deepened from brown to black as they looked into his—all seemed things of yesterday.

For, in the four past years, active work in new scenes and absolute severance from anything American had greatly changed the Creole. Living absolutely in the present, careless of the future and forgetful of the past, the influences of climate and surrounding had told unconsciously upon him, and if not actually a fatalist in theory, he took quite kindly to the practice.

Time, the consoler, had done his work fairly well; and Latour had either forgotten the old wound, or had ceased to feel it pain him.

One's tastes change ever with the years; and a decade of them in war, travel and hard work, had had their effect in casting into oblivion the early episodes of Latour's life. And now, if these came up as a mist, shutting out the burly Briton from his sight, the voice that sounded through it was the low, thrilling contralto of Edith Van der Huysen, and the eyes that emphasized the voice were those deep, luminous ones he had looked into, without understanding, so many an hour of his "encampment year."

But suddenly returning to Egypt from his lightning backward trip to the Hudson, Latour heard the Englishman saying:

"So I told her I'd beat up your quarters myself, sans facon, and bring you over to dine, you know. No duty, I hope?"

"None, fortunately," Latour replied quickly. "Only one order to scribble, and I am yours."

He took up a tablet and wrote hastily in French:

"CAPTAIN—Countermand request for report on extra mounts. Horses will not be needed.

"LATOUR-BEY, Colonel."

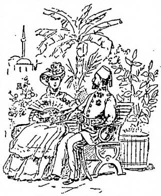
He clapped his hands. "This to Capt. Ahmed Mustafa," he said in Arabic; then, turning to Lord Martindale, he added:

"Now, my lord, I am yours." And as the burly form of the other preceded him under the portiere he muttered to himself:

"What echo to my reverie! Is it—kismet?"

PART III—CHAPTER II.

THE RIDDLE OF THE AGES.



And now they sat alone.

More than a week had passed since the sudden advent of the Martindales at Cairo, each day of it filled with that unique sightseeing possible only in the land of the Pharaohs. They were already familiar with the suburbs of Boulak and Musr el-Aatik—the old musr, or capital—and expeditions had been made to all points of interest farther off, always on horseback when practicable. For Edith was a superb horsewoman, and the usually particular cavalry inspector had promptly placed the choice of his stables at their disposition. One exception he made, in disfavor of Lord Martindale's man, a bulky cockney who rode fourteen stone ten, and so badly at that as to handicap his horse twenty pounds additional. So Harris was relegated to the heaviest brute in all the regimental stud.

Edith had grown more intimate with the face of the Nile than she was with the dirtier one of the Thames. She had several times crossed its bend to visit Gizeh in the long, flat ferryboats propelled by strong, yellow arms at the sweeps when wind failed the great yellow lateen sails. She had picnicked amid the ruins of old Memphis, and in a light caique had inspected the gleaming marbles of Rhoda island and its rugged Nilometer, that index finger of eldest hydrography.

The English party had religiously clambered over the chin high base tiers of the Great Pyramid, climbing its two hundred and three steps before lunch time; and daring the passage to the "king's chamber," when fortified by bitter beer to better resist its mingled stuffiness of potted Rameses and living Arab guide. And here, as in many other rambles, a valuable adjunct to the party was the English physician, Sir Roger Arnyffe, a long resident in Cairo, whose skill had won the confidence of the khedive beyond that of any native hakeem, and whom the foreign colony quite idolized.

One whole morning was devoted to the Sphinx. Sir Roger had given much valuable information about the grand colossus of Gizeh, hewn mostly from the solid spar rock, some hundred paces eastward of the second Pyramid. He had taken part in the excavations at the front to which the party had descended. Edith seemed deeply impressed with the giant proportions of the statue—looking upward, as they stood between the fore paws of masonry which make its total length some hundred and seventy-two feet, the great head rearing fifty-six feet over them.

"So you insist on the female theory?" Sir Roger asked with a smile.

"Certainly I do," she answered earnestly. "I am sure she is the embodiment of the earliest legend of the name—of the wickedness of woman and her punishment."

"Oh, very well," the old surgeon laughed back. "Then we'll dismiss the broken beard theory, or change it into the bow of her ladyship's nightcap. It is useless to argue with one woman about her views of another—especially when one is thirsty." And he moved off to where Lord Martindale stood, with his back to them and the statue, deep in contemplation of the immediate present as represented by the Bass ale and potted meats Harris was carefully transferring from a hamper to the slab that perhaps held down the ashes of a long dead king.

"And how calm the grand face is, though seamed by ages!" the woman added. "She looks as though her memories of the past cannot be broken by the littleness of the present. And such a present!"

The tone of the last words made Latour's glance follow hers toward Lord Martindale. Then it sought her eyes, to find in them a restless contempt, seen once or twice before, but always dismissed as figment of his own imagination. But as her eyes met his the light in them grew softer, and again she raised them to the towering head above them.

"They probably mean age in part," Latour answered, smiling. "But in larger part they mean that your adopted countrymen are only vandals, in plaid cutaways, who have despoiled her majesty's countenance for souvenirs before excavation spared it. And in part, too, the tears are blows from lances of the Bedouins. The followers of the prophet, in the pure simplicity of their faith, revile those images and symbols of material which their cousins of Rome and Oxford and Hindoostan bow down before. They show their contempt by blows as well as words; though I grieve to dispel your more poetic view."

"Then all the grander that calm upon the face which insult even cannot break!"

The exclamation had more the resonance of a thought inborn than the sound of casual criticism; and again Latour saw the dark face turned from the Sphinx toward the men about the lunch.

"This Sphinx has always been to me the most interesting of all the monuments," he said, turning again. "Whether king, or queen, or god, the diverse theories leave me understanding her origin and purpose less than any of them. She puzzles me, even as she seems to have puzzled the ancients."

"Naturally. She is a woman of stone," Edith answered. "Even woman of flesh has been the riddle of the ages!"

"Perhaps," he answered. "And this statue is typical. The tablets in her breast may symbolize those illegible things every woman hides in her own bosom"——

"And which are not comprehended even when shown to man," she broke in quickly. "Yet, as shown in the statue here, those very mysteries may form her holiest chapel, in which her better self does sacrifice higher than was ever burned upon that altar in the lion's paws."

"Then you would imply," the man rejoined quickly, "that the popular early myth of the Sphinx must have been woven by some woman; that the death of him who guessed not her riddles was just punishment for his lack of comprehending that incomprehensible thing—a woman's heart."

His eyes were glowing upon her face; hers were far away beyond the desert sands. But the features softened, as did the low, rich voice that said—he knew not whether to herself or him:

"And yet Œdipus came at last to her. It must be so ever if Œdipus will only dare the test. 'Tis his lack of courage, not her inscrutability, that leaves woman—be she stone or flesh—the riddle of the ages!"

Then into the philosophy of the enigmaed past crushed the ruthless realism of the present. The cockney groom approached and said:

"Wud yo' leddyship 'ave me pull the hale now?"

"Come to luncheon. These bloaters are worth a dozen dead Pharaohs, you know."

Without reply Edith moved toward the others. But Latour saw her lip curl strangely as her eyes rested upon her husband. The next moment they glanced into his, a strange, deep glow in them, as she almost whispered:

"You see, my Œdipus has not yet come!"

That night they all visited the Ezbekieh; and it was really within the walls of Cairo that the woman of the party found most to interest her. The palaces, the mosques, with their marvelous minarets, the bazars, with their sleepy seeming but shrewd traffic, all pleased her with their novelty. But it was the shifting kaleidoscope of face and dress and habit through which the orientality of the land most impressed her, and night on the Ezbekieh always charmed her.

Truly the Cairo dear to the artist and the poet is fast fading, like a mirage: the Cairo dear to the British tourist flourishes like a green oasis against the gray past. He who, with Hope's Anastasius, "goes there expecting, if not an earthly, at least an aquatic paradise, finds filth and ruin on the outside and filth and misery within."

But none of this obtrudes itself upon the Ezbekieh, where Edith sat that night, Latour again beside her, as had grown to be a certainty now. Blase as he was with sightseeing, and more disgusted with the average English speaking tourist, he now proved a most complaisant cicerone, never tiring in explanation, and each day suggesting some new jaunt for the one succeeding.

And really good excuse he had, for no ordinary sightseer had Lady Martindale approved herself. Her quick intelligence, extensive reading and ready wit he remembered as posing him often in cadet days, and now, matured, they not only lightened the toilsome round of show places, but even invested them with fresh motives for thought. Whether he recognized the glamour of this unwonted contact he surely felt its charm, and without analyzing he yielded to it unquestioning.

About the beautiful park, with its tall, waving palm trees, its acacias and shrubs, lush in growth and rich in hues, gathered groups as varied and as picturesque as the world can show. Greeks, Armenians and Copts, differing in dress and port, mingled with grave, sedate Turks and stolid faced Arabs, sinewy and bare of limb. Here and there Jews in their oriental garb moved quietly among Syrians and native fellaheen; while stiffly uniformed regulars of the khedive's army strolled around with picturesque Arnaouts, the white, full skirts beneath their braided jackets tightly bound by the sash ever ornamented with the double rows of pistols.

Nearer, around the principle cafe, the groups were European, yet varying in style and dress—Italian, Greek and French merchants' families, dotted with occasional Americans, mostly of the nouveaux riches, and a goodly sprinkling of unmistakable English; and for the delectation of this group the garrison band performed at intervals the national airs of all nations.

Over the whole scene babeled the hum of many voices, cut by the cries of the venders of refreshments, and by an occasional laugh, invariably coming from the foreign groups.

For your oriental is sedate and seldom yields to merriment of any sort, a smile being unusual and a laugh considered indecorous

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C,. St. P.,M. & O.Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St.Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7;45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their time as on other lines, because this is shorter than any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicag to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

Commissioner Kirsch's Record Shown up to His Disadvantage,

From The Crookston Times.

EDITOR TIMES:—Permit me to make a few remarks in answer to an attack made upon me by Mr. M. E. Kirsch in your paper of February 14th, 1891. After an insinuating and overbearing tirade against what he terms the "Holstein Journal," our honorable commissioner delivers himself of the following:

"We are also informed that the "moral editor" of the Red River Darling has givus quite a send-off in his last issue. We do dislike to be stabbed in the back, slandered and maliciously accused by a paper printed in a foreign language, whose editor well knows that we did not graduate from the "renowned" college of Decora, Iowa, etc."

If his highness "we," the county commissioner, means that his official actions as a county officer have been criticised in the Red River Dalen he is right; but I emphatically deny that he has been slandered and maliciously accused in that paper. I stand ready to prove each and every accusation made against the plural commissioner.

The most malicious critic will get ample satisfaction by simply stating facts in regard to Mr. Kirsch's official business as county commissioner. Slander in his case would be superfluous.

The Red River Dalen, although printed in the Norwegian language, is a lawfully organized newspaper, is read by as many tax payers in this county as any other paper, and claims as much right to criticise the official actions of a public servant as any other paper. I have used that right in the past and shall continue to use it in the future in spite of the supercilious commissioner.

All who have read Mr. Kirsch's article will agree with me that "we," (M. E. Kirsch) are innocent of having graduated from Decorah or any other college.

For the contemplation of the tax-payers I shall copy from the financial statement for 1889 the following:

County Commissioners:—Total amount received from the county for 1889:

J. P. Johnson,	$148 80
Hugh Thompson	121 01
M. E. Kirsch,	467 30
Frank E. Hunt,	206 55
A. C. Rhinehart,	275 38

Why the great M. E. Kirsch should have received more than twice as much as Frank E. Hunt and more than three times as much as Johnson or Thompson during the year 1889 may be a conumdrum to many of the taxpayers, but by looking over the records the explanation is easy. I shall only copy two items of a bill dated July 18th, 1889:

POLK COUNTY,
TO M. E. KIRSCH, DR.

July 1st, 2nd, 3d, 4th and 5th, attending board meeting, (traveling) 112 miles,	$26 00
July 15th, 16th, 17th and 18th, attending meeting of equalization board (traveling) 112 miles	$23 20

The whole bill is for $96.80, for which a warrant was drawn by the county auditor and paid to Mr. Kirsch by the county treasurer. Mr. Kirsch simply went up to Euclid every evening to do his chores and let the county pay him ten cents a mile for doing it.

Verily, our county commissioner "for revenue only," can majestically proclaim: "Our foundation is solid rock!"

Respectfully,
ADOLPH BYDAL.

One Year Ago.

It was a year ago this week that our citizens were elated over the intelligence of the president approving the Red Lake treaty thereby hastening the opening of 4,000,000 acres of agricultural land to settlement and 11,000,000,000 feet of pine to market.....Miss Ernestine Wyer had given a successful "silence" party.... Helmuth Zaiser's friends had the previous Friday celebrated his birthday with a lunch party ...Candidates for village marshalship were being sprung at the rate of a half dozen daily, and the village political pot was boiling so lustily that its hum could be heard above all else.

Points in Order.

The annual village election is at hand. The main question before the people and that which is of prime importance is the election of marshal. This is the only lucrative office in the village although some of the other fellows get an allowance for committee work or traveling expenses. It matters not what interests of a public nature are at stake, all are subservient to this one great issue, who will be the city marshal. Men are not elected because they represent the tax payers or because they have the interests of the commonwealth at heart—men are not chosen because of their ability—but they hold the office by the grace of the candidate for the marshalship who can muster up a sufficient number of votes of transients, and what would be called in the city "ward healers"—whose principal stock in trade is their gift of gab. It is time men should be elected on some other issue. It is a mistake that our charter was not so amended at this session of the legislature as to allow the city marshal to be elected by the popular vote. If it were thus, the interests of the city would not be subserved. Another remedy for this evil would be to reduce the salary of the marshal to a sum proportionate to the amount of labor performed. Everyone knows the marshal does not earn the paltry sum of fifteen dollars per month. If we must have a marshal let the office be given to the lowest responsible bidder. If the marshal is [illegible] for sidewalk ornament let us have [illegible] will be an ornament. If he must be given the office as a matter of charity, [illegible] let his name be placed upon the poor list and monthly allowance be granted. These are a few points for the incoming council. May they profit by them—cut down the expenses—cut off the dead limbs—and the trunk of our municipality will have a more healthy growth.

How to Advertise

The question of method in advertising is one having infinite range. The matter is one of the very first importance, and cannot be too carefully studied. One thing about it that may be set down as true is that every man's advertising, in its language and style, should be characteristic of the man, characteristic of his stock, characteristic of his commercial position. For every man has his peculiarities of development. When he speaks we know it is he, though we may not be looking at him, and his advertisement should represent him like his voice. He should put his experience, his industry, his enterprise, into his advertising. It is astonishing to see how merchants who are tireless in the industry—at the store early and late, close buyers, eager seekers after business, quick to embrace opportunities for enlargement of lines and extension of trade—it is surprising to see how much business men continue their advertising in the language of the old rate, and announced in the same words and the same type that did duty for them years ago that "B. Franklin (or any other man, the name doesn't matter) is still to be found at the old stand, with a choice stock of dry goods, notions, etc. etc." (The two etc.'s are indispensable in an "ad" of this kind.)

There is another and a better way to do. If a merchant has any snap, any energy, in himself, let him show it in his advertising. If he has any bargains in his store, let him say so. If he has connections which enable him to sell better goods, or the same goods at lower prices, than any body else, let him say that; say it plainly, strongly and in a way that will carry conviction of truthfulness; and on the same principal that leads him to treat visitors to his store so that they will call again, let him write his advertisement so that his next advertisement will be looked for; if you get a person's attention once try to hold it. The whole thing is summed up in this: One should study advertising as he does ever other department of his business. Advertising is a science, simple, it is true, sa to its main elements, but requiring more thought and system than many of our business men have been accustomed to give it.

The Future of Hawaii.

A. D. Wishard handed us for perusal the Hawaiian Gazette, dated at Hanolula, February 17. The Gazette is a ten page paper in the English language, and gotten up in a crisp and taking style. It has a full account of the death of King Kalakaua and his biography, portrait, and cut of the royal palace. We noticed that the Gazette contained a large number of advertisements—a showing that the paper is in a progressive and live commercial center. The Gazette is no doubt well up in the ranks of journalism, for we observe it has a libel suit on hand, the case having sprung from a published article wherein the Gazette stated that a certain man was organizing a troupe of native Hula girls and procuring tights for them. The same man, it appears, had been previously stumping the country in the interests of the W. C. T. U. Life in Hawaii seems to be much after the American style, having been borrowed from us. The following item from that paper, bears a local interest. They have probably heard of our Washington's Birthday entertainment to purchase more books for our library: "Minnesota, and Wisconsin appear to be doing well in the way of the formation of school libraries. During the past year the two states have established over 1,200. The books for each of these libraries are selected from a list prepared by the state superintendent."

In this connection, the following, from the North American Review, is of interest: The death of King Kalakaua, has aroused public interest in Hawaiian affairs. It was generally understood that the motive of Kalakaua's visit to this country [illegible] closer relations with the [illegible]. His death while negotiations were pending was somewhat unfortunate, because it is not absolutely certain that the policy of the Hawaiian government under his successor will run on precisely the same lines. But while there is room for doubt on this head, there is also a reasonable probability that Kalakaua's death will not materially change the drift of public policy. The Hawaiian Islands are American in sentiment and sympathy. Visitors from the United States to Honolulu feel themselves at home the moment they land from the steamer; there is nothing in the social conditions to remind them that they are on foreign soil. Hotels and stores are conducted on the American plan. American money is the circulating medium. Outdoor sports and popular amusements are fashioned on the American pattern, and the Fourth of July is a national holiday. Conversely, when a Hawaiian resident visits America, he finds himself at home in San Francisco or anywhere else in the United States. The native Hawaiian people look to the United States as her best friend. They received their civilization from it, and they have constant intercourse with it. In other words, they know that their material prosperity depends upon the friendship of the United States. But they are impressionable and easily led. This is the weak point in Hawaiian affairs. It has been the cause of the recent trouble in the islands, and will continue to be a source of uncertainty and weakness while the Hawaiian natives continue to be influenced by their old traditions and customs.

How to kill Your Town.

Denounce your merchants because they make a profit on their goods.

Make your town out a very bad place, and stab it every chance you get.

Refuse to unite in any scheme for the betterment of the material interests of the people.

Keep every cent you get and don't do anything of the public nature unless you can make something out of it.

If a stranger comes to your town tell him all that is ever done, and predict a general crash in the town in the near future.

Knife every man that disagrees with you on the best methods of increasing business.

When you have anything to say of your town, say it in such a way that will leave the impression that you have no faith in it.

Patronize outside newspapers to the exclusion of your own, and then denounce them for not being as large as the city papers.

If you are a merchant, don't advertise in the home papers; buy a rubber stamp and use it; It may save a few dimes and make the paper look like a one-horse concern all around.

If you are a farmer, curse the town where you trade, as the meanest place on earth. Take this to your neighbors, endeavor to make them think the business men are robbers and thieves. It will make your property much less valuable but then you don't care.—Ex.

SCORE one to the credit of the Czar. Admiral Verkovsky exercised his control of the Admirality shipbuilding dock yard with great tyranny and abused and punished the men until they struck work and appealed to the Czar. The result has been that Verkovsky has been given the grand bounce and the demands of the men have been granted. And there wasn't a walking delegate put upon the job.

IT has been affirmed that the mariner's compass was invented in China 1100 years B. C., but a writer in the China Review, who has been investigating the subject, now asserts that the first unmistakable mention of the compass in Chinese records is not earlier than the twelfth century and that the instrument undoubtedly became known in Europe before the return from China of Marco Polo, who is fabled to have brought it in his baggage.

THE biggest umbrella in the world has been made by Messrs. Wilson, Matheson & Co., of Glasgow, for the use of the West African king. The umbrella, which can be closed in the usual manner, is twenty-one feet in diameter, and is affixed to a polished mahogany staff of the same length. The canopy is made of Indian straw, lined with cardinal and white, has a score of straw tassels and a border of crimson satin. On the top is a pine-shaped straw ornament which terminates in a gilded cone. When in use the umbrella is fixed in the ground, and under its shelter the king is able to entertain thirty guests at dinner.

A snow slide swept over Bullion King mine, at Irwin, carrying the boarding house and Supt. Rippell's dwelling down. Mr. Rippell, Mrs. Ed. Clarke and child, at the boarding house, B. F. Smiley, the engineer, are still buried in the slide, but with little hope of their recovery alive. The miners had gone to the shaft house and escaped. Every man was put to work in the vain hope that some of the victims may be found alive.

Reports received show that at least six persons have lost their lives by the floods of the past few days, and perhaps many more who have not been accounted for, have perished. The worst of the flood was at Downey and vicinity. The old and new Gabriel rivers broke from their banks and ran together, making a great sea 6 to 10 miles wide and 17 miles long. Many houses have been swept away, and their occupants are missing.

Joseph Hamer, a finisher by trade, fatally shot his wife and dangerously wounded his mother-in-law, Mrs. Mary Hasmer, at Chicago. The police officer who arrested Hamer a few minutes after the shooting had a narrow escape from being shot. Mrs. Hamer had left her husband three days ago on account of cruel treatment. She returned that evening to her former home in company with her mother to get her some clothing, when the shooting occurred.

Henry Marsh was hanged at Ebensburg, Pa., for the murder of Clara Jones. He made a short speech on the gallows, saying he was sorry for what he had done and hoped to meet all in the other world. Marsh murdered Clara Jones, his love, July 6, 1890. She did not receive him with favor, and this caused him to kill her. The murder was a most brutal one, Marsh beating the girl over the head with a heavy piece of iron until she became unconscious and then cutting her throat with a razor.

Minnie Mabbitt, a pretty girl of seventeen whose home is at Carrollton, Ind., and her older brothers Orris and Mont, were placed on trial, charged with the murder of Minnie's illegitimate child, aged six weeks. The child was born in Indianapolis and its body was found in a creek near the city. Minnie says the child was taken by Mont, and that that was the last she had seen of it. Some years ago Amos Green was lynched in Delphos, Ind., for the murder of a sister of the accused, whom he had seduced.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES.

The annual report of the New York State board of health shows that 5,000 people died of the grip in that state in 1890.

It is said that the Standard Oil company has purchased the property of the Geyser Oil Company of Ohio, one of the Standard's most aggressive opponents, for $600,000.

The Texas senate has passed a house bill appropriating $40,000 for two years' maintenance of the Confederate home at Austin, and adopting the home as a state institution.

The grippe has taken possession of Fort Logan, in Colorado, and is playing havoc with the soldiers. Eighty are in the hospital and four deaths have occurred in one week from the disease.

The Union Mutual accident association, of Chicago, is disabled and drifting without either president or board of directors they having resigned. There is no suspicion of any wrong doing in the matter.

A suit for $200,000 damages has been commenced, against the editor of the New York Druggist Circular by Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, attorney for the Radam Microbe Killer company, for libel.

Two hundred of the passengers who arrived at New York on the steamship Scotia on Feb. 16 and were quarantined at Hoffman island, because smallpox had broken out on the ship, were landed at the barge office.

News has just reached Denver of one of the most remarkable discoveries in America of the present year. The find is an alabaster quarry, the ledge being of great thickness and extending for miles in the foothills near Canon City. Rumor has it that a rich New York and St. Louis syndicate has an option on the property at what sounds like a fabulous price.

Minneapolis' Big Fire.

The big fire at Minneapolis was the most serious in the way of property loss ever known in Minneapolis. In this respect it ranks alongside the Syndicate block fire of seven years ago, the saw mill fire of three years ago, and the later and fatal fires at the Tribune building and the Security warehouse. The fact that the building where the greatest damage was done was generally considered to be about as absolutely fireproof as they can make high buildings was what caused greatest surprise. Then the recent removal by the city council of Chief Stetson and the unfortunate fact that his successor, Gus Rung, was absent in the East getting pointers, gave the situation additional interest, and gave the thousands of people, property-owners and others, who were disposed to do the quiet natural act criticizing, plenty of material and encourment.

According to the best estimates attainable at this time the total loss by the fire will be $250,000. The final adjustment may cut this down to perhaps $225,000 or possibly $200,000. The principal damage, of course, is to the Lumber Exchange. It is difficult to determine about the loss. If the walls have to be taken down in the building, then the loss on that building alone may reach $200,000. The walls are standing and apparently in good shape. There is no bulging, so far as can be seen. The roof, and rear end of several of the upper floors have fallen in, and viewed from above it is a tough-looking wreck. A good deal of the tile flooring on other floors gave way, and the interior of the building is in a bad state of demoralization.

THE NORTHWEST.

The question has been raised whether or not the commissioners of Goodhue county can issue bonds to build a new poor house without a vote of the people. The county attorney and attorney general decide that they can.

John McHale, Bernard Schmaller and Henry Howe were arrested in St. Cloud upon a warrant sworn out by Edward Bogart, of Forest City. Bogart claims these men robbed him while he was under the influence of liquor.

Henry Revier, who was committed to jail at Northfield on the charge of attempted patricide, is considered of unsound mind by his relatives, who say he has from childhood borne an unreasonable grudge against his father, who is an excellent man, and has for years threatened his life.

An effort is making among the members of the Farmers' Alliance of Goodhue county to bring about a reduction in the salaries of the officers of this county. Petitions asking for a horizontal reduction of 25 per cent have been sent to the Goodhue county members of the legislature.

The farmers' institute, now in progress in Lake City, is creating a great deal of interest. Supt. Gregg says it is the most enthusiastic and best attended institute he has held this season. The program includes papers and addresses on topics of interest to farmers, and there is a cooking school for ladies conducted by Mrs. Hayes.

Earl Fillmore, the 12-year-old son of Mrs. F. B. Filmore, of Monticello while swinging on the shaft of the windmill, his clothes got caught in the gearing and he was crushed to death. Earl was a general favorite among the scholars of the school there and his sudden death is greatly lamented.

There have been petitions circulated in certain cities in the southern part of the state viz: Red Wing, Watonna, St. Charles, etc., and signed by some of the citizens of those places, asking for the removal of Steward Knapp of the second hospital for insane. At a recent meeting of the board of trustees these petitions were referred to a committee. There were no charges in regard to purchases of cookery or of anything else, the petitions simply asking for the removal of Steward Knapp and naming another person for the office.

NORTH DAKOTA.

J. C. Taylor of Kidder county, has 6,000 sheep, and has lost but three during the winter—and they were killed by wolves, not weather.

A well known East Grand Forks hackman and a demimonde, named Frank Heath, were arrested, charged with robbing a passenger in the hack. The hackman was bound over for conspiring to rob, and the woman Heath for committing the robbery.

A meeting of representative citizens of Fargo adopted resolutions against the repeal of any portion of the prohibition law as proposed in the legislature and urged upon citizens in general over the state to call meetings and forward petitions and resolutions to Bismarck immediately.

A special from Fargo says: Injunctions are being served against all persons suspected of selling liquor in this county, and the contents of the building, whether liquor is found or not, are being seized and the saloons closed awaiting the order of the court. No liquor has thus far been found.

A meeting of the representatives of the several local farmers' Alliances in Sargent county was held a few days since to take a vote on the question of the county issuing bonds to furnish seed wheat to the farmers. The proposition was defeated by a vote of 6 to 22. They desire the state to help them out.

Chief Hennessey, of Grand Forks, at the instance of Detective Black of the Great Northern railway company, arrested two young men giving the names of Ryan and Johnson, charged with the lareny of a quantity of beer in transit over the road at sundry times. They were held for examination.

A committee of the Methodist conference to choose a site for a college decided on accepting the offer of 40 acres in MaGoffin's addition in Wahpeton. Trustees elected were Rev. D. C. Plannette and W. H. White, Fargo; W. H. Adams, T. L. French, H. J. McCumber and J. H. Keeley, Wahpeton; E. T. Foster, Grand Forks; R. B. Richardson, Drayton; J. A. Hovis, Devils Lake; N. G. Larimore, Larimore, and S. E. Ryan' Bismarck.

A petition containing several hundred signatures, representing the official and business interests of Devils Lake and nearly all the towns in this land district, praying for the re-establishment of a military post at Fort Totten, has been forwarded from here to Congressman Hansbrough. It recites the general uneasiness on account of the possibility of danger from Indians and its effect upon business and immigration.

The heaviest snow storm that Michigan City has had this season fell recently and it makes the farmers confident of a good crop the coming season. We have had very little snow so far this season, only about six-inches, but this storm gives plenty to insure crops the coming season, and if seed can be procured for all the ground now ready for crop, this section of country will come to the front again, for when we can get moisture we beat the world for quality and quantity in wheat.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

The business men of Carthage have organized a board of trade, R. F. Lyons was chosen president and F. M. Brown secretary.

A Pierre dispatch says that all the original package joints at Pierre have been closed upon the information of J. F. Haber, of Brookings.

The girl still wears short dresses, and is only a child.

The new Masonic hall at Huron was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. An elegant banquet was served, and an address was delivered by Mayor H. J. Rice, followed with dancing. Four hundred people were present, including a number of Masons from abroad. The hall is the finest in this part of the Northwest, and is handsomely furnished.

Col. R. J. Hinton, special agent for the agriculture department at Washington, has notified State Engineer Coffin that he will make a tour of inspection of North and South Dakota in March in the interests of irrigation. He has signified his willingness to address meetings on this important question at such points as Maj. Coffin shall arrange for.

C. H. Walworth, of Omaha, of the firm of Walworth & Walker, stock dealers, arrived at Pierre with a special train containing about fifteen hundred sheep. These sheep came from Wyoming and Idaho and are shipped here for the purpose of letting them out to small stock men in this vicinity and west of the river. Walworth & Walker own a large cattle ranch with several thousand head of stock out on the reservation country. They have great faith in this country and are confident that the sheep business is one of the most profitable and successful industries which the farmer can engage in. This is only a commencement of the stock which will be shipped in here during the next few months. It is understood that several thousand head of sheep are to be consigned to C. C. Bennett at an early day.

WISCONSIN:

Three young sons of Andrew Gilbertson were buried at Hudson. They all died of diphtheria within thirty-two hours.

Morill Mott has sued the Valley Lumber Company for $10,000 injury to his foot which was caught in a log chain last summer in the saw mill in Eau Claire.

Miss Gertrude Hickox, a prominent young society lady, of Milwaukee, drowned herself in the lake. Her body was found at the head of Wisconsin street. Disappointment in love was the cause of the deed.

Charles Maloney, living near Eau Claire, took a dose of aconite in mistake for cough cure, and his death followed in two hours. He was employed by the Tomahawk Lumber company. His remains were interred in this city.

About 100 additional fillings were made at Ashland, thus taking nearly all the land available except a few tracts of worthless acres which have been burned over. Everything has quieted down until April 17, when the Omaha lands come into market. At that time over 3,000 fillings will be made.

With the opening of navigation Capt. Volney Bigelow's new rafter now on the ways at Eagle Point near La Crosse will be ready for business. She is to be 120 feet long, 22 feet wide, 3 feet 8 inches hold, and will take the Natrona's machinery. Capt. Bigelow has sought to make her plain, strong and serviceable.

Dick Pitts, who was foreman at the gas works at Eau Claire at the time of the explosion, has sued the gas company for $10,000 damages for injuries said to have been received. The gas company claims it will be able to prove that Pitts was asleep on duty, and his own negligence caused the explosion.

IOWA.

Andrew Ellsworth, a 7-year old boy, was run over and crushed to death by an electric motor train at Council Bluffs.

A little son of Postmaster Loes, of Rockdale, was fatally hurt while sliding down hill. He ran into a team, and one of the horses stepped on him, fracturing his skull.

The government ice house at the middle lock has been filled with a fairly good quality of ice, and the canal employes will be able to keep cool next summer.

The Mason Daily Times is a new venture in the uewspaper world with R. Stanberry as editor and proprietor. It will be independent in politics. It will be the first daily paper published in this city.

The large ice honse of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad at Fort Madison was almost totally destroyed by fire. The building was about two-thirds full of ice.

The Sioux City Volksfreund, a German paper edited by E. W. Hoffman, was excluded from the mails because of obscene editorial articles, and prosecutions were instituted against the editor.

The preliminary contract has been signed for an $800,000 packing plant to be located at Sioux City, the major portion of the capital being furnished by Chicago and Boston parties, and the plant to be erected by a Chicago packer.

An attempt was made to blow up a car on the Eight street motor line at Dubuque. The conductor saw an obstruction on the track placed in the switch and stopped his car. It proved to be a dynamite stick eight inches long, such as miners use in blasting. The car was filled with passengers.

Four mail bags were stolen from a truck in the union depot at Burlington. Only one pouch contained letters. The theft was not discovered for several minutes, during which time the robber made his way to a yard in the rear of the depot where he cut open the sacks. He then escaped in the darkness. The amount stolen is not known.

The sensational White Cap case at Clear Lake closed. Being closely questioned Gurton and Pester revealed the whole matter and gave evidence which resulted in the conviction of Geo. Palmer, Homer Young, Ed. Seebers, Albert Pester and Norris Gurton. The father of Miss Carrie, the wife of Ed. George, who was so cruelly beaten, pleaded not guilty, and his case was continued. Facts were developed during the trial which, when divulged will create a sensation.

While four little boys of 4 and 6 years respectively were walking down the railroad at Burlington on their way to school a few days ago five tramps met them and demanded the food in their dinner pails. On being refused, the little fellows were bound and gagged and locked in a box car of a train about to start westward. The little fellows were carried several hundred miles before anyone's attention was called to their presence. When rescued they were nearly famished and half frozen.

Judge Robinson, of the supreme court, has lately been giving a course of five lectures upon appellate practice before the law department of the state university. Others from abroad, who have recently been giving special courses before the different departments of the university, are Dr. Hammond, now dean of the law department of Washington university, a course upon the history of common law; Dr. G. D. Black, of Chicago, upon special pathology and hygiene, and Dr. G. H. Hall, superintendent of the insane hospital at Independence, upon insanity.

Billy Brank's Bonanza.

Inordinate thirst for spirits and the dry throat that it inseparable from it will develop the inventive faculties as well, or even beter than downright necessity.

Billy Brank, in a town in western New York, was poor; Billy was thirsty; Billy found a dead cat. Depositing it behind the office of F. K. Hull, a respected citizen, he waited. Mr. Hull is not more fastidious than his neighbor, but he has always nourished a prejudice against dead cats ben eath his office windows. As was to be expected, he paid Billy 25 cents to give the remains a christian burial. Bill took her away and had five drinks of the Central house's best whisky at 5 cents a drink. The next day Billy muddled his cat by the river bank so that he would not be recognized by Mr. Hull as an old acquaintance, and again Mr. Hull paid her funeral expenses. Later she made the acquaintance of officials of the First national bank and then of the Second national bank. All paid. Every resident made her acquaintance, and finally Billy laid her aside as a souvenir. He knew where he could get more cats.

But greater wealth was opened up to him by the power of his inventive thirst. He sowed grass seed in the cracks of the sidewalks. This he did in front of all the shops, and when, in the natural course of events the grass grew, Billy made no end of money weeding it out.

Reports from Billy's home state that he is on the verge of T. D. T.'s and gout.—N. Y. Continent.

SENATE.

The senate met at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the members appeared somewhat refreshed after the vacation, as a motion to adjourn, made immediately after the approval of the journal, was defeated by a vote of 22 to 4.

S. F. No. 354—By Senator Craig—Reapportioning the state into congressional districts.

S. F. No. 355—By Senator Donnelly—Amending General Laws relating to county commissioners and care of poor.

The bill authorizing the city of Mankato to donate to the general government a site for a public building was passed under suspension of the rules.

The senate adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

Senator Craig, chairman of the senate committee on reapportionment, yesterday introduced a bill reapportioning the state into seven congressional districts, in accordance with the bill passed by congress which gives Minnesota seven congressmen instead of five. The bill is not a committee bill, but embraces Senator Craig's personal ideas of what the new apportionment should be. The basis of the bill is the population, according to the census of 1890.

HOUSE.

When the house assembled at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon Mr. Bell drew the attention of Mr. Bjorge, speaker pro tem., to the fact that copies of the journal were not on the desks of members, as the rules provided, and that the rules would have to be suspended. A vote to suspend the rules revealed the fact that there were sixty members in the house, 48 of whom voted aye and 12 no. There not being sufficient votes to suspend the rules the motion was lost, but the house by unanimous consent decided to proceed with business, and the journal was read.

Mr. McAllister moved that the house adjourn until 10 o'clock the following morning, out of respect to the memory of the late, lamented Gen. George Washington. This, the house by a vote of 42 to 8 declined to do, and the reports of committees were read.

Tuesday Feb. 24.

SENATE.

A resolution introduced by Senator Stevens providing for a joint committee to investigate the state fish hatchery was adopted.

A bill introduced by Senator Stevens provides that, beginning with the general municipal election of 1892, the corporation attorney of St. Paul shall be elected by the people, the same as other city officers, and shall hold office for two years.

Senator Hompe presented a bill which requires that all personal references to people made by the newspapers, including discussions of their political views or actions, shall be signed by the writers in each and every instance.

Senator Dean's bill appropriating money to reimburse the city of St. Paul is for the purpose of securing payment for the pavement about the state capitol and grading along the state fair grounds. The amount called for is $11,172.70.

HOUSE.

After the reading of the journal and a brief but ineffectual petition by the chaplain, several protests from various railroad employes' brotherhoods and clubs were received and filed.

Mr. Ringwald asked that Mr. Dearing's bills be placed in general orders and stricken from the calendar, but his request was refused by a vote of 43 to 17. The failure of this move on Mr. Ringwald's part demonstrated that the house was inclined to favor Mr. Dearing's bills, and such being the case all opposition to the bills in the house ceased, and if they are to be fought over it will be in the senate.

The bill introduced by Mr. Barrett is to authorize the railroad and warehouse commissioners to appoint an expert to test and examine and adjust all scales, weights and measures used in grain elevators, mills and other places where grain is weighed in this state. It provides that any person changing the adjustment made by the expert or refusing him free access shall be liable to a fine of $100 for each offense. The salary of the expert is to be fixed by the railroad commissioners and paid out of the grain inspection fund.

Wednesday, Feb. 25.

SENATE

A large number of bills, mostly local, were passed, and the usual grist of new ones was introduced.

Senator Sanborn called up his pending motion of Tuesday to recall from the house the house bill passed by the senate making some changes in the Duluth charter in respect to water works. Senator Daugherty opposed the motion, accusing Senator Sanborn of acting on the floor of the senate as the attorney for the corporation owning the Duluth water works. Senator Sanborn promptly called him to order, and the statement was retracted by the Duluth senator. The motion, however, did not prevail, and the bill will go to the governor.

The senate voted to reconsider the vote to amend the report of the committee of the whole on the Itasca county bill. The report was then amended by a vote of 25 to 18 and the bill in its original form recommended to pass.

On motion of Senator Sanborn the bill appropriating money for a monument to the First Minnesota at Gettysburg was recalled from the finance committee and placed upon general orders.

Senator Dedon called up his resolution authorizing the labor and public lands committees to employ a clerk at a compensation of $5 per day, and it was passed.

HOUSE.

The principal business transacted by the house yesterday was the cold and cruel massacre of Mr. Bjorge's bill providing for the submission of the prohibition amendment to the people. The temperance committee, it appears, had held a meeting on the previous evening and by seven votes to four decided that the time was not ripe for prohibition.

The list of new bills introduced included several of considerable importance. Mr. Berning introduced a bill relating to violations of the liquor law of the state. The present law provides that for the illegal sale of liquor the violator is liable to both "fine and imprisonment," and Mr. Berning's bill changes it to "fine or imprisonment."

Mr. Gallagher's bill, which is to take the place of a bill previously introduced, relates to the maximum rate of fare to be charged to passengers on street cars. The bill provides that between the hours of 5 and 7 a. m. and 5 and 7 p. m. passengers shall be able to purchase fare checks at the rate of eight for 25 cents, and to use such checks between the hours specified, excepting on Sundays and public and statutory holidays.

Mr. Gallagher also introduced a bill to regulate the charges of the Mississippi Logging company for booming and rafting logs.

Another bill providing for the creation of a state text book commission was introduced by Mr. Wells.

Mr. Walsh's bill providing for an appropriation, not to exceed $1,500, for the carving of a marble bust of the late Gen. Sibley, to be placed in the state capitol, was passed under a suspension of the rules.

Thursday, Feb. 26.

SENATE.

Senator McMillan introduced a resolution providing for the payment of $1,294.50 to Senator O'Brien for contest expenses. It was referred to the committee on claims.

Senator Kelly presented a resolution authorizing the chairman of the engrossment committee to appoint a clerk at $5 per day. Senator Geissel moved to amend by including as a part of the duties of the clerk the work of the insurance committee. The amendment was accepted, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

THE INTEREST QUESTION.

The hour of 10:30 having arrived, which was fixed as the time for the consideration of Senate Files 1 and 375, regulating rates of interest, as a special order, Senator Leavitt moved to take up No. 375, which is the substitute bill presented by the committee on banks and banking. Senator Davis moved an amendment that No. 1 be considered at the same time. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 22 to 25—a strict party vote. The motion to take up No. 375 was then adopted.

Senator Leavitt opposed the motion to substitute, and Senator La Due contended that his section of the country demanded that no reduction of interest should take effect until next fall.

Senator John Day Smith said he was in favor of straight 6 and 8 per cent, but would not vote for 5 per cent nor for forfeiture of principal for usury.

Senator Sanborn said he was in favor of the usury law, but thought the legal rate of interest without contract should be left at 7 per cent. He would be willing, however, to reduce the contract rate to 8 per cent.

Senator Tawney moved to amend by making the penalty for usury a forfeiture of the interest, and in addition to this making it a penal offense. The amendment was defeated by a vote of 21 to 24.

Before a vote could be reached on any other proposition the senate adjourned.

The discussions of the same special order will continue this morning at 10 o'clock.

HOUSE.

The house had a lively session yesterday, indulging in half a dozen spirited debates on bills on general orders, and also discussed and hung up Mr. Bjorge's bill for the abolition of capital punishment. The West Duluth incorporation bill was also discussed for a couple of hours, but no recommendation was made and it will probably come up again and be either passed or rejected this morning.

The first part of the morning session was taken up with the introduction of bills, several of which possess features of general interest.

Another of Mr. Searles' bills is to regulate the employment of convicts in the reformatory, and the only change it proposes in the existing law is a provision that not more than twenty-five convicts shall be employed in the work of quarrying, cutting and dressing granite, the object being to limit the output of prison-cut granite.

Mr. Currier introduced a bill providing for the licensing of auctioneers and others selling fire and bankrupt stocks of goods who are not permanent residents of the town where the sale takes place. The object of the bill is to protect permanently established merchants from the competition of such sales. The license is fixed at from $50 to $500.

When the house reassembled at 2 o'clock it took up, as a special order, Mr. Bjorge's bill, house file 222, providing for the abolition of cabital punishment. Mr. Kinney was called to the chair, and Mr. Bjorge moved that the bill be recommended to pass. Mr. Feig moved that it be indefinitely postponed. Before tht question was put Mr. Bjorge made an earnest appeal to have his bill become law.

Mr. Galligher favored the bill and cited the case of Pete Barrett to show that innocent people were hanged for murder. Mr. McAllister followed suit. Mr. Walsh of Hennepin believed that great crimes should meet with great penalties and that life imprisonment was but a farce.

Mr. Bjorge, in introducing the debate, said he could not see in what way the state was benefited by the execution of a murderer. He held that many great criminals were turned loose on the community because the death punishment was so severe and so serious that juries hesitated to ask for its infliction.

The motion to indefinitely postpone the bill was then put and carried by a large majority.

Friday Feb. 27.

SENATE.

When the senate began its session Senator Donnelly desired to introduce some bills, and moved to suspend the special order until 11 o'clock. The motion was lost by a vote of 32 to 16.

The special order was then continued, the question being upon the substitute of Senator Sevatson, making the interest 6 and 7 per cent. and leaving the usury law as it now exists.

When the special order was taken up again the first question was upon the motion of Senator Sevatson to reconsider the vote on the first section of S. F. No. 1.

The vote was then taken, and the motion was lost by a vote of 23 to 27.

The vote then came upon the amendment of Senator Davis, and it went down by a vote of 20 to 30.

There were several other amendments and the main questions to be voted upon yet under the previous question, but the senate adjourned without taking the votes. The consideration of the question will be continued this morning at 10 o'clock, when voting under the previous question will proceed until the main question is disposed of. But as the report to the senate will still be open to discussion and amendment the question will probably take up the whole day.

HOUSE.

The first business of the morning session was the hearing of a large number of petitions, the most important being one urging the house to raise the age of consent.

Mr. Smith offered a resolution which was passed requiring the court house commissioners of Hennepin to furnish to the chairman of the Hennepin delegation copies of all contracts and papers relating to the new court house.

Several dozen bills were returned by the committee on local bills and ordered placed on the calendar.

A resolution, introduced by Mr. Carleton, asking for a committee of three to investigate H. F. 278, Mr. Carleton's bill amending the law relating to steam boilers, was held over for debate.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

THE PEOPLE'S "SUPERB CONDITION."

A few months ago Mr. Chauncey M. Depew, while hobnobbing with other nabobs in Europe, publicly declared that the condition of the American people is "superb." From the standpoint of a money king who knows little and cares less about the real condition of affairs in this country, it doubtless looks that way. Such men never probe below the surface of society and try to find out how people live, what are their resources, their prospects. their opportunities, their struggles for existence. With the railroad kings, the Wall street gamblers, and the great land monopolists, the condition is generally "superb." But how is it with the toiling, struggling millions? Let us, for example, consider the condition of the poorer classes, in the larger cities of the United States. I mean those who are honest, sober, and willing to work for a living. Mr. Depew must know, or he ought to know, that ten or a dozen of our larger cities contain hundreds of thousands of such persons who live from hand to mouth, and are constantly struggling with all their might to keep starvation at bay, and whose best efforts bring results only sufficient to prevent them from becoming absolute paupers. The New York Tribune says that in crowded districts of that overcrowded metropolis, hundreds of human beings are slowly dying from lack of sufficient nourishing food. The Sun says that 40,000 working women in that city are trying to exist on wages so small that they will in all probability be driven by necessity to crime or lives of shame. In the tenement house districts, 290,000 persons to the square mile are crowded into tenements and compelled to exist in conditions that are not conducive to physical health, moral culture nor intellectual development. In every one of our large cities, and in most of the smaller ones, thousands who have labor to sell find the labor market glutted. In a land of plenty there is want; in a land of industry there is enforced idleness; in a land of prosperity there is misery; in a land of glittering wealth there is pinching poverty; in a land of boastful freedom there is abject slavery. And especially marked are these contrasts in our large cities.

And what is the condition of the farmers—a very numerous class, and a class whose interests are at the bottom of all national prosperity? A few facts and statistics, gathered from trustworthy sources, will tend to indicate the "superb condition" of the American farmers.

The Banker's Magazine is authority for the statement that the farm mortgages of Kansas amount to $235,000,000; those of Indiana, $640,000,000; of Iowa, $567,000,000; of Michigan, $500,000,000; of Ohio, $1,431,000,000. At 6 per cent., $200,000,000 would be required to pay the interest on these mortgages, as the total in the five States is $3,431,000,000. By a little figuring I find that this grand total of mortgage indebtedness on farm property in only five States exceeds by $1,846,000,000 the entire national debt, principal and interest, as reported at the close of the fiscal year ending the 30th of last June. What a "superb condition," and what a glorious outlook for the farmers of those States! And their circumstances are a fair sample of what prevails in nearly all the other agricultural States. Statistics of the agricultural bureau of Illinois show a decrease in the value of farms and farm property in that State during the past year of $4,000,000. Governor Campbell, Ohio, who is a farmer, says the depreciation of the same kind of property in his State, in the past ten years, aggregates $80,000,000. The tenth census showed that the United States contained one million and twenty-five thousand tenant farmers; and surely the number has increased rather than decreased since 1880. Hugh McCullough, the great Republican financier, who was Secretary of the Treasury under two administrations, declares that while rents in cities and large towns are steadily increasing, agriculture has become so depressed that good farms offer no inducements to tenants to hire them at a rental of 6 per cent. on one-third of their assessed value.

An in this connection it is pertinent to inquire, who owns and controls most of the available land which rightfully belongs to all the people? Largely it is in the hands of wealthy landlords, greedy speculators and grasping syndicates. The Schenley estate owns 2,000 acres within the limits of Pittsburgh and Allegheny cities, from which the heirs draw $1,000,000 rent annually. Vanderbilt owns 2,000,000 acres, Murphy, of California, 4,000,000 (equal in area to the State of Massachusetts); Disston, of Pennsylvania, 4,000,000; the Standard Oil Company, 1,000,000, and railroad companies own 210,000,000. Then there are 21,000,000 owned by foreign noblemen, who are not citizens of the United States, owe no allegiance to our government and spend their money elsewhere. A striking instance of this kind is "Lord" Scully, of Ireland, who owns (according to our laws) 90,000 acres of farm lands in Illinois. These lands he parcels out to small tenants, who work like slaves for a bare living, and turn over the bulk of their earnings to their foreign landlord, his income from that source being $200,000 per annum. In 1860 the producers of the United States owned 43 per cent. of the wealth; in 1870, 36 per cent.; in 1880, only 20 per cent.; in 1890—don't mention it! More land is owned by railroad companies than would make six States as large as Iowa. Since 1861 no less than 181,000,000 acres of land have been given to railroad companies—of which the Illinois Central got a subsidy of 2,500,000 acres. Facts like these could be multiplied almost indefinitely, but enough have been presented to show what a "superb condition" the American farmers are in, and why they are in it.

But if the farmer's condition is not really "superb," perhaps that of the average business man is. I hardly think so, however. The average annual profit of legitimate business is only two and a half per cent., and the newspapers are constantly teeming with reports of business failures in every line, while landlords who hold tightly to natural opportunities are fattening on "unearned increment."

But perhaps it is the American wage-worker whose condition is "superb." Let us look into his condition a little, and see. I have been doing a little figuring in that direction and the result is as follows: Over against the popular fallacy that the wage-worker can, if he will, by his own efforts, become a millionaire, and thus be able to purchase a seat in the United States Senate, we find the cold fact that the average pay of the American wage-worker is only one dollar a day. On this basis, if he lives like a Chinaman, is never ill, indulges in no holidays, and works 313 days in the year for 100 years, he can accumulate the princely sum of $7,800. To become a millionaire he would have to live, and toil, and economize in the same way for 1,500 years. Is not the outlook glorious?

But perhaps Mr. Depew, in characterizing the condition of the "American people," did not really refer to the masses. He must have had in mind only a select few "superb" souls like Gould, whose income is $7,000 a day; Vanderbilt, whose daily revenue is $15,000; Rockefeller, whose personal receipts are $18,000 a day; Astor, whose "earnings" are $23,000 a day. And very likely he also included the twenty-four United States Senators whose wealth aggregates $153,000,000; and a few other moneyed aristocrats who, in becoming immensely rich, have compelled thousands to become wretchedly poor. Men who, taking advantage of a bad social system, have trampled on human rights, subsidized the press, corrupted the courts, put justice in irons and crowded industry to the wall. Yes, I see! The condition of those men is "superb"—viewed without reference to the great hereafter. But they are not the "American people," Mr. Depew, and you know it. And when you told your European cronies that the people of this country were in a "superb condition," you were either ignorant of the facts or you deliberately lied. Such talk is a cruel mockery, for which you ought to hide your face in shame.

In conclusion I would add this prediction: There must be a change for the better in your social system, and that soon. We all hope the change may come through peaceful methods; but come it must.—Ralph E. Hoyt.

Taxation in Germany.

The latest improvement in legislation proposed by the Emperor William II. of Germany is in the line of taxation. He proposes to remit a part or all of the income tax in the case of men whose incomes are less than $750 a year, the remission being in proportion to the number of children such men have; so that a man who has five or six children is to pay no income tax at all. But as Germany is not troubled with a surplus in the treasury, the Emperor proposes to increase the income tax in the case of those whose incomes are more than $750 a year. It is not necessary to say that this latter part of the proposition is meeting with vigorous opposition. It would, indeed, be a most unheard of thing if an income tax really were made to bear heavily on the rich. There is said to be a chance that the Emperor will dissolve Parliament and appeal to the country on this issue, in case his views are not legislated into effect. Emperor William has evidently got clear and correct ideas on one important phase of the taxation problem. He thinks children are a good thing, and he therefore proposes to so regulate taxation as to encourage the increase of population. Now, when the Emperor sees that wealth is a good thing, we may expect to see him regulate taxation so as to encourage the increase of wealth, which means, of course, that "the labor Emperor" will be a single tax Emperor.

State Ownership of Land.

James A. Bradley, the founder of Asbury Park, is going to sell the whole of the beach there to the town for $150,000. He says he could have obtained a larger sum for it, but he accepted Henry George's theory and wants the town to become the owner of the property. He does not, however, intend to sell the rest of his land; as he can not become a martyr to the cause and undertake, all alone, to inaugurate the progress of transferring land to the State, though he thinks the State ought to own the land. If Mr. Bradley understood the Single Tax theory fully he would find that individual action in the line indicated is not required and that it is not necessary or even desirable that the State shall "own" the land. The George theory contemplates permanent private possession, conditioned on the payment to the State of the value of the opportunity thus held by an individual. The best thing that a man like Mr. Bradley can do is to use any surplus income he derives from land-holding toward aiding the movement that will give to the public the income derived from land.

Where Land is Dear, Men are Cheap.

In the new settlements, where land is cheap, you will find no beggars, and the inequalities in condition are very slight. In the great cities, where land is so valuable that it is measured by the foot, you will find the extremes of poverty and of luxury. And this disparity in condition between the two extremes of the social scale may always be measured by the price of land. Land in New York is more valuable than in San Francisco; and in New York, the San Franciscan may see squalor and misery that will make him stand aghast. Land is more valuable in London than in New York; and in London, there is squalor and destitution worse than that of New York.—Progress and Poverty.

WE propose to substitute for the present system of taxation a system of taxation that will not discourage enterprise, that will not fine and punish industry, that will not require any one to come up and take an oath, that will not necessitate an army of spies and a horde of tax gatherers.

With the Left Hand.

The bank clerks are so often called upon for directions that they fall into the habit of giving them in a hurried and mechancial manner, consequently they are frequently misunderstood. The usual formula when a stranger is called upon to sign his name is: "Sign there—pen and ink at your left hand." One day not long ago a stranger entered one of the large banks and asked for a certificate of deposit for a considerable roll of money which he handed over. The clerk counted the money found the amount to be as stated, and hurriedly said: "Sign there, sir—pen and ink at your left hand." It appeared to the clerk that it took the stranger a long time to sign his name. but he thought nothing more of it and issued the certificate of deposit. About a week later the same man reappeared and presented the certificate. As the clerk sees so many faces each day he did not remember this man when he asked him to sign his name. He dashed off an ornate signature which the clerk proceeded to compare with the first signature. The two were vastly different, as the first one was apparently the labored effort of an old man. "I can't pay you this money, sir," said the clerk. "Why not?" asked the astonished stranger. "Because this is not the signature of the man to whom I issued the certificate of deposit," was the reply. "Is he your father or grandfather?" The stranger was dumfounded. "When I was here you told me to write my name with my left hand, and I did so, but I can't write that way." A light dawned in upon the clerk now. "Will you write your name with your left hand now?" he asked, The man labored hard and produced a fac-simile of his first signature, and the clerk apologized and paid him his money.—Chicago Herald.

Ostriches in America.

There are certain old traditions about the ostrich which, I have been told by the owner of the California ranch, are fallacious. He says that the ostrich does not bury his head in the sand and imagine he is unobserved by his enemies. On the contrary, he is a very pugnacious bird, and always ready for a fight. Nor does the female ostrich lay her eggs in the sand for the sun to hatch them. To do them justice, they are quite domestic, and deserve a better reputation. Nor is the ostrich ever used for riding, as he has an exceptionally weak back; any person might break it with a blow from an ordinary cane.

His strength lies in his great breast and his feet. He has one great claw, and a very small one, and with a terrible precision he can bring down the large claw with a cruel force that will tear open anything not made of sheet-iron.

Savage birds at best, they are dangerously so during breeding time. The twenty-two birds brought to our California ranch trusted to their instinct, and laid their eggs during the California winter, which corresponded to their summer south of the equator. It being the rainy season, their nests were filled with water and the eggs were chilled; so the first season of their American sojourn was a failure.

The ostrich makes its nest by rolling in the sand and scooping out a hole some 6 feet in diameter, and, excepting an incubator house, the California ranch requires no buildings for the use of the birds, though the land is devided off into pens fenced in, each about an acre in extent, for the use of the breeding birds, every pair occupying one such inclosure.

The ostriches live upon alfalfa and corn. Alfalfa is a grass cultivated all over the ranch; it resembles our clover, and grows to a crop some six times a year.—Anna Eichberg King.

Almost Through.

A country editor, who was not supposed to be rich, built himself a modest cottage. The neighbors were all interested, and naturally made frequent inquiries as to how the building was progressing. The editor finally tired of being asked whether the plastering was dry yet, whether he expected to move this week, etc. As he expressed it, he could not appear in the street without somebody's asking:

"How's the house getting along?"

One day he was quite out of patience, and just then a subscriber asked:

"Well, Mr Barnes, have you moved into your new house yet?"

"We began this morning," answered the editor; "I carried over a chair, and a salt-cellar, and left the dog in the yard."

"Well, well," said the subscriber, "moving is bad business; I'm glad you've got so near through with it."

Boston Ways Ridiculed.

From the New York Sun.

The way some Boston folks disregard the feelings of their neighbors among whom they chance to be thrown is positively shocking. One family from the Hub, temporarily living in Fifty-third Street, regularly every Saturday afternoon sets its pan of beans out to cool on the second-story window ledge right over its front door, and directly under the eyes of the passengers of the elevated road. This would undoubtedly be the regular thing in Boston, but New York laughs at it.

A DIMPLED STORY.

The Pleasant Results of a Ten-Cent Investment on the Street.

A young Brooklyn Benedict sauntered down Nassau street several months ago in a reverie. He was thinking of his home across the bridge, An interesting event was soon to happen there, and he was on his way to a fruit store to buy some dainties for his young wife. His face beamed with happy anticipation of the thanks of the little women who awaited his return. He pushed through the crowd of pedestrians without heeding anything or having the train of pleasant fancies diverted until he passed a young Italian image peddler. The Italian's stock of plaster work was displayed in a high doorway out of the way of the busy throng. The sunbeam lighted up the statuettes. The Benedict looked down at them, walked on a few steps, then turned back. Two tiny busts had attracted his attention. One represented a boy crying, with his cap pulled away over his right eye. The other was a dimpled-cheek girl laughing. They captivated the young Benedict's fancy.

"Tena centa," replied the peddler, his face lighting up gayly at the prospect of a purchase.

"All right. I'll take 'em," the Brooklynite said, and when the peddler had wrapped them in an old newspaper he tucked them in his overcoat pocket and continued on his way to the fruit store. He hid the images when he got home, and without his wife's knowledge placed them upon the mantel in the dining-room, where she would see them the first thing in the morning. "It will be a little surprise," he thought. The plan worked to perfection. The mistress of the household gave a little cry of delight as she caught sight of the girl's head.

"What pretty dimples," she said, when the young Benedict came down to breakfast.

"Yes, rather pretty for the price. I thought you'd like 'em," the husband replied.

In two months time the happy event that the household had been looking forward to had happened. A good-natured girl baby had come to further distract the Benedict's mind from the dry details of business. He had weeks before forgotten the trifling purchase from the humble Nassau street art purveyor.

A week later the healthy infant looked up at the ceiling and smiled. Her fat cheeks creased into two unmistakable dimples. The Benedict laughed, He was immensely tickled. The dimples looked as pretty as could be and he was proud of the fact.

"But where on earth did the dimples come from?" he said. "There haven't been any in our families."

"A happy whim of nature, I suppose," said the young mother, and she kissed each dimple several times.

The Benedict went down to dinner alone half an hour later. His eye chanced to scan the mantel and rested on the five-cent bust of the laughing girl.

"By George!" he fairly shouted, "there are those dimples now—the very ones. Well, I call that about the best investment of a dime I ever made."

It was another illustration of the whims of nature. The dimples had captivated the young wife. She saw them daily. They had made a lasting and pleasing impression upon her mind, and, as often happens, what the mother most admired had been reproduced in her child.

"It's lucky it wasn't a boy," said the Benedict, philosophically. "It might have been a crier of the worst description."—New York Sun.

The Song that Reached Their Hearts.

A gentleman who was recently at a small-hour banquet relates: "It is astonishing how many business men are good singers. You will find more men who can sing than you will find women. At the affair of which I speak there were representatives from nearly every foreign country, our own countrymen, of course, predominating. And most of those present were singers. A young student from Heidelberg gave us in its native tongue. 'The Watch on the Rhine,' for which, of course, he received the customary recognition. An Englishman sang 'Annie Laurie,' an Irishman 'The Harp That Once Thro' Tara's Hall,' and a Frenchman the 'Marseillaise.' Each one of these songs was as well rendered as I ever heard it, and I know they were all appreciated. Then some one gave us 'America.' It diden't quite hit, in some way. A young man with one of those ringing tenor voices started the "Star Spangled Banner.' Before he reached the chorus every man was on his feet, and each one was waving his napkin, and each one was singing with all his might. They went over it again and again, and I never heard such singing in my life. That was the song that reached their hearts."—Philadelphia Press.

Shakespeare in Germany.

The Neue Theater Almanach for 1891 contains tables showing the frequency of the performance of certain classes of plays in German theaters during the last nine years. From these it appears that, altogether, Shakespearian plays were performed 822 times in the year 1889, 751 times in 1888, 717 times in 1887, and 679 times in 1886. In 1881 they were performed 795 times, which is attributed to the influence of the Meiningen plays. Of late years, especially the most popular play seems to have been "Othello," which during the nine years, 1881-9, was performed 837 times; next comes "Hamlet," with 816 performances, and "The Merchant of Venice," with 695 performances. The plays most seldom performed were "All's Well that Ends Well," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor," each of which had only a single performance during the nine years.

Official Paper of the City.

Jas. Meehan, Jr. Editor and Prop.

Nothing will tend to create a system of American landlordism more radidly than the reduction of the rate of interest—no more money will come but the farm that is mortaged must go.

Some member of our legislature might make his name ring in the annals of Minnesota and have it appear in golden letters before the male portion of postisity if he would have a code of rules appear on our statute books regulating the game of tiddledy winks. Here is a chance for some of our members to pull themselves out of obscurity.

The Crookston Times, smarting under the sting generated by a criticism of the boodle commissioners, says we have had sault rubbed into our wounds. If we had partaken of as much porridge as our contempory we might have that memorable Scotch malady commonly called itch—perhaps brother McKinzie's condition is father to the thought and he is therefore excusable for referring to our wounds.

The alliance legislation is responsible for a great many evils about to befall the farming community; they are making a most ignominious failure of legislation. The democrats would have done better to ally themselves with the republicans. Some of the bills introduced are enough to put the stump of imbicility upon the authors. Already the interest muddle is preventing capital from the channels through which it has flowed into the northwest. Now is a time when the farmers of the northwest need money. Who will sufier, is it not the farmer whose mortgage is about due? Business is impaired—the farmer with his family is driven from his home and all because some extremist is not satisfied to let well enough alone.

When a newspaper speaks the sentiments of the people in criticism of officials the editor is sat down upon and dubbed a "kicker" by a few of the profession who have been subsidized and are receiving financial life from the coffers of the tax payers. In a county as large as Polk where the actions of the county officers may be overlooked, from the standpoint that, what is everyone's business is not the business of anyone, it is meet and proper that public criticism be given in order to put the judge of restraint upon men, who, holding public position, are prone to forget the trust that is reposed in them. The people of Polk county have just reason to be suspicious of some of their commissioners. There are hundreds of chances to steal It has been done in the past. To some men the crime of stealing rrom a municipality is not so great as stealing from an individual—but when an official misapproppriates a dollar of the people's money he should be advertised. The people support newspapers, that the actions of officials may be made known Praised when praise is due—condemned when they require condemnation. Were it not for the newspapers the officials could go on ad finitum robbing the people. Now they are deterred from the fear of having their actions exposed much like the man who is deterred from committing murder owing to the fear of punishment.

The Crisis in Canada.

At this writing, of course, no one can tell the result of the contest now impending in Canada. The suddenness of the dissolution, the unpreparedness of the Liberal party for the contest, the unfavorable season for voters to get to the pole are all adverse circumstances. Against this, however is the educational process which has been going on for the last four years, and the fact that the personal and individual interest of a greater number of persons are more adversely affected in Canada by present political conditions than is the case in any other country at the present moment. This especially applies to the great class of farmers, lumberman, fishermen, miners, and shippers, together forming the vast majority of the people of the Dominion. These men, if they vote as their interests point, will decide the question, and the victory will be overwhelmingly in favor of Unrestricted Reciprocity. At the present moment it looks as if this would be the case, and thus duplicate the political upheavel that took place in the United States in November last. If the Tory party, however, should succeed in the election, which will now be decided within a few days, it can only be for a brief period, for already the seeds of disintegrationa resown. Three or four years of such object-lessons as the McKinley Bill enforces on one side of the border and the Canadian tariff reenacts on other side will have their legitimate outcome. The forces thus at work towards a better relation are irresistible; and if the Liberal party are defeated at this time, the next election, which is likely to be very early in the history of the country, will tell a different tale. Great bodies move slowly; great moyements take a long while to accomplish the results with which they are pregant; and it will not be suprising if the attempt to heal the great schism of the Anglo-Saxon race by the assimilative results of intimate trade relations, is for a time postponed by Tory tendencies—Erastus Wiman, in North America Review for March.

Merit Wins.

We desire to say to our citizens, that for years we have been selling Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Dr. King's New Life Pills, Bucklin's Arnica Salve and Electric bitters, and have never handled remedies that sell as well, or that have given such universal satisfaction. We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. These remedies have won their great popularity purely on their merits. W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

He Saved Something.

We meet many peculiar characters in this world. I ran across a man once—and he was a man of intelligence and a man of splendid family, wealthy and all that—who lost his wife, and who, in telling me of his bereavement, said:

"Well, I will save something out of the wreck. I can wear her stockings. See here," and he rolled up his pantaloons. Sure enough, there were women's stockings of fine texture and reaching away above the knee. He proceeded to explain that he had bought her several pairs at $2 each just a week before she died, but she had never had any use of them, and he would have to wear them out, though he was sorry he had bought them.

The idea was so funny that it was all I could do to keep from laughing right out, as the saying is, but the man was so very serious that I repressed the inclination to do so. I told him it was sad, but as long as he could save something out of the wreck by wearing his dead wife's hosiery he was not in such a bad fix, but still he could not see the ludicrous side of his narrative.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure.

Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, and in the payment of the debt secured thereby, which said mortgage bears date July 31st 1882, and on said date was duly executed and delivered by Samuel Meunir, mortgagor, to the Colonial and United States Mortgage Co., (Limited) mortgagee, a corporation duly organized, and authorized to transact business in Minnesota, and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of register of deeds in and for the county of Polk, Minnesota, on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1882 at 4:45 o'clock p. m. in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 5?8, 509 and 510. That thereafter, to-wit: On the 16th day of August, 1887, said mortgagee, for value received, sold and duly assigned said mortgage to Albert W. Knaak, by an instrument in writing duly executed and delivered on said date, which said assignment was duly recorded in the register of deeds office in said Polk county, Minnesota, on the 5th day of September, 1887, at 11 o'clock a.m., in book 32 of mortgages, on page 410.

And whereas, there is now claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, the amount of four hundred and seventy-six dollars, together with the additional amount of seventy-two dollars, paid by said asignee for taxes on the premises described in said mortgage, and interest on the taxes so paid, which amount is also claimed as a lien on said premises and secured by said mortgage and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been had or instituted to recover the debts secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and therewith recorded, which by reason of the default above mentioned, has become operative, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the land and premises described in and covered by said mortgage, to-wit:

The fractional north-west quarter (¼) of section number three (3), being the south half of said northwest quarter (nw¼) and lots numbered three (three) and four (4), government subdivisions of said section three, (3) in township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of range number forty-two (42) west, containing one hundred and fifty nine 16-100 acres, and situated in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage and debt secured thereby, taxes and interest, together with all foreclosure expenses and lawful disbursements including twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, stipulated to be paid in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Polk county or his deputy, at the front door of the First National bank in the village of Red Lake Falls in said county of Polk, Minnesota, on Saturday, the 14th day of March, 1891, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of that day.

Dated Dec. 5th, 1890.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

His Rise.

He bought a brand new pair of shoes,
He thought he'd get some spats;
He than discovered that he lacked
The latest thing in hats.

He bought one. Then his trousers bagged;
He ordered two new pair,
And than, st range facts! he noticed that
His seat was quite threadbare.

He bought another. Then he saw
Some waistcoats. Just the thing!
He had to get some ties to match;
He bought a diamond ring.

He joined three clubs. He bought a horse,
Then changed it for a team;
He bought a sailing yacht at first,
And then moved up to steam.
He bought these things, and many more,
This man so great and wise;
For during his career he had
The sense to advertise.

No Love Like the Old Love.

There is no friend like the old friend, who has shared our morning days,
No greeting like his welcome, no homage like his praise.
Fame is the scentless sunflower, with gaudy crown of gold.
But friendship is the breathing rose, with sweet in every fold.

There is no love like the old love, that we courted in our pride,
Though our leaves are falling, falling and we're fading side by side,
There are blossoms all around us, with the colors of our drawn,
And we live in borrowed sunshine when our day star is withdrawn.

We would be glad to see every newspaper in the state attack the express and telegraph companies, the two greatest monopolies in the state, and see if they can awaken the consciences of the men in the legislature enough to give the people a little relief from the burdens extracted by these corporations. The express service is good enough, but its tolls are outrageous and merciless. But the telegraph service is bad—utterly bad—and its charges out of all proportions to the price of anything else. Let the legislature jump on these monopolies and regulate their prices,—as well as to require proper service.—Windom Reporter.

Celery, one of the most valuable of salad plants, grows to the highest excellence in Minnesota and the Dakotas. E. D. Childs ot Crookston Minn., informs us that he raises it in abundance, with as little labor as they do in Michigan, where fortunes have been made in its culture. Thousands of dollars worth of celery is shipped into Minnesota every year. So, to, with other products which will grow here. Let us stop the outward flow of money for things we can produce in our own midst.—Great Northern Bulletin.

The manager of the so-call Minnesota Farmers' Live stock Assocation met with a warm reception at Ada where he went to attend some of the company's suits. A large delegation of farmers who had been sued called upon the gentleman at his hotel and carried with them a rope with a hang man's noose in it. He was told that he must leave town or else they would be obliged to deal summarily with him. He left town and the actions were dismissed the next morning, the company waying the costs, Thirteen Towns.

No woman will love a man better for being renowned or prominent. Though he be the first among men, she will be prouder, not fonder; as it is often the case she will not even be proud. But give her love, appreciation, kindness, and there is no sacrifice she will not make for his content and comfort. The man who loves her well is her hero and king—no less a hero though he is not to any other, no less a king though his only kingdom is her heart and home. The Atlanta Constitution.

The growth of the WEEKLY CONSTITUTION has been phenomenal. Its history accurately written, would read like a romance. Six years ago it had less than 10,000 subscribers. To-day it has over 153,000 regular paid up subscribers. It is decidedly a paper for the people. The fact that its circulation has increased so rapidly shows in what estimation it is held by the public.

It is Democratic to the core and uses its best influence in maintaining that doctrine. As a newspaper we do not think there is one on the American continent that gives fuller and better reports of what is occurring in not only the South, but throughout the United States and the world. It has twelve to sixteen pages chock full of the best reading matter.

Mr. Joel Chandler Harris writes regularly for it.

Mr. Wallace P. Reed, the South's great story writer, contributes an articles each issue.

Bill Arp's weekly letter affords amusement for thousands.

Plunkett's letters are entertaining and instructive. One letter alone is worth the price of the paper.

F. L. Stanton and Montgomery M. Folsom are its poet editors. Their genius will gladden the hearts of all who read its pages.

TRIALS OF A PREACHER.

One of the clergymen in the New York conference of the Methodist Episcopal church told this story about himself:

"When I was the pastor of a small church in Delaware county, this state, I had a hard time in trying to keep soul and body together. My labors were arduous and the salary only $400 a year, and if we had not received various donations of provisions from parishioners almost equally as poor as ourselves, we would in all probability have starved to death.

"It was what is known as a 'backwoods appointment,' being eighteen miles from a railroad and located in a valley created by thickly wooded hills. To give you an idea of our reduced circumstances, I am compelled to say that there was but one white shirt in the house, and that was shared in common by my eldest son and myself. When he wore it I went into the pulpit without one, and made up for the deficiency the best I could.

"One Sunday we had the presiding elder of the district with us. He had come the previous night. Early in the morning he was disturbed by this shrill question from my son:

" 'Father, father, who wears the shirt today—you or me?'

"Well, I was in doubt who was entitled to incase himself in that useful garment on that occasion, but in a spirit of self sacrifice I shouted from the confines of my room, 'I think it's your turn, my boy.'

"I thought no more about the matter until after breakfast and family prayers were over. Then the elder took me aside and asked if there was only one white shirt in the house. Of course it was an embarrassing question, and I tried to evade making a reply, but he was persistent and I finally was forced to admit the truth. Tears welled up in the elder's eyes, and he offered to part with some of his meager hoard of money, but I assured him that I did not need it, and as I refused absolutely to accept a cent he did not press the matter further.

"Still, although the elder was a kind hearted man and receiving but little more salary than myself, yet he loved to indulge in practical jokes. On another occasion he accepted an invitation to dine with us, and my wife, who always seemed to stand in awe of the big, dignified elder, made an extra effort to prepare a tempting repast. Oysters were scarce and very high in that section, and consequently a luxury, but my wife concluded that for once we should have oysters.

"Well, thanks to recent wedding fees, she was able to buy them. Then she exercised all her ingenuity to place them on the table in every conceivable form that would please the eye and gratify the taste.

"Well, when we sat down to the table we saw oysters stewed, oysters fried, oysters roasted, and oysters on the shell. It was literally a wilderness of oysters.

"Outside of oysters there was, in fact, but little to eat except bread, butter, apple sauce and, I believe, some sage cheese. Still the little woman sat with a beaming countenance, eagerly anticipating the elder's delight at the unexpected treat.

"After a blessing had been invoked I, as a matter of form, turned to our guest and inquired:

" 'Elder, will you permit me to help you to some of the oysters?'

"The elder's face assumed a severe expression as he slowly and deliberately replied:

" 'Well, dominie, I hate to say it, but the truth of the matter is I very seldom eat them.'

"I glanced at my wife. Her face was almost a crimson hue and tears were starting from her eyes. I think I felt just a trifle savage, but I betrayed no sign.

"After a few seconds of the most painful embarrassment I ever experienced the elder broke the silence by saying with unruffled deliberation:

" 'You see, dominie, I very seldom eat oysters, because I very seldom get them,' and he burst into a tremendous roar of laughter that almost made the dishes rattle.

"Of course he did ample justice to the dinner, which at the best was frugal enough, but I don't think that my wife ever quite forgave him for those painful moments of suspense."—New York Herald.

Names of Maine Islands.

In the course of my saunterings and cruisings the names of islands along the Maine coast impressed me frequently with their significance. There are, for instance, several Brown Cows grazing on the ocean field, the islands bearing, especially at a distance, a resemblance to the esteemed contemporary which our milkmen are supposed to see daily. More than once, deadly looking ledges I found were called The Graves. On one of these a wreck occurred within a few years.

The Porcupines at Bar Harbor are familiar and felicitously named islands, the Bald Porcupine being able to live up to its name without any difficulty. Islands and ledges at another point bear the unconventional titles of the Unbelievers and the Hypocrites. I have not been able to trace the origin of the former name, but I presume the Hypocrites may be so called from the fact that at high tide they are able to conceal their true and dangerous character.—Christian Union.

Though there are about fifteen or twenty stars whose distances have been conjectured, the astronomer knows that in reality all of them, save three or four, lie at distances too great to be measured by any instruments we have at present.

THE HOMESTEAD KITCHEN.

How bright and warm a place it was,
That quaint dear kitchen old,
Where burning logs defied the frost—
The breath of winter cold.

The tall clock from the corner dim
The nightly silence broke,
In tolling off the passing hours
With slow and measured stroke.

The apples quartered and festooned
On strings were hanging high,
And ears of golden corn were hung
Around the fire to dry.

'Twas there the busy mother made
Her doughnuts, pies and cake;
'Twas there she put the bread to rise,
And watched it brown and bake.

'Twas there the spinning wheel was heard
From early morn till night;
For there dear grandma spun and reeled
The fleecy wool so white.

A pretty picture grandma made,
With snow white hair and cap,
When weary with her work at times,
Her hands lay in her lap.

She dreamed no doubt of bygone days,
When life was new and sweet;
She doubtless heard the patter, too,
Of many little feet.

And now, as then, the children came
To her with griefs and joys;
And now, as then she kissed and rocked
The baby girls and boys.

The sunbeams played upon the wall
And danced upon the floor,
And lay in threads of golden light
From cracks around the door.

No longer swing these hinges now,
No merry children play,
No buzz of spinning wheel is heard
Throughout the livelong day.

For restless time has closed the door—
Has locked and barred it fast—
And only to the memory come
These visions of the past.

For as the winter snow falls soft,
It brings to mind at times
The pleasant scenes of long ago,
Like sweet low-whispered rhymes.

The featherly flakes that drift around
That dear, beloved place.
Tell to that kitchen, changing time
Can ne'er its joys efface.

JOSEPHINE CANNING, in Kansas Magazine.

MY TERRIBLE PLIGHT.

I HAD every reason to be a happy man on that July evening in 183—, when the mail train was swiftly carrying me from Liverpool to London. I was young my prospects were good, my business flourishing, and I was engaged to the girl of my heart—pretty Betty Davenport. Her name, by the way, was Eliza Ann, in complaint to a wealthy godmother. A dreadful combination, which its owner indignantly repudiated. Mr. Davenport was an engineer, and had lately returned from South America. Betty had the reputation of being a bit of a flirt, and there was a certain merchant at Buenos Ayres, James Andrews by name, whom her bright eyes and clear complexion had entirely vanquished. My sweetheart always looked serious when the merchant's name was mentioned. Poor fellow! On his side, at least, it was no idle flirtation. Since the fair English girl refused him he had neglected his business, and was on the high road to ruin.

Curiously enough, I had been mixed up with his affairs in a strange way. Though we had never met we knew each other by name and repute, and as we were both in the wool trade, I had been the unconscious means of discovering a big swindle, which he, as a last desperate resource, had planned to save him from bankruptcy. The attempt failed—he was ruined. And, by a strange irony of fate, the man who had won the girl he had wooed was instrumental in accelerating that ruin.

So my thoughts ran as the train thundered through the black night.

At Rugby another passenger got into my compartment, of which hitherto I had been sole occupant. I had read the evening paper down to the advertisments, and had reread Betty's last letter, so the prospect of a chat was a welcome one. The new comer seemed as much inclined for conversation as I was, and we were soon chatting away on the thousand and one topics in which men of the world are interested. A chance allusion of mine to South Africa elicitated the fact that he had spent some years of his life there, and this formed an additional reason for sociability. For, before I succeeded to my father's London business, I had spent two years in the neighborhood of Kimberly, prospecting for gold. Apropos of the wild state of some parts of the country, I incidentally remarked that the custom acquired there of traveling armed still clung to me, and I, when on a journey, always carried a pistol.

"I think it a very sensible one," returned my companion," one never knows when a six-shooter may not be useful. Would you let me see yours!"

It was an unusual request, and for the moment rather staggered me. And as he bent forward I noticed that his face was working curiously, and his outstretched hand trembled

The train slackened speed; we were stopping at a junction.

The porter came along the platform with his monotonous chant, "Change here for Chesham." He put his head in our carriage. "Either you gentlemen for Chesham?" No, we were both bound for London, so the man took himself off. But he looked rather startled, and well he might. By the light of the lantern he carried he had seen two men, one bent forward, pale and eager, the other holding a pistol.

I handed the stranger my pistol for inspection. It was a dainty thing; I was rather proud of it. My mate in South Africa had given it me, and my name was engraved on it.

"Horace Bligh," read my fellow traveler. "So you," with a steady flame in his great eyes, "are Horace Bligh!" "That is my name," I replied, rather disconcerted. The man's manner was certainly strange; he toyed with the pistol in a dangerous way, and we were going at the rate of fifty miles an hour. It was not a pleasant position to be placed in. I began to regret my folly in complying with his request.

I went on coolly, "Prehaps you had better return my property. Pretty thing is it not? but loaded, and therefore unreliable. You are handling it carelessly, and it might go off. It will be safer in my pocket." I reached out my hand in my turn, but my fellow-traveler deftly evaded me. I shall never forget the awful expression on his haggard face.

"So you are Horace Bligh. Well, I am James Andrews, the man you have ruined. Not only that, you have taken the girl I loved. I meant to have killed myself if I had the chance. I have it now, I have also the means of revenge. I could shoot you where you stand. But I will not; I reserve for you a more hideous fate. I will kill myself with your pistol and in such a manner that suicide will seem improbable. On you will fall the suspicion, nay, the certainty of guilt."

I rushed forward and tried to wrest the pistol from him. A brief struggle ensued in which he, endowed with maniac strength, threw me to the floor of the carriage. Before I could rise he placed the pistol in the middle of his forehead, fired, and fell dead.

For one moment horror at the tragic end of Betty's some-time lover banished all other thoughts. The next I noticed that we were slackening speed. I pulled down the window and thrust out my head. We were nearing the end of the journey. Like flashes of lightning, one thought after another rushed across my brain. He was dead—James Andrews; the man who had every reason to bear me enmity. He was dead. Shot through the brain with my pistol. What more likely supposition could there be than that in the heat of anger, of recrimination on his part, I had lost self-control, fired at and killed him!

Then ensued the most foolish action of my life. I leaped from the now almost motionless train on to the platform and ran up stairs into the street. I hailed a passing hansom, and told the man to drive to my chambers in Furnival's Inn. As he rattled through the quiet streets I congratulated myself on my escape from an unpleasant predicament. It was unlikely that the porter would remember my face, and if he did there was not a very great chance of discovery. The pistol Good God!—I lifted my hand to my pocket—it was empty. In the hurry of my impulsive flight I had left behind the evidence that would convict me—I had forgotten the pistol.

It was impossible to go home. They had my name; my address was in the Directory. I should be arrested before daybreak. I called to the driver to go to Leicester Square, stayed till closing time; then wandered about London. Then I went into a cafe, trying to decide on my plan of action. To fly the country was the first course that suggested itself. Then I remembered the vigilance with which the ports are watched when a supposed criminal is at large. So I wandered on for hours, wavering miserably. I would put a brave front on the matter, and confess my share in the tragedy; I would take train to Newhaven and cross to France; I would hide in some obscure part of London, and await the turn affairs took.

It was by this time past 8 o'clock and I was walking along the Hampstead road, weary and disheveled with my journey of the previous night, when a newsboy decided me. He carried a bundle of papers under his arm, a poster in front of him, and in black letters a foot long I read "Outrage on the Liverpool Line. Important clue to supposed murderer."

That poster shaped my course. I went into a barber's shop and had my mustache shaved off. Then I took a couple of rooms in a street near Kentish Town. Here I lived, lay quiet, so to speak, for three horrible days.

I had never earned the reputation of cowardice, yet the immediate result of that unhappy flight was my transformation into an object craven. I started violently at the landlady's tap at my door and a strange step on the stair. With the example of another case before me, a case which a short time before had greatly roused the public mind, I was afraid to keep entirely to the house least my landlady should suspect my identity and hand me over to the police. On the other hand, I ran a great risk in going out, for on every blank wall my own likeness confronted me. A thousand times I cursed my folly in acting as I did. And each day each new edition of the papers increased the difficulty of retrieving that folly. I read them all—that the police had an important clue, that two or three unlucky men had been arrested, to be promptly discharged when they proved their non-identity with my unhappy self. I read distorted accounts of my mode of life, full of faulty family histories. I was hiding in the East End; I had evaded the detectives and had reached Spain. Fortunately I was not in Porter street Kentish Town. And on the third night an evening paper mentioned that "the young lady to whom Mr. Bligh had been engaged was rendered prostrate by the blow which had fallen on her, and that her friends proposed taking her abroad."

The paper dropped from my hands. Ah, my bright Betty! What would I not give for a sight of her dear face!

And why should I not see her? I wrote an advertisment and sent it for insertion in the "agency column of the Times."

In the old happy days my pet name for Betty was "my maiden aunt." This sobriquet she earned from a certain sage way she had of giving me counsel and prettily advising in an elderly relative way, on business matters, etc., which she did not understand in the least. So my message ran thus: "If Maiden Aunt will call at 5, Porter street, Kentish Town, on Thursday, she will see her nephew who is in London for the day."

At 5 o'clock on Thursday the door of my sitting-room was thrown open and Betty, thickly veiled, ran in. Poor little girl! When I had bid her farewell at her father's house, a fortnight before she had been rosy and radiant, daintily dressed. Now her clothes were carelessly huddled on, her cheeks were thin and pale, her great blue eyes were dimmed and mournful.

Our conversation would not be of general interest, lover's dialogues rarely are, but before my sweetheart left me I had decided, come what might to make a clean breast of the matter.

Betty who was of the nervous, not the heroic type of woman, vainly tried to dissuade me.

"They will hang you, she [illegible] and kissed me wildly, "or sentence you to penal servitude for life. I know they will."

"Nonsense," I said, and tried to sooth her. They can't hang; they cannot even convict on such evidence. I was a fool, a madman, ever to shirk facing an inquiry. That was the blackest thing they have against me."

"Yes," cried the poor child vehemently, "and it is just black enough, combined with other things, to make them send you to prison, or," with a strong shudder, "worse."

"They have a really strong case. "There is the evidence of the porter, who saw you with the pistol in your hand, pointed at Andrews, so he says; only you tried to hide it when he came to the door. And the medical men say that though the suicide theory is possible, it is most unlikely, as when a man attempts self-destruction he invariably places the weapon at his temple or in his mouth. Not as Andrews did, in the middle of his forehead. It all reads very convincing, my poor boy, to people who do not know you are innocent, as I do."

"Stay here, Horace, and I will come and see you when I can. We are not going abroad."

"Is it possible," I cried, "it is cowardly, and Heavens knows I have been a coward enough already. Betty, I must be tracked. It is only a question of time. Do you know they are offering a reward for my apprehension?"

"Yes," she whispered, turning deadly white. "I saw the placards as I came along. There is one on a wall at the end of this very street."

"Be brave, Betty." I whispered, and wrung her trembling hands till she winced. "All will come right, and our wedding bells will ring before the New year yet."

"I must go now," she said. "I shall hardly be home in time for dinner, and mamma did not know I was coming to you."

Then she went away alone. She trembled so violently when I proposed to come part of the way with her that I was obliged to desist.

She asked wistfully when she should come again. I replied, almost jauntily, that Great Porter street would not contain me another day; that next time we met it would be with all our troubles at our back.

But my feelings were not so sanguine as my words. I was obliged, gloomily, to admit that the outlook was a bad one. Still, nothing was to be gained by hanging on at Kentish Town, waiting to be caught like a rat in a hole.

After my 6 o'clock tea, I went off for a long walk to cool my brain and arrange my thoughts. "By Jove!" I reasoned, as I neared a police station, "why not take the plunge tonight?" But I passed on and presently turned into a music hall.

Serio comic songs and marvelous acrobatic feats were not very much in, touch with my mood, so I was soon out of doors again, and on the top of a Hampstead omnibus, en route for my lodgings. Beside me sat a workingman. He was contemplatively sucking at a short clay, and from time to time he cast looks of interest in my direction. The idea occured that he was thinking of becoming a candidate for the thousand pounds reward. It had been a matter of grim wonder to me where people's eyes had been during the last few days; for, with the exception of shaving my upper lip, I had made no change in my personal appearance: And the features which stared from every boarding in London were really very much like mine.

I was mistaken, however, in my omnibus companion. He had no suspicion of the prize so near him. He spoke at last, and he said what ten men of his class would have said on that particular night.

"Strange affair—that on the Liverpool line. Do you think they'll catch him?"

"I hope," he went on, not waiting for my answer, "they won't, because that would make it rather unpleasant for me. Lord bless you! I could tell 'em something about that affair. I could let daylight in. But what I say is this—so long as that chap's at large why should I mix up with police courts? Of course, if they catch him, it's a different matter. It ud be my duty, then, as an honest man, to go forward. For, mark what I say, he's innocent, and I can prove it."

I could almost hear the thump, thump of my own eager heart.

I started and cried. "Have you not seen the evening papers?"

"Yes," replied my working friend, and produced a Globe.

I glanced at it anxiously. "Pooh! That is a first edition. My good man, you must make your statement this very night. Bligh is arrested."

He dropped his pipe in sheer amazement. "You don't say so. Then I'll get right down here; there is a police station in Henry street. Joe Williams isn't the man to keep his mouth shut when there's any good to be done by opening it."

I volunteered to go with him, and we clambered off the roof of the omnibus together. I was determined not to lose sight of him. All my future hung on the lips of that man.

"What do you know of the affair?" I asked curiously, as we went along.

Arrived at the station, my first care was to enlighten the inspector as to the ruse I had practiced on my companion.

This done, Joseph Williams, platelayer, told what he knew.

It is not necessary to quote him exactly, his mode of telling a story was a slow and bewildering one. Suffice it to say that he had traveled in the compartment adjoining that in which were Andrews and myself. He heard our raised voices, he heard a scuffle, and he opened his carriage door and crept along the footboard till he could look in at our window. There he saw me on the floor and Andrews with the pistol pointed at his head. He heard the report as Andrews fired, and saw him fall dead.

Just then a train was rapidly approaching on the up line. Williams saw his danger and returned as quickly as he could to his own carriage. Here he thought over the tragedy he had just witnessed. Clearly it was his duty to give information at the next stopping place. But his inclination ran in an opposite direction. His past was not a blameless one, and he shrank from entering the witness box and running the risk of having that little escapade of years ago dragged into the light of day. He reasoned thus—here am I, a respectable hard-working man. I have a wife and children, all of whom are ignorant of this dark chapter in my life. My mates, too, would look askance at me if they knew I had seen the inside of one of her Majesty's prisons.

Finally he compromised with his conscience. If at the end of the journey, or at any time, I was arrested, he would come forward, if not he held to the proverb—"A still tongue maketh a wise head."

So I was proved innocent, and the necessary formalities over was a free man.

And the first use I made of my liberty was to call at the red brick Kensington house to see Betty.

What a happy evening we spent! My sweetheart's roses were coming back, her blue eyes sparkled, her lace gown suited her to perfection. But with strange feminine pervesity she declined to show much gratitude towards Joseph Williams, platelayer.

"He could have come forward at once," she cried petulantly. "Just fancy, Horace! All this time you were hiding in that dreadful Porter street, all this time my heart was nearly breaking, that man could have ended it all, and yet he wouldn't."

"But, my darling, why thrust all the blame on him? He did not know that I was in Porter street, or that I had a tender-hearted little sweetheart, and the poor fellow had his own secret to protect."

* * * * * * * *

One more scrap of evidence came later on in the confirmation of William's story, though none it needed. A friend of the dead man's said Andrews had told him his difficulties were so great that suicide appeared to be the only way out of them. The words he used were—"If I had a pistol I would blow my brains out."

So the matter ended and was soon forgotten, and Betty and I are married now and very happy.

A Series of Events at Oppenheimer's,

Henry Oppenheimer, our genial blacksmith, was at work in the shop shoeing a horse, Wednesday, and his wife left the house to shoo the hens, leaving his little son Conrad alone with Nebuchadnezzar, the dog. Nebuchadnezzar got his head in the milk-pitcher and was unable to extricate it, Conrad was compelled to cut the head off to save the pitcher, and then he felt obliged to break the pitcher to get the head out. Henry Oppenheimer nearly lost his son Conrad. It was a close call for him when his ma came into the kitchen.—Gladstone Delta.

HINDO MAGIC.

Account of the Wonderful Feast Known as the Chinese Duck Trick.

"A few years ago I was stopping in the city of Allahabad, near the center of India, on the Indian Peninsula railway, giving performances in the Railway theater," says a traveler. "Every day a party of native jugglers were in the habit of visiting our hotel and exhibiting their skill on the plaza in front of the building.

"One day I was particularly attracted by an old Hindoo, his son and daughter, who squatted down on the ground and waited for the crowd of sight-seers to gather round. They did not have long to wait. When enough spectators had come to make the performance profitable the old fellow drew from the bag that all Indian jugglers use to convey their 'properties' in a small earthenware jar, filled with muddy water. He first sprinkled a few drops of water on the ground and then placed the jar upon three small stones, which he also took from the bag.

He then produced a small china duck and gave it to me for inspection. I found nothing noticeable about it. He asked me to put it in the water. I did so and it immediately sunk to the bottom. He next drew from the bag a small tomtom, a little musical instrument that emits a drumming sound when the handle is turned, and began waving it around the jar.

"Instantly the duck rose to the surface. He told me to touch it. I tried to do so, when the bird again disappeared, to reappear again and again at the juggler's will. I must confess that I was mystified. There was apparently no cause for the strange actions of the little bird. It was only after the third or fourth visit of the conjuror that I discovered the secret of the trick."

"It was a particularly bright, sunny day and I had chosen a place among the spectators slightly nearer than the others were allowed. I was behind the scenes, as it were. While attentively watching the trick I noticed in the sunshine the sparkle of a long hair that extended from the tomtom to the bottom of the jar."

"The moment I saw this I divined the juggler's secret, and I afterwards found that my theory was correct. The jar already contained a china duck, precisely similar to the one I had examined, save that it was buoyant. Attached to the breast of this duck was the hair. This hair came through a tiny hole in the bottom of the jar. The water was sprinkled on the ground to conceal any leakage. When the jar was placed upon the ground the hair was fastened so that the duck could not rise to the surface."

"As the juggler picked up his tomtom it was an easy matter for him to fasten the end of the hair to it by means of a bit of wax. After this was arranged you can see how easily he was able to make this counterfeit duck bob up and down at the work of command."

Fasting as a Cure-All.

The latest craze at the capital is fasting for dyspepsia and other diseases of the digestive organs. Dr. Fisher, the high priest of the starvation doctrine, is making more money than any other physician in town, though his perscriptions are very simple: "Don't eat anything for eight days," or ten days or fifteen, as the case may be, is the formula. Some of the most prominent society people of the city have fasted from ten to eighteen days, and they claim to have received benefit. Mrs. Harrison, who has been troubled by gastritis, is trying the fasting remedy in a modified form.— Washington special Chicago Herald.

A COOL-HEADED engineer prevented a disastrous collision near West Point, Miss., the other day. The telegraph operator neglected to hold a freight train as directed, and it was pulling out of the station when a passenger train, however, brought his train to an abrupt standstill. Leaping from the cab he jumped on the freight engine and stopped the train just two feet from his own.

THE uttter indifference of Chinamen to the sufferings of their fellow beings was well illustrated recently during the burning of a river steamer on the Yangtse Kiang River. A Chinese gunboat lay near the burning vessel, with steam up, and, notwithstanding the fact that over four hundred Chinese were imperiled, they made not the slightest attempt to save their countrymen but permitted them to perish like rats, while the few survivors who succeeded in reaching the shore were robbed of what little clothing they had.

VICTIMS OF FLOOD.

Several Hundred Human Lives Thought to Have Been Lost in the Rushing Waters.

YUMA, Ariz., March 3.—In this town over twenty-five houses are in ruins from the flood, 1,400 people are homeless, not a single business house remains standing and it is feared that hundreds of lives have been lost in the Gila valley. The telegraph wires are down into the valley and as all bridges are gone and roads impassable, no reliable reports can be had from there.

The river above town is seven miles wide and below the town in places the water covers the country in one grand lake over fifty miles across. The railroad company will not have the blockade raised for west-bound trains for four days, and it will be ten days or two weeks before they can get east. The town has provisions sufficient for eight more days and the Southern Pacific hotel is feeding a thousand people a day.

Reports from Jaquano, fifteen miles above here, are that the flood drove the people into the tree tops, and many becoming exhausted from cold and hunger dropped into the water and were drowned. Reports from reliable sources put the loss of life in the valley anywhere from 30 up to 100.

All along the valley for twenty miles everything is in desolation. Costly houses and barns have been washed away like playthings, while stock and fences have been carried down by the flood, leaving the country as bare as a desert. Men who ten days ago were wealthy are now homeless and paupers. Eighty miles south of here, where 5,000 Indians live, the country is flooded for eighty miles square, and as there are no hills for refuge it is reported that over one hundred of them have been drowned.

The great valley of the Colorado is one vast sea of water as far as the eye can see in every direction. The river has fallen six feet six inches in thirty-six hours and is now nearly at a standstill. The weather is thick and threatens heavy rains. The loss in this county foots up to over $2,000,000, of which the railroad will have to suffer to the extent of $250,000. Old Yuma will never be rebuilt. The town will go higher up the hills.

In the city the ruin has been most complete, the Catholic church being the only building left standing on the main street. The convent and adjoining school stood the wear of the waves for many hours, but finally crumbled into ruins. The Yuma Sentinel moved its office four times yesterday, but finally succeeded in getting out on the hill to-day. The Times was less fortunate, and its office and material went down in the wreck. There was a good supply of tents on hand, and these were at once placed at the disposal of the homeless families, and much suffering thereby prevented.

A boat which arrived yesterday from Mohawk, sixty miles up the Gilla river, brings reports of terrible loss of life, all the country being under water. The greatest sufferers are the poor Mexicans, whose entire possessions have been swept away and who have no reserves to fall back upon. There is yet a vast stretch of territory to be heard from, and every one fears that when full returns are in the loss of life will prove of appalling magnitude. Reports from the valley of the Colorado below this place state that hundreds of the Cocopal Indians have been drowned.

They are located about sixty miles south of here, and their tribe is about five thousand strong. Their villages are all on low land, and there are no hills on which the Indians could take refuge. An immense number of them must have been caught in the flood and swept away. The water rose six feet in twelve hours, and came on them almost without warning.

NO LOSS OF LIFE AT YUMA.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 2.—The report that there has been a great loss of life at Yuma appears to be without foundation. General Manager Towne, of the Southern Pacific, has been in communication with Yuma all day and he has heard nothing of any loss of life. The Southern Pacific has twenty miles of track washed out, and much of this is floating on top of the water. Three hundred men are repairing the track, and seven hundred will be put on to-morrow. It will take ten days to repair the damage. All the ranchers near Yuma were warned in time to escape to the high ground.

A MORMON SETTLEMENT DESTROYED.

MARICOPA, Ariz., March 2.—Mail advices from Phœnix dated Feb. 27, say the second rise in the Salt river yesterday was several inches higher than the last one. Neither Phœnix nor Tempe had material damage done them. The Mormon settlement of Lehi is nearly destroyed. The bridged at Florence is washed away, and the town is supposed to be flooded. Thirty miles of the Southern Pacific track west of Maricopa is under water.

LIKE A SLAUGHTER HOUSE.

CHICAGO, March 3.—Two men using the same stiletto on each other was the spectacle witnessed to-night in a saloon owned by John Stanoritz. In a row with a customer named Feanslie, the latter suddenly pulled a trusty steel and seizing Stanoritz by the throat, he plunged the point into the saloonkeeper's left eye, causing the organ to fall out on the cheek. The Italian then stabbed Stanoritz repeatedly in the head and breast. Stanoritz finally managed to get hold of the stiletto and he stabbed his opponent a number of times in the back. Officers succeeded in separating the pair before either was killed. The saloon to-night looked like a slaughter house.

Senator Hearst's Funeral.

WASHINGTON, March 3.—The funeral of the late Senator Hearst will be held on Thursday morning. It will take place at his late residence and the services will be brief and simple. On Thursday night or Friday morning the remains will be taken to the railroad station, deposited in a private car attached to a regular train and started on their way to San Francisco for the interment at that place. Mrs. Hearst and her son and possibly some intimate friends of the family will accompany the remains.

The Next Emperor.

ROME, March 3.—It is stated that Prince Napoleon has made a will, disinheriting his son Prince Victor and indicating Prince Louis as the next emperor. Prince Napoleon is reported slightly better. He took some food to-day.

Quite a Conversion.

PARIS, March 3.—A number of the committees of the Imperialist party met to-day and declared their adherence to the republic. A committee was appointed to prepare a programme to submit at a plenary meeting of the committee.

VERY LIKE A SWINDLER.

NEW YORK, March 3.—The police here have a man who says his name is Max Rothschild and who is said to have been doing business with dry goods men throughout the West.

The prisoner, who is about thirty-five years of age, has a little office at 344 Broadway and has a "drummer" traveling about the country offering to sell cotton goods at a rate 40 per cent cheaper than the goods could be purchased of any other parties. The drummer announced that he represented William Rothschild, who owned big cotton mills in Maine. The plan was to ask for money before the goods ordered were delivered. Into the trap many firms are said to have fallen. It remained for Kone & Kimball and Morris Campbell & Co. of Red Bluff, Cal., to give the needed pointers in the case to the police of this city. On this information Inspector Byrnes acted.

A reputable cotton firm—William Rothschild & Co., of 46 Howard street, has severely suffered through the prisoner's work. On the prisoner was found a check for $234 from Joseph Meyer of Salem, Ore., also an interesting letter from G. Willis, president of the Capital Adventure company, of Oregon. Mr. Willis evidently was suspicious, for in speaking of the personal flattery contained in Rothschild's circulars, he says in regard to other Salem houses: "I find you have given them all the same song and dance, and are trying to run a little game of bluff." He says he don't want that, but wants the goods, etc.

THE TIMBER CULTURE BILL.

A Hard Fight for Dunnell—A Tide That Cannot Be Stemmed.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 3.—Representative Dunnell of Minnesota dislikes to see his closing days in congress marked by the repeal of the timber culture bill, and last night made a hard fight against it, and probably by his efforts secured the postponement of the vote upon the conference report until to-morrow.

This bill has been greatly changed since it passed the house, and now it contains a section repealing the pre-emption law, as well as the tree claim law. Claimants, however, for lands under these laws may perfect title. Mr. Dunnell maintains that the timber culture law can be made effective and beneficial if properly amended, but there is no stemming the tide in favor of restricting the disposition of public lands.

The State of Washington has been especially anxious to have the timber culture law repealed. Many settlers who have endeavored to raise trees on lands in that state failed. Representative Wilson has made a hard fight for the repeal of this law ever since he was in congress. Senator Allen desired to have a proviso added to the repeal of the pre-emption section allowing settlers a year in which to take advantage of the proposed repeal to take up claims. This, he says, would enable intending emigrants to new states who have exhausted their homestead rights to secure a quarter section in new countries, but any additions to the bill would have defeated it.

CUBA'S SHARE

WASHINGTON, March 3.—W. E. Curtis, of the state department, who has charge of the Latin-American department of the Chicago exposition, has just returned from a visit to the West Indies in the interest of the exposition. In his report Mr. Curtis announces the appointment by the captain-general of Cuba of a board of thirty commissioners to represent the island at the exposition, and to secure a collection illustrating its resources, products and industries for exhibition there. This board, he says, includes the most prominent, enterprising and influential men in the colony, among others the mayor of Havana, the rector of the university and the editors of the principal Cuban newspapers.

"The desire of the people of Cuba," the report says, "especially the sugar and tobacco planters and manufacturers, to promote their commercial relations with the United States amounts to an anxiety. The commercial organizations of the Republic of San Domingo have raised a purse to pay the salary and expenses of an envoy to be sent by the government to Washington for the purpose of negotiating a reciprocity treaty with the United States. A similar spirit pervades the entire group of West Indian colonies and will, I am sure, stimulate their representation at the exposition."

While in Havana Mr. Curtis secured for the historical section of the exposition plaster casts of the tomb of Columbus and the famous statue of Columbus in Chains.

FOR MRS. WINDOM.

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, March 3.—The following is the Windom fund subscription list in New York as it stands up to last night:

S. B. Elkins	$2,500	George Bliss	$1,000
J. B. Colgate	2,500	C. H. Bliss	1,000

Senator Washburn has received in Washington the following subscriptions:

Sen t'r McMillan	1,000	Vice Pres. Morton	500

Senator Washburn says that it was not the intention to have this made public at present, but now that the matter has become known he has no doubt that the friends of the late secretary will respond liberally.

Good Riddance.

SALT LAKE CITY, March 3.—A regular exodus of Mormons from Utah to Mexico is quietly taking place, and within the next three months a large number of the saints will have left. The Mormons have a tract of land in the state of Chihuahua 125 miles long and 15 miles wide, which they are settling up. A colony of sixty will leave Provo early in April. All over the territory the saints are preparing to go south to "live their religion." The head of the church is said to be favoring the immigration and putting up funds for those who have none. It is estimated that at least 2,000 families will abandon Utah this summer and go to the land of Canaan.

The French Labor Commission.

PARIS, March 3.—The labor commission closed its first session to-day. The commission has advised the ministery of commerce to organize a labor bureau of the American model to legislate on wages and arbitrations questions.

Somewhat Plausible.

VERMILLION, S. D., Special, March 3.—The identification of Remington brings to mind the mysterious robbery of W. B. Enos in Deuel county. In 1888 Enos was tied in his store and the building set on fire, and he claims he was robbed of $3,800. He declares that during the tussle he bit one fellow's finger nearly or not quite off. There were two men in the robbery, but they have never been found, and the mystery has never been cleared. The fact that Remington is minus a finger and was in partnership with young Spearman, and that he is of a desperate character, leads one to believe that perhaps he could throw some ray of light upon the Enos mystery.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Resume of the Important Measures Consined by Congress the Past Week.

What is Being Done by the Senate and House of Representatives at Washington.

Saturday, Feb. 21.

SENATE.

The Nicaragua canal bill was taken up in the senate to-day, and after several long debates for and against the measure a vote was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. Stewart, providing that the chief of engineers of the army shall have supervision and control of the construction of the canal. It was agreed to—23 to 25. Messrs. Casey, Davis, Pettigrew, Plumb, Power, Stewart, Warren and Wolcott, Republicans, voted aye, and Messrs. Morgan and Payne, Democrats, voted no. The bill then went over without action.

The president sent to the senate to-day the nomination of Martin A. Knapp of New York to be an interstate commerce commissioner.

HOUSE.

After several amendments had been defeated and dilatory motions overruled the senate bill fixing the salaries of United States district judges at $5,000 per annum was passed.

The postoffice and deficiency appropriation bills were taken up, but the house at 9 o'clock to-night adjourned without taking action on either bill.

Monday, Feb. 23.

SENATE.

Senator Pierce to-day introduced a bill on the same subjects. The facts in the case are recited, and it directs the secretary to open negotiations with the company with a view to selecting lands elsewhere. Section 2 directs the president to appoint three commissioners to investigate the value of improvements made on the lands. The company is authorized to select lands on the public domain to the value of the said lands and improvements at the usual rate sold under the pre-emptions laws.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25—The house to-day went into committee of the whole on the deficiency appropriation bill. On a point of order raised by Mr. Dunnell of Minnesota there was stricken from the bill the provision for the appointment of a special committee of members-elect to investigate the expenditure of appropriations for the government of the Territory of Alaska and for the Yellowstone Park. Without disposing of the bill the committee rose.

Tuesday, Feb. 24.

SENATE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26.—In the house today Mr. McKinley of Ohio, from the committee on rules, reported a resolution for immediate consideration of the direct tax bill, the previous question to be considered as ordered at 2 o'clock or as soon thereafter as this resolution may go into effect.

After a long discussion, in which the Democrats spoke against the measure, the resolution was adopted.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Special Telegram, Feb. 26—Senator Washburn to-day presented a lengthy petition of various commercial bodies in favor of the Torrey bankrupt bill. Senator Casey presented a memorial of the North Dakota legislature in favor of retaining Fort Totten as a military reservation. Senator Davis presented a general resolution of the Minnesota legislature in favor of a ship canal around Niagara Falls, also from the same source in favor of bounties to the First Minnesota mounted rangers.

Wednesday, Feb. 25.

SENATE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The funeral of Senator Wilson of Maryland will occur to-morrow, and the body will be taken to Snow Hill, Md., for burial. In the senate to-day resolutions on the death of Senator Wilson were adopted and addresses in eulogy of the deceased were made by Senators Gorman and Spooner. A committee was appointed to attend the funeral, after which the senate adjourned. The same action was taken in the house, Representative Gibson of Maryland eulogizing the life and character of Senator Wilson.

HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The silver pool investigating committee made its report to the house this evening.

The report, which is unanimous, gives the history of the investigation, alluding to the more important testimony, but not reviewing it in detail. It dismisses the testimony of Mr. Ownbey as the product of a "romancer" whose imagination is not restrained by the limitations of truth.

Thursday Feb. 27.

SENATE.

Senator Pierce to-day presented the memorial of the North Dakota legislature asking that Fort Totten be retained as a military post.

Senator Washburn secured an amendment increasing the limit of cost of the Mankato public building to $100,000. It was former y fixed at $90,000.

HOUSE.

Last evening Representative Pickler of South Dakota tried to have added to the agricultural appropriation bill an amendment giving the drouth stricken states $250,000 to purchase wheat. He was bowled out on a point of order, although he made the house ring with the thunders of his protests.

Friday Feb. 27.

SENATE.

On motion of Mr. Pettigrew the rate of interest to be paid to the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands was increased from 3 to 5 per cent.

A proposition by Mr. Pettigrew to reduce the settlement price of the Sisseton and Wahpeton lands to $1.25 per acre instead of $2.50, as proposed in the substitute, was the subject of some discussion. Finally it was arranged that the substitute should be agreed to, the bill reported to the senate and then the whole matter go over till to-morrow, when amendments can be offered.

HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 27.—The house devoted the entire day and until midnight to the consideration of the shipping bill.

The bill as passed is radically different from that sent to that body from the senate. It merely authorizes the postmaster general to enter into such a contract for not less than five nor more than ten years with American citizens for carrying the mails on American steamships between United States ports and foreign ports (the dominion of Canada excepted) as will subserve and promote the postal and commercial interests of the United States, the mail service to be equitably distributed among the Atlantic, Mexican gulf and Pacific ports. The vessels contracted with must be of American build and officered by American citizens.

Defeated a Bad Bill.

TACOMA, Wash., Special Telegram, Mch. 1.—The Fellows cut-throat freight rate bill has been defeated and the house has adopted the Wasson bill, which fixes the rate on grain, millstuffs and flour at 75 per cent of the rates in force Dec. 1, 1890, and that no higher rates shall be charged than then in existence. The senate will pass the bill with a few minor changes.

The board of control of the Coney Island, N. Y., and Brooklyn Jockey clubs and the Monmouth Park association is now ready to receive applications for licenses for the season of 1891 under the rule of racing, which requires all trainers and jockeys to be licensed annually by this board.

A Pony's Grief.

I had a pair of ponies, bought by me almost as colts, and never seperated for an hour for seven years. Recently one of them, Ali, died; during his illness the sorrow, wonder and efforts to rouse him of his stable companion were touching to behold. They were both loose in a very large box, where they habitually lived together, and the one in health, Odo, was constantly whinnying over his sick friend, licking him and trying to induce him to eat hay, which he brought to him in his teeth. When Ali was really dead and responded to his caresses no more Odo's grief was poignant and pitious. It lasted longer than most brothers' regret would endure. Five months have gone by, but he has not forgotten. When I take him his sugar he neighs wistfully, and looks about for his dead comrade. This is not fiction, it is a plain fact. It is pure mental pain, pain of the affections and the regrets. He wants for nothing materially, but he mourns his lost friend.—Ouida in the Animals' Guardian.

The Faults and Follies of the Age,
Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. She Was Heroic in Her Way.

A somewhat amusing incident occured at an English provincial theater recently, during a performance of "Called Back." Early in the evening an old lady took up her seat in the balcony and concentrated her attention on the play. When Antony received his coupe de grace at the hands of Macari, the lady became very excited and fainted. She was taken down to the vestibule, and on recovery it was suggested she should leave the theatre. This, however, she declined to do, being anxious to witness as she put it, "the beautiful play." She accordingly returned to her seat, apparently well. The vision scene in Act I next proved too much for her, and again she fainted. Once more restoratives were applied, and she declared her intention of staying to the end. Nothing occured in Act II to arouse her sympathies, but the Siberian scene in Act III, in which Dr. Ceneri shuffles off the mortal coil, again upset her nerves and once more she fainted. By this time the management had had enough of the thing, and the old lady was sent away in a cab to her residence, not far off.—From the Jester.

CREOLE AND PURITAN

By T. C. DE LEON.

Author of "Four Years in Rebel Capitals," "Juny," "Cross Purposes."

DEDICATED TO HON. HENRY WATTERSON,
In Memory of Schoolboy Days, Still Unforgotten, as Our Shadows Lengthen
Toward the Sunset.

Copyright, 1890, by J. B. Lippincott Company, and published by arrangement with them.

Lady Martindale had been silent longer than her wont. Suddenly she looked up at Latour and said:

"Does not this carry you home?"

"Scarcely," he replied, with a laugh. "Were I asked to name the spot I had seen most un-American I should say the Ezbekieh."

"Not American, perhaps," Edith answered, "but Creole. Two years ago Martindale and I were in New Orleans at carnival time, and of course we did the French market. Only at the antipodes do extremes meet, and nowhere else than here have I seen such varied types of men and women, such differing complexions and so many tongued a babble. These fellahs and Nubians replace your negroes and mulattoes; the high Turks represent the dominant northerners, controlling the government and the business; while these Copts and Egyptians are your Creoles, who never change under any sky."

"You are a singular woman," the man answered, with the easy freedom of old friendship. "To what your sex usually lend their eyes you give your ears and brains as well. I have 'done' the Ezbekieh with lords and ladies, with savants from nearly every country in Europe and with many an American, and never before have I heard such a suggestion."

"Familiarity, you know," she said, with her rare smile. "But this wonderful adopted mother of yours has recalled your natural one to me a dozen times, though I never spoke of it before."

"There certainly is something in what you say," Latour answered, falling into her mood. "The different quarters of Cairo, confining the different nationalities, do suggest Frenchtown and the eastern district."

"And yonder," she said seriously, the graceful arm sweeping toward the Nile, "is the antipodal first cousin of your Mississippi."

"By Jove! Lady Edith," Latour cried, "I believe you are making notes for your book upon Egypt. But there is strong analogy between the rivers. Only note a difference," he added more lightly. "With the Arab nature's beneficence is joyously hailed and utilized; we Christians, at home, dam the mud—in both senses; forcing it to bar out commerce instead of enriching our fields."

"Attempts to coerce nature are never fully successful," the woman answered, looking dreamily at the others of their party. "I see proof every day in England. There it is a curious study to watch the results of transplanting buds from the American forcing house into that social garden of Eden the British aristocracy."

"Doubtless," Latour answered frankly. "But all our women are not fitted for that transplanting as you were."

"As I was!" There came the old time darkening into the brown eyes raised to his, but behind it a something which he could not read. "As I was? Oh, how little men read us! How little we understand ourselves!"

There was an awkward pause. Latour thought of a hundred things in the brief interval; but not one of them would do at all to answer her strange speech. Her eyes were fixed upon the ground. Without raising them she said rapidly, with suppressed vehemence:

"My old friend, I can say truthfully that not only was I less fitted to find happiness in outward success than most other slaves of that harem of convenance, but, had I then known myself at all, I should have starved before I became one of the western odalisques!"

Latour stared at the beautiful woman by his side in much wonderment. Like lightning his memory reverted to that long summer, when they had wandered about "Flirtation," she already the thorough woman of society, he the gauche, untried cadet. How different, yet how little changed, she seemed now to his more perceptive eyes—all the traits of her grand face toned, but not matured, by time, the always lissome figure developed into absolute perfection, without one suspicion of overfulness!

Never before, even in the close intimacy of the renewed past, had the physical woman so attracted him as now, sitting under the palm, with the clinging folds of her rich gown suggesting those perfect lines, seen only in the taper feet peeping beneath it, the long, firm hands lying listless in her lap.

Never before had the mental woman been so dazzlingly turned upon him as now. And there was suppressed sadness in her tone, spite of the bitter words—a world of feeling growing in the eyes into which he looked. That nameless thrill of feminine contact—softer than the mesmerist's spell, more dangerous than the serpent charm—drew about the man, closer and more resistless.

There was nothing awkward in the silence now, yet it seemed unbearable to him. He spoke as men often do, so moved—at random:

"I never dreamed you were sentimental!"

"I never was sentimental," she answered slowly. "No; even when, once in my life, I knew that I—loved!"

She raised her eyes full to his. They glowed in their black depths with something which might be the memory of a dead passion, might be its living and burning reality. But, as the eyes dropped quickly, the voice was unmoved in its rich music that added:

"Had I been sentimental I had never been his—wife!"

"But—you seem so happy together!"

As his words sounded on his own ear Latour felt that the cavalry colonel was floundering, deeper than the cadet had ever done.

"Seem? Society is exigeant, and we English"—she put bitter emphasis upon the words—"are so different from the Egyptians. We hide our skeletons. Besides, it would be a triumph for the stately and bloodless automatons recognized by her gracious majesty annually as the Martindale dowager peeresses to suppose that I was unhappy."

"I do not understand"— Latour began abruptly; but she answered before he finished:

"Certainly you do not. Men never do, as I told you before the Sphinx today; but I am not unhappy in the least—about that. I am only dreadfully weary of it all—the forms, the boredom and the acting."

"And he suspects?" His voice was eager, and he leaned toward her with his old Creole impetuosity.

"No, he does not suspect," she answered rather wearily. "He knows. I told him in Paris, six weeks ago, that a quiet separation and a residence abroad might be pleasanter to us both."

"And he refused! No man could give you up without more reason!" Latour said with ill suppressed vehemence.

"Yes, he loves me, and he knows he will have no more reason. The seventeenth Lady Martindale respects Edith Van der Huysen too much ever to forfeit her good opinion."

She turned away her face, the same expression on it as when, ten years before, she sat with him by the Hudson, waiting for the words that never came. The lines of that face were firmer now, a set determination about the lips. Suddenly the eyes, darkened near to blackness, glowed with a passionate yearning in them. In the deep shadow between them his hand rested lightly, tremulously upon hers.

"You know my past," she said low and sadly, not moving her face; "a motherless girl, foster reared by society, with an old name and a false position to support. What was I but—an adventuress? No, do not deprecate the ugly word. It is God's truth. I had to buy my future—unless destiny could be reversed, and the man I worshiped cared for me! And to buy it I had only—myself!"

Lord Martindale, the British banker, and Sir Roger moved toward them, beneath the palms. Lady Martindale drew on the long glove she had removed. Her voice was the usual one as she still looked toward the others and said quietly:

"I have found that women who marry for independence are like states that combine for it. Neither get it without —a revolution!"

The three Englishmen were very near, almost within earshot, as she rose, adding:

"Yes, I was an adventuress then. Now I am worse: I am a failure, Adrien!"

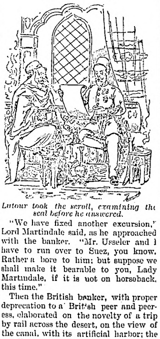
She spoke his name without emphasis, but it thrilled his ear like music. His heart beat faster than it ever had in all their "Flirtation" days. A dull sense of wonderment was about his brain—a query sounding in it, if he had really been fit to comprehend her in all those wasted days of the long ago—if really he comprehended himself now!

And once more, as the others reached them, he muttered to himself:

"Is it kismet?"

PART III—CHAPTER III.

KISMET, OR CHANCE?



Latour took the scroll, examining the seal before he answered.

"We have fixed another excursion," Lord Martindale said, as he approached with the banker. "Mr. Usseler and I have to run over to Suez, you know. Rather a bore to him; but suppose we shall make it bearable to you, Lady Martindale, if it is not on horseback, this time."

Then the British banker, with proper deprecation to a British peer and peeress, elaborated on the novelty of a trip by rail across the desert, on the view of the canal, with its artificial harbor; the excellence of the lunch in prospect, and the coolness of the return by midnight of the same day.

"Sir Roger is going, and we count on the pleasure of your company also, Col. Latour," Mr. Usseler added.

"You are very good," Latour answered, waking out of a reverie in time to save his politeness. "But I am daily expecting an embassy from a refractory and very powerful sheik, and must remain at my post to receive it."

Sir Roger had said good-night; the party was moving toward the hotel, the banker still clinging to the peer, and leaving Edith to follow with Latour. [illegible] not [illegible] since her husband [illegible]. Neither did he feel like talking those nothings which go for conversation at such times. The past had come to him at the woman's words. They had swept across his memory as the acid sponge sweeps over the palimpsest, and the characters of the dead long ago stood out clear, strong, and with new meaning now. Again he was the callow cadet, untutored in the world's ways and in woman's. Again he wandered round "Flirtation," with a soft pressure on his arm and a soft voice in his ear; with strange, deep eyes searching his.

Then Lady Martindale spoke for the first time, but in voice so low that it could not have reached her husband, striking a fusee on the bottom step:

"Can you forgive my selfishness in recalling the past?"

Her eyes were raised to his. In the moonlight they shone a fathomless black, and she dropped them quickly as he answered low:

"Forgive! Do you know what I owe you for the present?"

"Have a smoke as you walk?" Lord Martindale broke in cheerily. "Not half bad these, you know; some my cousin Hoyne-Cecil has from Cuba— By George! awfully stupid of me really, but I quite forgot that an old friend of yours"——

"It is dreadfully late, Lord Martindale," his lady said in her best society tone, "and we have monopolized Col. Latour all day."

"Yes, so we have, really," responded her husband. "Have a light. But I really forgot to mention that at Hoyne-Cecil's in London and constantly at Paris we saw"——

"Really, my lord," Edith again broke in, rather hastily this time, "you should defer your story for daylight. I am sure Col. Latour must need conge after his long tour of duty with us today. Good night."

She extended her ungloved hand. It rested in his no second longer than the strict limit of form, but there was that in the touch which thrilled the strong man like electricity as he strode off into the shadows of the palm trees.

Reaching his quarters he stood long at the window, gazing out toward the dim shadow of the distant Sphinx. And as he turned and threw himself upon his bed he muttered:

"She spoke truly of the statue; woman is the riddle of the ages."

But early next morning his adjutant reported that the embassy of Sheik Abou-Ali had appeared, a small body of Bedouin horsemen, who had pitched tents some three miles south of the city, but made as yet no sign.

Knowing the Arabs' way Latour took his morning tub and coffee with unusual dispatch, heard morning reports and ordered the day's routine. The Arab might arrive at any moment—might delay his visit even for days. But he had scarcely finished his work when a noble looking Bedouin rode alone and slowly to the gate and looked around with curious carelessness of novel surroundings. Then he dismounted from his magnificent desert mare, strode past the sentry without note of his "carry" and was ushered into the commander's presence.

For a moment the Arab stood like a statue, his white bournous drawn closely about his tall figure, the soft folds of his ample white turban marking more strongly his dark bronzed face and keen thin features. An old man certainly, he was erect and agile as a youth, his firm tread and dignified port marking the warrior. At length the Arab saluted by placing the back of his open hand upon his brow and lips, not adding the more effusive gesture often used of pressing it also upon his heart.

Latour saluted courteously and in silence, motioning his visitor to a seat upon the divan. Then the servant brought coffee in egg shell porcelain cups, and the chibouque-ghi swiftly filled the bowls of pipes with the fragrant Latakieh tobacco. At last the Arab spoke.

"Salaam alickoum!" ("Peace be with thee!") he said gravely. "The great Sheik Abou-Ali sendeth greeting unto Ismail Pasha, viceroy of Egypt, whose warrior thou art. I am his messenger, Mohammed-ben-Zizi, sheik of the Beni-Ali."

"Peace be with thee, also," Latour replied in Arabic. "It is well; and thou, O sheik, art welcome. We will speak further of thy message from the great Sheik Abou-Ali, whose name is well known to me."

"Nothing have I to speak of with thee, O warrior," replied the Arab, sedately. "I am but the bearer of this writing for the hands of Ismail, the grandson of Mehemet Ali."

He produced a scroll addressed in Arabic characters and tied by a silken string, sealed with a heavy signet in black wax. Latour took the scroll, examining the seal before he answered:

"This writing shall be sent at once by special courier to his highness, Ismail, king of all Egypt."

"It is well," the Arab answered. "But know, O warrior, that Ismail, son of Ibrahim, is the ruler of Egyyt, but not of the tribes of the Beni-Ali. Only one master know they—the great sheik of all the Bedouins, whom men call the king of Syria."

"Thou hast spoken, O sheik," Latour replied with equal gravity. "The writing shall go to his highness this very hour. For the other matters thou speakest of—thou art a soldier as I am. We listen only and obey."

"Thou sayest wisely, O warrior," responded the sheik. "I will await under my tent the return of thy messenger. Peace be with thee!" And he rose to depart.

"Peace be with thee, also," again answered Latour. "I do not make thee, O sheik, the empty offer of a palace within our walls; for well I know that the children of the desert breathe not freely under a roof."

Without reply the Arab again made gesture of salutation and departed slowly.

Latour wrote and sent his dispatch to the minister of war, took his noon-meal and smoked a chibouque. Then he picked up a volume of the new "Upton Tactics," liberally margined with notes of his own. Over the page danced diagrams of the Military academy, with memory traced maps of its favorite walk.

The pressure of duty over, reaction had come; the unwonted scenes of the past night dominated his thoughts and a restlessness possessed him which his pipe and his divan could not overcome. So, throwing on a white mess jacket, he strolled lazily out into the stifling air of the narrow streets. Mechanically he crossed the Ezbekieh and approached the Hotel d'Orient, never noting his route until he almost ran against Lord Martindale's man.

"Why, Harris!" he exclaimed, "you here! Has Lord Martindale already returned?"

"No, your 'ighness, 'e 'asn't," answered the man with woful failure of a military salute. "'Is ludship will not be 'ome huntil hafter midnight, but Hi was left because 'er leddyship was hill."

"Her ladyship ill!" Latour repeated.

"Not now, your 'ighness; not now," Harris replied. "But she was so hill this mornink that melud Martindale could 'ardly consent to leave 'er. Honly 'er leddyship hinsisted, in 'er hown way, so Pearson 'inted to me. Hand wen 'er leddyship hinsists, wy 'is ludship 'as honly one think to do— Hi beg your 'ighness' pardon," he interrupted himself suddenly. "Hi 'ope your 'ighness 'll hoverlook my repeatink of Pearson's hindecent"——

"Hold your tongue! Come with me," Latour answered turning into the fruit shop near.

And soon Harris, as penance for too loose a tongue, was staggering under a hamper of those fruits rarest to western taste, accompanied by a note penciled on his card, to regret her sickness and proffer Lady Martindale any possible service during her husband's absence.

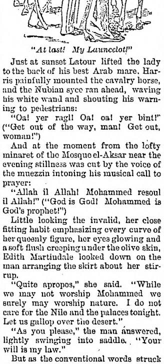
Suddenly the Creole's restlessness all disappeared; he found the heat outside unbearable; so, returning to quarters, he threw himself on the divan and read Upton, quite understandingly.

Ere long Harris, now quite taciturn, brought a note of thanks. Lady Martindale was quite recovered; would again trespass on Col. Latour's goodness for horses for herself and groom. She felt the need of a gallop, and Lord Martindale would be absent until midnight.

Of course the reply was that Col. Latour begged to accompany her ladyship, after evening stables.

PART III—CHAPTER IV.

FROM THE TOMBS OF THE PAST.



"At last! My Launcelot!"

Just at sunset Latour lifted the lady to the back of his best Arab mare. Harris painfully mounted the cavalry horse, and the Nubian syce ran ahead, waving his white wand and shouting his warning to pedestrians:

"Oa! yer ragl! Oa! oa! yer bint!" ("Get out of the way, man! Get out, woman!")

And at the moment from the lofty minaret of the Mosque el-Aksar near the evening stillness was cut by the voice of the muezzin intoning his musical call to prayer:

"Allah il Allah! Mohammed resoul il Allah!" ("God is God! Mohammed is God's prophet!")

Little looking the invalid, her close fitting habit emphasizing every curve of her queenly figure, her eyes glowing and a soft flush creeping under the olive skin, Edith Martindale looked down on the man arranging the skirt under her stirrup.

"Quite apropos," she said. "While we may not worship Mohammed we surely may worship nature. I do not care for the Nile and the palaces tonight. Let us gallop over the desert."

"As you please," the man answered, lightly swinging into saddle. "Your will is my law."

But as the conventional words struck his own ear they seemed to him more the answer to his own thought than to her speech.

The Arab mares champed the foam from the bits that restrained their impatience through the narrow streets, already beginning to fill with evening pedestrians. Behind, in seeming great discomfort, jolted the Cockney groom, his clumsy hand upon the Turkish curb restraining his spirited horse into a restless curvet, racking equally to rider and to ridden. For the Arab horse knows but two gaits—the springy walk that carries him over ground as fast as the average trot, and the long, swinging gallop that skims the ground with the grace and almost the swiftness of the gazelle.

As they neared the ancient masonry of Bab-el-Nassr, or Gate of Victory, the moon rose over the eastern desert full and clear, throwing her light in patches through the houses and leaving the shadows blacker in the contrast. Latour called in Arabic to the sinewy syce, whose one white garment flickered in advance without hint of his dusky legs and arms in the shadow. The man halted, stood aside for them to pass, then ran back in the direction they had come.

"I sent him back," Latour said, "as we are now past the streets and will meet no passers on the desert."

But ere the lady could answer a swift, sidelong swerve of the mare she rode shook her in the saddle and almost slung

Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled. That the president of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, within sixty days after the passage of this act, to designate and appoint three commissioners, one of whom shall be a resident of Minnesota, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable after their appointment, to negotiate with all the different bands or tribes of Chippewa Indians in the state of Minnesota, for the complete cession and relinquishment in writing of all their title and interest in and to all the reservations of said Indians in the state of Minnesota, except the White Earth and Red Lake reservations, and to all and to so much of these two reservations as in the judgment of said commission is not requred to make and fill the allotments required by this and existing acts, and shall not have been reserved by the commissioners for said purposes and upon the terms hereinafter stated; and such cession and relinquishment shall be deemed sufficient as to each of said several reservations; and as to the Red Lake reservation, the cession and relinquishment shall be deemed sufficient if made and assented to in like manner by two thirds of the male adults of all of the Chippewa Indians is Minnesota; and provided that all agreements therefore shall be approved by the president of the United States before taking effect: Provided further, that in any case where an allotment in severalty has heretofore been made to any Indian of land upon any of said reservations, he shall not be deprived thereof or disturbed therein except by his own individual consent seperately and previously in such form or manner as may be prescribed by the secretary of the interior. And for the purpose of ascertaining whether the proper number of Indians yield and give their assent as aforsaid, and for the purpose of making the allotments and payments hereinafter mentioned, the said commissoiners shall, while engaged in securing such cession, and relinquishment as aforesaid, and before completing the same, make an accurate census of each tribe or band, classifying them into male or female adults, and male and female minors; and the minors into those that are orphans and those who are not orphans, giving the exact numbers of each class, and making such census in duplicate lists, one of which shall be filed with the secretary of the interior, and the other with the official head of the band or tribe; and the acceptance and approval of such cession and relinquishment by the president of the United States shall, be deemed full and ample proof of the assent of the Indians, and shall operate as a complete extinguishment of the Indian title without any other or further act or ceremony whatsoever for the purposes and upon the terms to this act provided.

SEC. 2. That the said commissioners shall, before entering upon the discharge of their duties, each give a bond to the United States, in the sum of ten thousand dollars, with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the secretary of the interior, and conditioned for the faithful discharge of their duties under this act, and they shall also take an oath to support the constitution of the United States, and to faithfully discharge the duties of their office, which bonds and oath shall be filed with the secretary of the interior Said commissioners shall be entitled to a compensation of ten dollars per day for each day actually employed in the discharge of their duties, and for their actual traveling expenses and board, not exceeding three dollars per day, Said commissioners shall also be authorized to employ a competent interpreter while engaged in the performance of their duties, at a compensation and allowance to be fixed by them, not in excess of that allowed to each of them under this act.

SEC. 3. That as soon as the census has been taken, and the cession and relinquishment has been obtained, approved and ratified, as specified in Sec. one of this act, all of said Chippewa Indians in the state of Minnesota, except those of the Red Lake reservation, shall, under the directions of said commissioners, be removed to and take up their residence on the White Earth reservation, and thereupon there shall, as soon as practicable, under the direction of said commissioners, be alloted lands in severalty, to the Red Lake Indians on Red Lake reservation and to all the other Indians on White Earth reservation in comformity with the act of February 8th 1887, entitled "An act for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes"; and all the allotments heretofore made to any of said Indians on the White Earth reservation are hereby ratified and confirmed with the like tenure and condition prescribed for all the allotments under this act: provided, however, that the amount heretofore alloted to any Indian on White Earth reservation shall be deducted from the amount of allotment to which he or she is entitled under this act: Provided, further, that any of the Indians residing on any of said reservations, may, in his discretion, take his allotment in severalty under this act on the reservation where he lives at the time of the removal to and taking such allotment on the White Earth Reservation.

SEC. 4. That as soon as the cession and relinquishment of said Indian title has been obtained and approved as aforsaid, it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the general land office to cause the lands so ceded to the United States to be surveyed in the manner provided by law for the survey of public lands, and as soon as practicable after such survey has been made, and the report, field notes and plats thereof filed in the general land office and duly approved by the commissioner thereof, said secretary of the interior, upon notice of the completion of such surveys, shall appoint a sufficient number of competent and experienced examiners, in order that the work may be done within a reasonable time, who shall go upon said lands thus surveyed, and personally make a careful, complete and thorough examination of the same by forty-acre lots, for the purpose of ascertaining on which lots or tracts there is standing or growing pine timber, which tracts on which pine timber is standing or growing for the purposes of this act shall be termed "pine lands," the minutes of such examination to be at the time entered in books provided for that purpose, showing with particularity the amount of such pine timber standing or growing on any lot or tract, the amount of such pine timber to be estimated by feet in the manner usual in estimating such timber which estimates and reports of all such examinations shall be filed with the commissioner of the general Land Office as a part of the permanent record thereof, and thereupon that officer shall cause to be made a list of all such pine lands, describing each forty acre lot or tract thereof separately and opposite each such description he shall place the actual cash value of the same, according to his best judgment and information, but such valuation shall not be at a rate of less than three dollars per thousand feet board measure of the pine timber thereon and hereupon such lists of lands so appraised shall be tansmitted to the secretary of the interior for approval, modification, or rejection as he may deem proper. If the appraisals are rejected as a whole then the secretary of the interior shall substitute a new appraisal and the same or original list as approved or modified shall be filed with the commissioner of the general land office as the appraisal of said lands, and as constituting minimum price for which said land may be sold as hereinafter provided but in no event shall said pine lands be appraised at a rate of less than three dollars per thousand feet board measure of the pine timber thereon. Duplicate lists of said lands as apprasied together with copies of the field-notes, surveys and minutes of examinations shall be filed and kept in the office of the register of the land office of the district within which said land may be situated and copies of said list with the appraisals shall be furnished to any person desiring the same upon any application to the commissioner of the general land office or to the register of said local land office.

The compensation of the examiners so provided for in this section shall be fixed by the Secretary of the interior, but in no event shall exceed six dollars per day for each person so employed including all expenses.

All other lands acquired from said Indians on said reservations other than pine land are for purposes of this act termed agricultural lands.

SEC. 5. That after the survey, examination and appraisals of said pine lands have been fully completed they shall be proclaimed as in market and offered for sale in the following manner: The Commissioner of the general land office shall cause notice to be inserted once in each week for four successive weeks in one newspaper of general circulation published in Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth and Crookston Minn.; Chicago, Illinois, and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Detroit, Michigan Philadelphia and Williamsport, Penn., and Boston Massachusetts, of the sale of said lands as public auction to the highest bidder for cash at the local land office of the district within which said lands are located said notice to state the time and place and terms of such sale. At such sale said-land shall be offered in forty-acre parcels, except in case of fractions containing either more or less than forty acres, which shall be sold entire. In no event shall any parcel be sold for less sum than its appraised value. The residue of such lands remaining unsold after such public offering shall thereafter be subject to private sale at the appraised value of the same upon application at the local land office.

SEC. 6. That when any of the agricultural lands on said reservation not allotted under thi act nor reserved for future use of said Indians have been surveyed the Secretary of the Interior shall give thirty day's notice through at least one newspaper published at St. Paul and Crookston, the state of Minnesota, and, at the expiration of thirty days, the said agricultural land so surveyed, shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only under the provisions of homestead law: Provided, that each settler under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead laws, shall pay to the United States for the land so taken by him, the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents for each and every acre, in five equal annual payments, and shall be entitled to a patent therefore only at the expiration of five years from the date of entry, according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said one dollar and twenty-five cents per acre therefor, and due proof of occupancy for said period of five years: and any conveyance of said lands so taken as a homestead, or any contract touching the same, prior to the date of final entry, shall be null and void, Provided, that nothing in this act shall be held to authorize the sale or other disposal under its provision of any tract upon which there is a subsisting, valid pre-emption or homestead entry: but any such entry shall be proceeded with under the regulations and decisions in force at the dates of its allowance, and if found regular and valid patents shall be issued thereon: Provided, that any person who has not heretofore had the benefit of the homestead or pre-emption law, and who has failed from any cause to perfect the title to any tract of land heretofore entered by him under either of said laws may make a second homestead entry under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 7. That all money accruing from the disposal of said lands in comformity with the provisions of this act shall, after deducting all the expenses of making the census, of obtaining cession and relinquishment, of making the removal and the allotments, and completing the surveys and appraisals, in this act provided, be placed in the treasury of the United States to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the state of Minnesota, as a permanent fund which shall draw interest at the rate of five per centum per annum, payable annually for a period of fifty years, after the allotments provided for in this act have been made, and which interest and permanent fund shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in manner following: One-half of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years except in the case hereinafter otherwise provided, be annually paid in cash in equal shares to the heads of families and guardians of orphan minors for their use; and one-fourth of said interest shall, during the same period and with a like exception, be annually paid in cash in equal shares per capita to all other classes of said Indians; and the remaining one-fourth of said interest shall, during the said period of fifty years, under the direction of the secretary of the interior, be devoted exclusively to the establishment and maintainance of a system of free schools among the Indians, in their midst and for their benefit; and at the expiration of the said fifty years, the said permenent fund shall be divided and paid to all of said Chipewa Indians, and their issue then living, in cash, in equal shares; Provided, That congress may, in its discretion from time to time, during the said period of fifty years, appropriate the purpose of promoting civilization and self support among the said Indians, a portion of said principal sum, not exceeding five per centum per annum thereof The United States shall, for the benefit of said Indians, advance to them as such interest as aforsaid the sum of ninety thousand dollars annually counting from the time when the removal and allotments provided for in this act shall have been made, until such time as said permanent fund, exclusive of the deduction, hereinbefore provided for, shall equal or exceed the sum of three million dollars, less any actual interest that may in the meantime accure from accumulations of said permanent fund, the payments of such interest to be made yearly in advance, and, in discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, may, as to three-fourths thereof, during the first five years be expended in procuring live-stock, teams, farming implements, and seed for such of the Indians to the extent of their share as are fit and desire to engage in farming, but as to the rest, in cash; and whenever said permanent fund shall exceed the sum of three million dollars the United States shall be fully reimbursed out of such excess, for all the advances of interest made as herein contemplated and other expenses hereunder.

SEC. 8. That the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars is hereby appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay for procuring the cession and relinquishment, making the census survey, appraisals, removal and allotments, and the first annual payment of interest herein contemplated and provided for, which money shall be expended under the direction of the secretary of the interior in conformity with the provisions of this act. A detailed statement of which expenses, except the interest aforsaid, shall be reported to congress when the expenditures shall be completed.

Approved, January 14, 1889.

A Leaf from a Journal.

This wonderful nineteenth century! One retires on a shelf in an elegant coach in one city, and, if he sleep well, awakes in another city and state two hundred and fifty miles distant. There he may find street cars gliding up inclined planes, propelled by no visible force, or burrowing through the solid rock. Countless trainloads of people are deposited at extensive depots with regularity and system, with no unnecessary delay, confusion or accident, and over the expanse of tracks traversed by these trains, stretch massive viaducts, or the strong but lighter structure of the elevated railway. Unless one desires to live in comparative solitude, if he wish to mingle with the world at all, where can he do so to such advantage to himself as in a large bustling city, with its great throbbing heart propelling through its veins the life-giving streams of industry, trade, commerce and wealth. I was on the streets in a large city recently, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when from the abodes of those mammoth industries there came streaming forth the hundreds and thousands of employers, which, joined to the previous throng of pedestrians and the endless stream of vehicles, filled the city with life—a life that fascinates that thrills and animates. Yet as we are carried along by this restless tide of humanity, or work our way against it, insensibly we are meditating. What food for conjecture as these brings, the crowning achievements of creation, yet so little above the animal in many respects, strangers to each other for the most part, hurry and jostle on, each with all his faculties on the alert, his energies concentrated and brought to bear upon the inevitable struggle for gain each with his own distinct and peculiar hopes and fears, success and failure.

THE Empress Frederick now appreciates the difference between French leave and a French hint to leave.

JOHN L SULLIVAN has at length received a black eye from a Georgia trainman. This is an instance of the "solid South" that will commend itself to many Northern readers.

BRAZIL will soon adopt her Constitution and elect a President under it; and the treaty of reciprocity with the United States will soon give a greater impetus to her trade than she ever yet experienced.

A FRENCH woman who landed in New York recently had $2,000 worth of jewelry concealed in her bustle. The jewelry was confiscated, and the French woman will now know better than violate our fashions by wearing a thing as extinct as a dodo.

NEVADA'S legislature proposes to pass a bill to license prize-fights. If Nevada succeeds in attracting all the prize-fighters and the other states are thus freed from ring-contest she will have given the country the first valid excuse for her existence as a state.

BRAZIL has done well to elect for the regular term as president of the republic Gen. da Fonseca, who has officated in that capacity under the provisional government ever since the republic was established. He has proved himself an efficient chief magistrate.

A DISPATCH from Washington announces that "the war department this year will expend a larger sum than usual for the purchase of improved weather appartus." This is a step in the right direction. Apparatus that will furnish improved weather has long been needed.

RUDYARD KIPLING, speaking of our lack of coast defenses, says the country is in a "spankable" condition. It is strange, now, that that is just what a great many people have been thinking about Rudyard since he began writing up the country on information gathered from cabbies and bell-boys.

A DISPATCH says that the pastor of a village church in New York popularized himself by stopping his sermon to say! "I am annoyed by a young lady in the audience who has been endeavoring to flirt with me. I have neither the time nor inclination to return the compliment now but may do so later on"—leaving the scandalous impression that the village congregation approves of the pastor who may flirt.

OF course the blatherskite Boulanger would make the present flurry in the politics of Europe the excuse for a manifesto. He is at Brussells and quite safe from any penalty, but he keeps on angling in the hope that some political fish may take his bent pin. Of all the figures that have attained prominence in the affairs of modern Europe his is assuredly the smallest and most contemptible.

THE best evidence of progress shown in the South is the increasing interest in public schools. The statistics show that Georgia, for the benefit of her school fund, taxes her people $1,072,706; Alabama, in even a larger proportion, devotes $846,893 to the education of her children, while Texas has the largest prospective school fund of any State in the Union. Such facts are greatly to the credit of the States mentioned.

THE electric light has lately been introduced into Jerusalem much to the wonder of the Hebrews and Arabs who live there. They cannot understand it at all, and their astonishment is heightened when told that the light is like the lightning. When the dynamos get cranky or the wires crossed so that darkness falls upon the ancient city it is understood the inhabitants go about asking the whereabouts of one Moses.

A ST. LOUIS clergyman thinks that the large number of divorces do not signify a corresponding depravity in social life. There is another side to the matter. So large a number of women are now making their own living, and so many avenues to employment are open to them, that they have become more independent than ever before and will no longer submit to ill-treatment, which was once endured without a murmur. Women are not now so dependent on their husbands, and, feeling their independence, often rush off to the divorce courts about matters which, fifty years ago, would have been lightly regarded.

At the municipal election held in Black River Falls a fair vote was polled. John Marsh, the people's candidate for mayor, was elected by 40 plurality over the Republican and Prohibition nominees, with all the rest of the people's ticket, except one Republican alderman and one justice of the peace. On the question of local option, license is carried by 120 majority.

A report is brought to La Crosse from Austin, that the headquarters of the Southern Minnesota division are to be moved back to La Crosse not later than May 1. This is much desired by business men here, who are the largest shippers on this division, and have found it very annoying not to have the officers where they could be reached personally when desired.

The central school building at Washburn is burned to the ground. The fire company could give but little aid on account of a scarcity of water in the reservoir. The building was a frame structure valued at $10,000; insurance $7,000. The origin of the fire is unknown, but it probably started from a furnace in the basement. The school board has decided to provide temporary quarters for the 300 scholars that attended this school.

John Canfiled, the millionaire lumberman of Manistee, Mich., was before the land officers at Ashland to make application for patents on nearly $500,000 worth of pine lands purchased of the Wisconsin Central railroad. His application was protested by about forty settlers, who are also trying to obtain the same. The Cranberry Lumber company is also interested in the case, they holding a warranty deed of the land in question.

The hardware firm of G. M. McKenney & Co., of Mason City, was closed by the sheriff. Attachments of local creditors and Chicago and St. Paul wholesale houses have been filed to the amount of $1,800. More creditors are to be heard from. The stock will invoice $4,0000, and the store was one of the finest in the city.

The Kaiser's History Lesson.

The German Kaiser has not a few touches of the German professor in his character. His three long speeches on the schooling of the people show that, like our James I, he regards the King's throne as a kind of supreme academical chair. There is, apparently, no subject of political or social importance upon which he is not prepared to give a lecture; and it must be owned that he is very apt to be ready in his production of historical parallels. At his lecture during the festival in honor of the Great Elector, the Imperial professor of history, struck an ingenious side-thrust at Prince Bismarck. "The great statesman who had served his (the Great Elector's) father," said the Kaiser, "had worked for his own ends; hence the young ruler was obliged, when he came into power, to strike out in a new way for himself, and do so alone."

This Bismarck of Brandenburg, in the seventeenth century, was evidently Count Adam von Schwarzenberg, who ruled the State with autocratic sway during the reign of the Elector George Wilhelm, from 1607 to 1641. He was the mortal foe of Gustavus Adolphus, the victorious champion of German Protestantism. The great Swedish King once said to him: "This black fellow is bringing no end of misery upon his masters. The Brandenburghers ought to throw the Count out of the window, or cut his head off." To get rid of the despotic Adam von Schwarzenberg was the very first care of the Great Elector, the youthful Friedrich Wilhelm. But the self-conscious parallel of the Imperial professor was curiously unjust. For the greedy politician who was Mayor of the palace under the Great Elector's predecessor had degraded Prussia, and was pursued by the yells of the women and children when he drove through the streets of Berlin, whereas Bismarck exalted Prussia to a splendor which the Great Elector never expected for her, and was idolized by the folk in the Berlin streets.—Pall Mall Gazette.

An Agreeable Surprise.

Late explorers in Africa, plodding wearily through the Congo wilderness found in the very heart of it a delightful surprise. "In the midst of an immense clearing they came upon a village bordered on all sides by large manioc fields," and acquaintance with its people, an intelligent active tribe, afforded real pleasure.

On a very wide central avenue, "extending as far as the eye could reach," were their simple dwellings, face to face on either side, having in their rear extensive banana plantations, behind which were lines of oil palms and giant forest trees—the protecting wall shielding all this thriftiness—upreared themselves to majestic height.

The inhabitants were Benge people, having brownish complexion, and fine features indicative of intelligence and force. They were, too, cleanly, industrious, and orderly. No little skill as wood-carvers had they, and other helpful homely crafts were among their usual employments. That they must be successful hunters was shown in the deft fashioning of the curious implements used in the chase.

That these Benge people have reached a higher standard of civilization than many other tribes about them goes without saying. "Among them fetichism, cannibalism, and coarse idolatry are unknown."

HEAVY RAIN STORM.

Several Lives Lost and Much Property Destroyed by a Cyclone in Mississippi.

Heavy and Continued Rain Storms in That State Prove Very Destructive to Railroads,

NEW ORLEANS, March 11.—A Pickens, Miss., special says the town has been isolated since last Saturday, when the last train passed north. Continued rains since Thursday night have raised the water in Big Black river higher than ever known, and it is still rising rapidly. The Illinois Central railroad track is lifted bodily from its bed and deposited in the ditch for miles below and above here, and the embankment swept away. Incalculable damage has been done by the water. A cyclone passed over that place last Saturday morning without doing any damage, dropping over in Madison county, where it caused great destruction of life and property. It passed from there into Attala county, near Newport, where houses were blown down and four negroes killed.

A Quitman, Miss., special says the most unprecedented rainfall in that section for the past week has caused a general freshet and the cessation of traffic on railroads.

At Enterprise, Miss., the Mobile & Ohio and New Orleans and Northwestern railroads are submerged for long distances and passage either way is impossible. The town of Enterprise is inundated to a large extent, the water flowing through the streets with the velocity of a river and in many instances coming in the stores. The flood has no parallel save in the memorable year of 1871. It will perhaps be two days before traffic will be resumed.

FRUIT DESTROYED.

The freeze on Feb. 26 did considerable damage to the prospective fruit crops in this section. On Saturday afternoon large hail fell for a few minutes, and Saturday night the rain fell in torrents for several hours, causing greater damage by wash-outs and overflowing lowlands than had been done in many years. Several large grawers had their tomato plant beds completely washed away and many others have suffered damage. Last night there was another freeze, this time preceded by rain, which finished up the peach blossoms and very few peaches, if any, will be produced this season. Last year the peach crop was lost by a freeze on March 1. The above noted facts will apply with equal force to a large number of market gardens along the line of the Illinois Central railway within a hundred miles of New Orleans.

TENNESSEE FLOODS.

Nashville, Chattanooga and Knoxville Suffer From Too Much Water.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 1.—The river continued to rise slowly all day to-day. Last night at dark the gauge read 47.9 feet, 40 feet being the danger line. River men predict that without any more rain the river will go two feet higher. It was clear and cooler here to-day. About 500 families have been driven from their homes. At 1 o'clock this afternoon the gauge registered 48.3 feet. It is expected the river will soon begin to recede, as reports have been received from up-river points that the high waters are slowly falling.

A Chattanooga special says the Tennessee river at that point has reached the danger line and is rising three inches per hour. Experienced river men predict that it will reach at least forty-five feet, which will overflow much of the city. The rainfall here for thirty-six hours is three and one-fourth inches, and extends up the river and in East Tennessee generally. The sky is overcast and the outlook for more showers is very promising.

A Knoxville, Tenn., special says very heavy rains prevailed throughout that section yesterday and last night, and all the streams are out of bank. A seven-year-old girl was drowned to-day by falling in a raging creek. A colored man named Hunter was drowned yesterday.

LOST ON THE SOUND.

SEATTLE, Wash., March 11—It is rumored here to-night that the steamer Buckeye went down in the sound between Edmunds and Apple Tree cove, with twenty passengers, last night. The rumor cannot be confirmed, as there is no telephonic communication with Edmunds, and the place cannot be reached to-night.

The story is that the Buckeye, which is a small steamer, went into Edmunds yesterday loaded with cabbages and other market vegetables. The captain invited a party to go with him on a trip across the sound. About twenty, the majority being gentlemen, accepted the invitation. The boat had reached the middle of the sound about dusk, when a storm came up. For an hour or more there was a heavy gale.

A grader on the Great Northern near Edmunds is reported as saying he saw a light bobbing on the water for an hour or so and then disappear. The boat did not return to Edmunds last night, and this morning near that place the shore was covered with cabbages and wreckage. This story was brought by the steamer Idaho, which touched at Edmunds this morning.

Mountaneers Fight.

LOUISVILLE, March 11—A regular pitched battle was fought by a number of desperate men at a place called "Hell's Half-Acre" in Virgina, near Cumberland Gap last night. Hugh Johnson was shot through the head and chest and killed outright. Garrett Soihon was shot through the thigh: Mose Gibson through the bowels, not expected to live; Shelby Gibson through the leg, and John Owens, a bystander, in the chest. The first two were arrested last October on suspicion of being the men who had shot young Morris Wills, a young Englishman. The fight originated with these men who sought revenge against those who were witnesses against them.

Commuted by the President.

WASHINGTON, March 11—In the case of John Youngman, an Indian convicted in Wisconsin of rape and sentenced to be hanged April 3, the president commuted the sentence to imprisonment for life at hard labor in the Wisconsin state prison.

Regarded With Little Favor.

NEW ORLEANS, March 11—The defense in the Hennessy case closed to-night as far as the prisoners, except Manuel Politz, are concerned. The defense to-day sought to prove an alibi for Cagnetto and Scaffedi and presented a good case. As the majority of the witnesses testifying to-day were either Italians or their employes, their testimony is not regarded with much favor, and it is not unlikely that charges of perjured testimony will follow the trial. Politz will try to clear himself from the mass of evidence which has been heaped upon him. The arguments are expected to begin to-morrow evening or Wednesday morning.

THE FIGHT IS STILL ON.

TORONTO, Ont., March 11.—Sir Richard Cartwright, the Liberal leader, has issued an address to his constituents in South Oxford, in which he says:

"For the first time since 1874 we have gained the two central provinces of this dominion, and we have gained them on a clear and distinct issue in the teeth of an absolutely unlimited expenditure of money and of every other engine of corruption which a reckless and utterly unscrupulous administration was able to bring to bear. Our opponents' array, on the other hand, is most literally a thing of shreds and patches made up of ragged remnants from half a dozen minor provinces, a great majority of whom do not even pretend to be actuated by any principle save that of securing a slice of booty for themselves and the sections or constituencies they respectively represent.

"Not even Sir John Macdonald's most abject worshipers can fail to see that he has blundered terribly in many ways, and most of all in his dealings with the United States, and that he has led his followers into a cul de sac, out of which there is no escape save through such a series of pitiful and probably useless humiliations as even his lust for place and power at all hazards and at any sacrifices can scarcely tempt him to undergo. For ourselves, strong in our own convictions and fortified by the verdict of the two chief provinces of the dominion, our course is clear. We propose to pursue, without wavering, the line of policy marked out in successive debates and resolutions already thrice recorded in parliament on the question of free trade with the rest of this continent.

"I am making no idle boast when I pledge that I will not cease my opposition, in season or out of season, till we have succeeded in freeing our country from the shackles which the folly and ignorance of a portion of her citizens have imposed upon us. For my own part, I see very strong reason for believing that the end is near, and very near, and that, humanly speaking, nothing can prevent the success of the Liberal party save only dissension in its own ranks, of which, as matters now stand, I am happy to be alive to assure you there appears to be no danger, so far, at any rate, as its parliamentary representatives are concerned."

UNDERGROUND TRANSPORTATION

A Plan for Running Cable Cars Beneath Sidewalks.

CHICAGO, March 1—The Daily News to-morrow will publish a novel plan for street transit in large cities. The scheme is, in brief:

An under-the-sidewalk cable road to run north, south and west from a central point in the heart of the city. It is declared a company of wealthy capitalists stand prepared with their money and their influence to execute the novel plan of under-ground transportation, which, they declare, is entirely practical. It is claimed a thoroughly competent engineer presented redorts after a long and careful investigation and surveys declaring the project feasible. The plan contemplates running out on one side of a street and returning on the other side. The style of cars will be similar to the present cable cars, and the whole under-ground roadway, including the cars will be lighted with electricity. Stations will be arranged at the corners of intersecting streets in basements of large buildings. The projectors claim for their plan the advantages of a high rate of speed, not possible on the surface; no danger to passengers or pedestrians, and great relief to the overcrowded streets by the removal of the enormous passenger traffic now conducted and which is constantly growing.

SEVEREST ON RECORD.

A Terrible Blizzard Raging in the Southwest of England.

LONDON, March 11—A terrific blizzard prevails throughout the southwest portion of England.

The storm is the severest on record in that part of the country. Many small vessels have been wrecked off the coast. The loss of live stock is also reported to be heavy. Hundreds of sheep and lambs have perished in the storm.

A snow storm has been raging in Scotland and the North of England for a week past, while in the South of England the weather was mild until Sunday. Yesterday's gale, which was totally unexpected, advanced in a northeasterly direction across the bay of Biscay. The blizzard prevails over the whole of the south of England. It commenced in London at 4 o'clock p. m. The storm increased to a fury at night, and there was an unusual rise of the tide. All the channel steamers had boisterous passages. The Dover mail boat nearly sank in the harbor. Her peddle box was completely smashed. The mail service steamers cannot cross the channel. The sea makes a clean breach over the admiralty pier, where the telegraph clerk and a signalman are practically prisoners. Similar reports come from points along the coast.

GIVES THEM BAD NAMES.

The Times Severe Upon Parnell's Emissaries to America.

LONDON, March 11.—The Times to-day comments upon the character of the Parnell emissaries to the United States, saying that James O'Kelly is an ex-Fenian and a late arms agent for the Clan-na-Gael society.

John O'Connor is classed as a man whom John Devoy brought from the rat holes of conspiracy. John E. Redmond is by the Times dubbed an avowed adherent of the "harp without the crown."

The Times' article concludes with the remark that "if any persons can persuade the advanced section in the United States to open its purse it will be them," referring, of course, to the gentlemen mentioned.

Suing Uncle Sam.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., March 9.—Preliminary steps in one of those most important civil suits which has ever arisen in this state have just been completed by Attorney General Hunt in what is known as the suit of the state of Illinois vs. the United States, familiarly known the 2-per-cent claims, the state claiming judgment for several hundred thousand dollars because of non-fulfillment of contract on the part of the government to construct a national road from navigable waters flowing into the Atlantic on east to and through the State of Illinois to the Mississippi river. This highway was known as Cumberland road, and was to be a great national highway.

Much Illness in Pierre.

PIERRE, S. D., Special Telegram, March 11—Hon. George H. Hand of Yankton, one of the best known men of South Dakota and attorney for the Northwestern railway in the state, lies dangerously ill at Hotel Locke. Scarlet fever has broken out, and with about fifty cases of pneumonia and grip, great fears are entertained of a fever epidemic.

Murdered by Their Mother.

MILAN, Tenn., March 11—Mrs. Sarah Belknap at Darden, Henderson county, cut the throats of her daughters Mary and Ella and then cut her own. The three are dead. No cause is known for the terrible deed.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Tuesday March. 3.

SENATE.

The senate held only one session yesterday, adjourning for the day at 12:30 o'clock in order to allow the committees to act upon some of the bills in their possession.

Senator Leavitt presented a bill prohibiting the shipping of eleomergarine into the state.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

S. F. No. 463—By Senator Leavitt—Appropriating $500 for a bridge over Crow river in Meeker county.

S. F. 464—By Senator Leavitt—Appropriating money for a bridge over the outlet to Lake Stella in Meeker county.

S. F. No. 467—By Senator Leavitt—To ensure pure butter.

HOUSE.

The principal feature of the early hours of yesterday's session of the house was the hearing of a number of petitions from railroad employes throughout the state protesting against the passage of the Currier bill as being seriously detrimental not only to their interests, but to the interests of the railroad companies and the commercial and agricultural interests of the state. The petitions were signed by several thousand railroad employes, including 1,100 in Minneapolis and 891 in Brainerd. A petition from Otter Tail was declared to be fictitious by Messrs. Richardson and T. Cole, inasmuch as to their knowledge it was not signed by railroad employes.

Mr. Penney's bill, H. F. 51, amending the statutes so as to make it lawful to prosecute for an offense either under a city ordinance or the state law or both, the conviction under one law being no bar to prosecution under the other, was by consent of the house ordered placed on general orders for reconsideration.

A message from the governor was received announcing that he had signed the bill amending the city charter of Duluth.

The speaker announced the following appointment: As house members of the joint committee on waterways, Messrs. Kendall, Wagoner and Smith.

The house then adjourned till 10 o'clock this morning.

Wednesday, March. 4.

SENATE

Lieut. Gov. Ives was absent yesterday morning, on account of sickness, and at his request Senator Hompe wielded the gavel over the senate.

Senator March introduced a bill amending the savings bank law, which is said to be for the purpose of allowing more of these organizations to be formed.

Senator March introduced a bill providing for the inspection of illuminating oils. According to this bill the mayor of any city, with the approval of the city council, the village council of any village, the supervisors of any town and the county commissioners for townships shall be authorized to appoint inspectors, and are required to do so upon petition of five inhabitants of the city, town, village or township in which the inspector is desired. The inspector shall appoint such deputies as necessary. It is proposed to pay the inspectors by the fee system, but no provision to that effect is placed in the bill as yet. The author said that the object was to get the main idea before the senate and have the measure perfected there.

The Itasca county fight was ended yesterday by the passage in the senate of the house bill organizing the county. The bill as passed provides that the sheriff of Aitkin county shall act as sheriff of Itasca county until the next general election.

Senator Hompe's bill requiring all newspaper articles referring by name to any person to be signed by the persons writing them, was recommended to pass by the senate judiciary committee.

The senate then went into committee of the whole for the consideration of general orders, with Senator Barr in the chair. Among the bills recommended to pass was that of Senator S. D. Peterson making villages separate election districts. When the report was made to the senate this bill was excepted and amendments were offered excepting about a dozen counties from its provisions. Action upon the report on this bill was finally postponed.

There was considerable discussion of Senator Hompe's railroad bill, the committee deciding to report progress.

The bill of Senator Stevens increasing the amount of personal property exempt from taxation from $100 in value to $200 was referred to Senators McHale, Stevens, Davis and Leavitt as a special committee.

HOUSE.

Mr. A. French introduced a bill providing for an annual appropriation of $10,000 to maintain farmers' institutes in the state, and the average cost per annum of each institute is not to exceed $150.

Mr. Wahlund introduced a bill which provides that it shall be the duty of every board of trustees or board of education to take the census of the children of school age in their district between the 1st and 10th of July each alternate year, commencing in 1891. They are to make a census return of all the children between five and twenty-one years in their district, giving the age, sex and nationality. They are also to give the names of the parents or guardians and place of residence, of all children in their district, between the ages of eight and sixteen years. The sum of 3 cents is to be allowed for each child enumerated.

Mr. Carleton introduced a bill providing for the establishment and organization of a state board of immigration, and appropriating $5,000 annually to maintain it.

Mr. Coburn introduced a bill which is to compel railroad companies to put in track scales at all stations where from 300 or more carload lots of grain or merchandise are shipped the previous year, and to provide for the proper weighing of all merchandise, grain, etc., shipped from such stations, thereon.

The employers and employes contract bill was voted upon and was declared lost by a vote of 41 to 38. Mr. Stockwell gave notice to reconsider the bill.

Mr. Kendall gave notice to reconsider the the anti Pinkerton bill.

Thursday, March. 5.

SENATE.

The senate resumed the discussion of the Interest and usury bills yesterday, and when adjournment was reached had proceeded so far as to declare that the rate of interest should be reduced to 6 and 8 per cent. The question of usury was brought squarely before the senate, but before a vote could be reached the senate adjourned.

After the approval of the journal by the senate the chair announced the receipt of a communication from the railroad commission giving the information asked for by the Mayo resolution. The report and enclosed documents formed a very bulky package, and was re erred to the railroad committee.

Among the bills introduced was one by Senator Nelson, providing for the submission of an amendment to the constitution prohibiting sale and manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

Senator S. D. Peterson presented a valued policy insurance bill, the third now before the legislature, there being one in the house and two in the senate.

Senator La Due introduced a bill making the office of the members of the board of equalization elective.

HOUSE.

When the house reassembled at 2 o'clock, Mr. Keyes introduced a resolution, which was passed, authorizing the judiciary committee to fix a date after which no new bills will be introduced.

Two bills, one by Mr. Stone and the other by Mr. Barrett, were introduced to regulate the entering and classification of running, trotting and pacing horses in races, competitions, etc., in the state, and providing penalties for false entries.

Mr. Lomen, nothing daunted by the premature death of his bill to prohibit the use of soft or lignite coal on locomotives within the limits of large cities, introduced another and similar one yesterday.

Mr. Penney of Hennepin introduced an important bill providing for the establishment of a school of mines at the state university. The bill appropriates $6,000 to meet the cost of establishing such a school, and also provides for an annual appropriation of $4,500 for maintaining the same.

Friday March. 6.

SENATE.

Senator Crandall presented a resolution declaring it to be the sense of the senate that all bills appropriating money should be introduced before March 15. Senator Davis moved to amend by making the date March 20. The amendment was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Senator Dean called attention to the deadly air of the senate chamber, which had already sent more than half a dozen senators home sick, while several more were just on the dividing line, and offered a resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the subject of ventilation, to see if it could not be improved. The resolution was adopted, and the chair appointed as the committee Senators Dean, Bell and Mayo.

After the order of reports of committees was finished the senate adjourned until Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

HOUSE.

The committee on military affairs made a long report to the house yesterday morning on the bill introduced by Mr. Stivers providing for the compilation of a history of the Minnesota troops during the Indian and civil wars of 1861 and 1865. The report stated that such a publication would cost $8,864, which the bill proposes shall be taken from the public printing fund. The number of copies to be printed is 10,000. In recommending the bill to pass the committee discussed its merits at great length.

Mr. R. A. Walsh of Ramsey introduced a bill, H. F. 726, which provides that every common carrier shall be liable for all damages sustained in this state by any agent or servant thereof by reason of the negligence of any other agent or servant thereof, without contributory negligence on his part, and no contract, rule or regulation between the agent or servant and the common carrier shall impair or diminish such liability, provided that nothing in this act shall apply to damages sustained on a new road under construction not open to public travel.

Mr. Sinclair's bill relating to town supervisors was also recommended to be relegated to obscurity. And having done these things, the committee rose and reported.

Mr. Furlong drew attention to the shockingly bad ventilation of the house, which is simply mowing the representatives down in swaths.

Saturday, March 7.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

Petitions were received opposing the passage of the Currier railroad bill and favoring the passage of the bills relating to the age of consent and female municipal suffrage.

Mr. Weatherston introduced a bill to prevent the dissemination of "quitch" grass.

A resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee to investigate the sanitary condition of the house of representatives.

Several bills, mostly of a local nature, were introduced and referred to committees.

The house adjourned until Tuesday morning.

Monday, March, 2,

SENATE,

Senator John Day Smith called up the matter of the claim of Platt B. Walker for services in obtaining from the United States a refunding of money collected from Minnesota as direct taxes. The resolution of Senator Leavitt for the appoint a committee of three to investigate the claim was adopted, and Senators Leavitt, Tawney and Barr were appointed as such committee.

When general orders were reached the senate went into committee of the whole, with Senator Sanborn in the chair. Senator Lienau's bill providing for state teachers' certificates was recommended to pass, and also the bill raising the age of consent. According to the bill as recommended the age of consent is fixed at sixteen years. The penalty is graded, so that if the girl is under ten years it is imprisonment in state prison for life; if ten years of age and under fourteen, imprisonment in state prison not less than seven years nor more than thirty years; if fourteen years of age and under sixteen, imprisonment in state prison not less than one year nor more than seven years, or imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months nor more than one year.

HOUSE.

A Boy's Essay on the Cat.

Mr. H. T. Barker, in his amusing papers on schools and education, gives the following essay as authentic:

"The Cat.—The house cat is a fourlegged quadruped, the legs as usual being at the corners. It is what is sometimes called a tame animal, though it feeds on mice and other birds of prey. Its colors are striped tortusshell, black, also black and white, and uthers. When it is happy it does not bark, but breathes through its nose instead of its mouth, but I cant remember the name they call the noise. It is a little word, but I cant think of it, and it is wrong to copy. Cats also mow, which you have all heard. When you stroke this tame quadruped by drawing your hand along its back, it cocks up its tale like a ruler, so as you cant get no further. Never stroke the hairs acrost, as it makes all cats scrat like mad. Its tail is about too foot long, and its legs about one each. Never strike a cat under the belly, as it is very unhelthy.

Don't teeze cats, for firstly it is wrong so to do, and 2nd, cats have clawses which is longer than people think. Cats have 9 liveses, but which is seldom required in this country because of Christianity. Men cats are allus called Tom, and girl cats Puss or Tiss, but, queer as you may think all little cats are called kittens; which is a wrong name which oughter to be changed. This tame quadruped can see in the dark, so rats stand no chants, much less mice.

The Intelligence of Toads.

Toads, in the presence of snakes, usually remain perfectly still. In this is their only safety. For did they make the least movement they would be immediately caught. I have known a hungry snake to lie waiting for over an hour for a frog to move, and even push with the nose to stir him up. This has been called "snake charming," and indeed it looks like it, but the toad is the charmer and the snake the charmee. I remember one day I dropped a toad in the midst of a pit of snakes I had in my back yard. He at once became perfectly still, though surrounded by more than a dozen hungry snakes. There was a circle of fierce heads and glaring eyes around him, but he would not move. The circle narrowed until the protruding tongues almost touched him, yet he was immovable. Just then I was called away for over half an hour, but on returning found the toad, in grave dignity, still holding the fort by most masterly inactivity. This lowly, helpless creature, strong only by adherence to a natural faith, thus baffling enemies numerous and powerful, brought Daniel before the mental vision more vividly than River's celebrated picture.

JUDGED BY HIS CLOTHES.

How a Dude Floor-Walker Insulted One of A. T. Stewart's Friends.

One of the leading citizens of Wilmington, N. C., was John Dawson, says the Washington Post. As a banker he accumulated a large fortune, which was so securely invested that even the ravages of the war left it unimpaired. Mr. Dawson arose from humble origin. He had come over from Ireland when a lad in the steerage of the same ship which brought Alexander T. Stewart. The two boys formed a warm friendship, which lasted through life. They maintained correspondence and grew prosperous, each in his own locality, though the New Yorker's wealth expained with marvelous rapidity.

Immediately at the close of the war Dawson hurried to New York. The strangled commerce of the South had left her markets bare, and, though wealthy Mr. Dawson could only command a shockingly bad suit of butternut nankeen. His wife was hardly better clothed. Entering the huge dry-goods palace of the merchant prince, Mr. Dawson gazed around for his old friend. A dapper floor-walker stepped up brusquely:

"Well, sir," said he, "what can we do for you?"

"I want to see Mr. Stewart," said Mr. Dawson.

"He is busy, sir, and has no time to see you."

"Oh, I didn't know. I'll just look around then, if you have no objection."

The clerk thought he was some country-man who wanted to see Mr. Stewart out of curiosity. The old fellow started around and attracted considerable attention from the gayly-dressed ladies who thronged the store. The underling concluded it was about time to interfere, so he walked up and said:

"I told you it was no use to wait for Mr. Stewart. He is very busy and has no time for any one like you. Now, unless you wish to buy something, you had better be going."

"Mr. Stewart doesn't want to see me, you say, young man?" asked Mr. Dawson, dreamily.

"I don't need to repeat it a third time," replied the clerk. "You had better go at once. We don't want you around the store. You will drive away custom."

Just then the proprietor himself came walking down from the counting room.

"Hello, Aleck!" shouted Mr. Dawson.

The dry-goods millionaire stopped and stared. Then he rushed up and threw his arms around the rough old fellow in the butternut suit.

"Why, John, where did you come from? My dear fellow, I am perfectly delighted to see you. Why didn't you let me know you were here?"

"I tried to, but that young man—"

But the officious clerk had disappeared at the first greeting.

"Where did you get that suit?" asked Stewart. "My carriage is right at the door. Get right in and come to the tailor's. You must have some decent clothes right away. Where is Mrs. Dawson? You must both come right to my house and stay."

The officious clerk tried to keep out of sight every time he saw Mr. Dawson coming, but the latter took a malicious pleasure in running across him every time he came into the store and bowing to him. Finally the clerk came one day and, abjectly apologizing, begged that Mr. Dawson would not carry the story of his rudeness to the proprietor. Mr. Dawson gave him a good-humored tongue-lashing and let him go.

Wife-Kissing in Various Cities.

From the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Kansas City is all torn up over the question whether a man may kiss his wife in public, and, if so, under just what circumstances. It appears that a prominent physician of that city kissed his wife at the theater, and the manager, fearing the influence of such an example, had him taken out of the building by a policeman. As a result the whole subject has come up as one of vital importance, and there is great uncertainty as to the decision.

Public opinion in Kansas City seems to vindicate the manager of the theater in his action, but insists that it must not be carried too far. It is held that there are certain circumstances under which a man may kiss his wife in public, but the line has not yet been drawn. The subject has excited the attention of other cities, which freely offer Kansas City advice as to the proper limit.

Chicagoans think a man may kiss his wife in a railway car without overstepping the proprieties, but should not kiss her when parting at putting her on a street car. In Denver this is considered a very narrow limitation, although it is agreed that it must not be done in the theatre. In that city public sentiment sustains a man in kissing his wife anywhere except at church, the theatre or in a store. There is no limit placed on the exercise of this conjugal practice on the street.

St. Paul, however, looks unkindly on the whole matter. It objects to a man kissing his wife anywhere in public, with the possible exception of the front door step if it is growing dusk. In strong contrast to this is the census of opinion in Bismarck, now putting on airs as a state capital, that a man can kiss his wife whenever he pleases, so long as he doesn't kiss any other man's wife. This is the limit of liberalism, and shows the freedom from conventional restraints that abounds on the far western prairies.

So far as Philadelphia is concerned, this is not likely to become a burning issue. Philadelphians are not over given to kissing their wives under any circumstances, and few instances of it in public are ever witnessed. A man may kiss his wife whenever he wants to and she will let him, but he is not likely to do so under circumstances which will be embarrassing to either party or distressing to the public.

The Hunters' Joke.

Two local sportsmen put up a good job on a companion. When the three went gunning the two took along an old stuffed owl, keeping it hidden under the wagon seat, and during the afternoon they managed to get separated from their victim. They wired the owl securely to the limb of a tree, then regained their companion, and all three started homeward. Near the edge of the woods, close by the bogus owl, the two discharged their guns at pretended game so as not to be expected to fire at the owl. They remarked that they wouldn't load again, they were so near out. The innocent gunner espied the owl the moment they arrived in the vicinity, and began blazing away at a hundred yards' distance.

After the fourth shot, fired in feverish haste, he called to the others to fire also. Don't you see the blamed buzzard's asleep, and he won't wake till he's hit in a vital spot? He might get away while I was loading! An owl as big as that is worth a dozen partridges!" But the friends assured him of their confidence that he would bring him down at last, that it was his bird, and they would get no glory in simply assisting at the death. This seemed to inspire him with new energy, and the shots increased in frequency, and a terrible bombardment was carried on against the body of that owl. Finally the bird staggered a moment and then dropped over, but still clung to the limb with his feet and hung head down.

"He's got the toughest hold on life of any bird I ever shot!" pufled the almost exhausted hunter. I'll soon put him out of his misery." and advancing to within fifty or sixty feet of the owl he fired the final shot, which had the effect to blow the stuffed creatures head off and to scatter several quarts of sawdust in all directions. It was then that there flashed upon the senses of the deluded gunner that a cruel hoax had been played upon him. And this feeling was confirmed when he saw his two companions rolling in the grass and yelling with laughter.—Springfield Homestead.

Not A Vast Cemetary.

Again and again this old poetic fancy of the earth as one great cemetary buried several times deep with dead men and women and children has been refuted by figures. But great is error and will prevail, unless the truth be well and steadily upheld. The population of the earth is now about 1,500,000,000. Suppose the human race to have existed for 6,000 years and to have been always as great as now. In 6,000 years you have sixty centuries. In each century you may count three generations of mankind, or 180 generations in all, each being a generation of 1,500,000. Now lay out a cemetery for one generation. It will be a huge estimate to give to every man, woman and child a grave 5x2 feet, or ten square feet. You want for your graveyard, then, 15,000,000,000 square feet of ground. A square mile contains something less than 28,000,000 square feet.

You want, then, a graveyard not fifty-five yards long by ten wide for your whole generation. Now multiply this by 180 and you have your burial-ground for 6,000 years of mankind. That is a strip of land 1,800 miles long by fifty-five miles wide will be ample. In other words a cemetery containing 100,000 square miles would be sufficient for the whole human race to lie side by side. The estimate which I have given you of the size of each grave is very large. A strictly correct estimate would reduce the size of the required cemetery for more than one-half. But enormous as it is, you could lay out your burial-ground for all men who have lived on earth, so that they could lay side by side, in Arizona or in California, or you could lay it out in Texas large enough to accommodate the race of 6,000 years yet to come, all sleeping in the soil of that one state of this Union.

Dainties of the Primeval Land.

Snakes, lizards, grasshoppers, tree-grubs, the larvæ of beetles, brush turkey's egg, wild honey—in fact, the scrub is full of food when you know how to get it. The best part of a snake is the liver, which is over a foot long in the big snakes. By the way, the natives never eat food that is not cooked. A snake's liver is decidedly good, and has a gamey flavor. Lizard's flesh is like chicken. The beetle larvæ are popped into the fire and eaten with wild honey; they taste like an omelette. Grasshoppers grilled are also capital eating, with a nice nutty flavor.—Greenland Explorer's Dairy.

JAS. MEEHAN, JR. Editor and Prop.

A bill has been introduced to allow the county commissioners to issue bonds to aid in the construction of the Rainy Lake, Crookston & Pacific R. R. Would it not be well to have this movement checked until the people understand what it means?

Senator Lommen has by his actions of late made many friends. His stand upon the interest question and his expressed intention to introduce the county division bill has brought him near to the people, and party bitterness will to a certain extent be wiped out of existance.

Every municipal election makes the necessity of the Australian system of voting more vivid. Men who haven't at heart the welfare of our country—who look upon the right of suffrage as they view the liberty of the swine proceed ing to the trough—influence the voter by means appalling in the extreme. Men have been seen only yesterday prevailing upon the weakness of human nature—or we may say human appetite—filling the voter with intoxicants to such an extent as to deprive him of his reason—leading him to the polls and voting him. This is a common occurrence at every election in every town, village and city throughout our land. Cannot we, in the state of Minnesota, this paradise of agriculture—this home of the farmer living under laws enacted by the honest farmer or his representative—can we not have some protection against the unscrupulous work of conscienceless individuals who are inaugrating a system of corruption which, if it continues, will put the stigma of shame upon every man in the state? All are responsible for our laws.

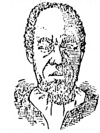
HAS A THICK SKULL.

A Negro Who Has Coped Successfully with Animals and Grindstones.

Abram Parsons, better known as "Abe the Bunter," is one of the chief celebrities of Williamstown, Mass. He celebrated his one hundred and first birthday on the 4th of last July, but still remains hale, hearty and a character.

Parsons is a negro, and began life as a slave in South Carolina, where he remained until 14 years of age. Then he was sold to Stephen Miller, of Claverack, N. Y. He ran away, got to Connecticut, and from that on knew no master.



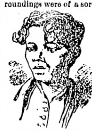
ABE THE BUNTER.

To the thickness and peculiar formation of his skull he owes his celebrity. In the order of their occurrence is given this record of his greatest victories: Butted with a ram and killed him; butted in the door of Harvey Cole's burning store and made entrance for the firemen; butted a ferocious 2-year-old bull insensible and then cut his throat; ditto a cow. Besides this, to amuse the students of Williams college, Abe once smashed a grindstone with his head. The old fellow is well liked by those who know him, because, as he says, he "never robbed a chicken roost." He has provided for the future of his aged wife by selling his body to a physician for $100.

Costiveness is one drawback to sheep husbandry. The flockmaster should know that dry food, especially of the fat forming variety, tends to produce a costive condition. This kills as many sheep as anything else.

KILLED BY A WOMAN.

A New Orleans Wife Beater Slain by His Sister-in-Law.



MAGGIE BROWN.

Harry Lewis was one of the tough negroes of New Orleans. His material surroundings were of a sort to delight a novelist of the Zola school. Squalor, dirt, ignorance, licentiousness and drunkenness environed and made brutal his life. He knew no happiness not purely physical. A dollar meant to him food, drink and a long sleep in the corner of a vermin infested room. When he had no dollar and felt the rage of thirst or hunger he obtained a certain amount of comfort by beating the woman who was called his wife. Her name is Rachel, and she has a sister who is known as Margaret Brown.

The other evening Harry was "givin' it good" to Rachel. Her screams of murder attracted Margaret, who rushed to the room pistol in hand and shot the man dead. Then she ran away, but afterward fell into the hands of the officers, and will soon be put on trial for her life. Her statement of the case is dramatic in its matter of fact simplicity. She says:

"I heard my sister's cries for help, and went over to where Rachel and Lewis were fighting. I found my sister on the bed and Lewis holding her down. He had a knife in his hand. I told him to let her get up, and for answer he cursed me. I then fired once at him. He had often said he was going to kill us. We made a charge against him for drunkenness and disturbing the peace. This was about two months ago. He went off and got back on Thursday and paid the fine of the court. While down the coast he worked on Rutley's plantation. He had been drinking all day, and had spoken about going away. All his clothes were bundled up. I was not drinking, nor was my sister. After the shooting my sister Rachel and myself took our children, Ida Young, aged 7 years, and Caroline Lacey, aged 13 years, and started for my mother's house up town. It was raining so hard, however, that we stopped at Chatman's house, at the corner of Cornu and Hines street, where we remained for the night. Rachel and Lewis had been living together for the past two years."

The Thief Was a Hen.

Once more it has been demonstrated that criminal accusations ought not to be made save on absolute proof. Recently the household of a gentleman well known in business circles of Gravenburst, Ont., was very much upset by the loss of a valuable diamond ring belonging to a guest—a lady from New York. Suspicion at once fell on a servant who was employed as housemaid, but upon her continued and earnest denial of the theft she was retained. A few days after the ring disappeared it was found under the lady's window, with the solitaire stone, however, missing. It was supposed that the thief had removed the diamond to keep it from being identified. The mystery was solved recently in a most unexpected manner, for, in cleaning a chicken for dinner, the cook discovered a small round object in its craw, which was found to be the missing diamond. The supposition now is the ring fell from the lady's hand while she was in bed, and the clothes being shaken next morning, it fell from them into the yard, where it was found by the hen, which, pecking the stone from the setting, swallowed it.

Notice of Mortgage Foreclosure.

Default has been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage, and in the payment of the debt secured thereby, which said mortgage bears date July 31st 1882, and on said date was duly executed and delivered by Samuel Meunir, mortgagor, to the Colonial and United States Mortgage Co., (Limited) mortgagee, a corporation duly organized, and authorized to transact business in Minnesota, and which said mortgage was duly recorded in the office of register of deeds in and for the county of Polk, Minnesota, on the 31st day of July, A. D. 1882 at 4:45 o'clock p. m. in book "G" of mortgages, on pages 563, 509 and 510. That thereafter, to-wit: On the 16th day of August, 1887, said mortgagee, for value received, sold and duly assigned said mortgage to Albert W. Knaak, by an instrument in writing duly executed and delivered on said date, which said assignment was duly recorded in the register of deeds office in said Polk county, Minnesota, on the 5th day of September, 1887, at 11 o'clock a.m., in book 32 of mortgages, on page 110.

And whereas, there is now claimed to be due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby, the amount of four hundred and seventy-six dollars, together with the additional amount of seventy-two dollars, paid by said asignee for taxes on the premises described in said mortgage, and interest on the taxes so paid, which amount is also claimed as a lien on said premises and secured by said mortgage and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise has been had or instituted to recover the debts secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale in said mortgage contained, and therewith recorded, which by reason of the default above mentioned, has become operative, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed, and the land and premises described in and covered by said mortgage, to-wit:

The fractional north-west quarter (¼) of section number three (3), being the south half of said northwest quarter (nw¼) and lots numbered three (three) and four (4), government subdivisions of said section three, (3) in township number one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, of range number forty-two (42) west, containing one hundred and fifty nine 16-100 acres, and situated in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder for cash, to satisfy the amount which shall then be due on said mortgage and debt secured thereby, taxes and interest, together with all foreclosure expenses and lawful disbursements including twenty-five dollars attorney's fees, stipulated to be paid in said mortgage in case of foreclosure thereof, which sale will be made by the sheriff of Polk county or his deputy, at the front door of the First National bank in the village of Red Lake Falls in said county of Polk, Minnesota, on Saturday, the 14th day of March, 1891, at 2 o'clock in the aftrenoon of that day.

Dated Dec. 5th, 1890.

Albert W. Knaak, Asignee of Colonial and United States Mortgage Co., (Limited), Mortgagee.

Things Worth Remembering.

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:59 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. Jackson, St. Paul, Address letters to Chas. E. Dixon, acting city passenger and ticket agent, St. Paul, F. H. Hanson, Gen. Northwestern Pass. agent, Minneapolis, or Louis Eckstein, Assistant General Passenger and Ticket agent, Milwaukee.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

They who do great millions steal
May walk a board and never feel
The chilling blasts of public scorn;
While he, in face of hunger's dread,
Steals but a paltry loaf of bread,
The law will hunt with all its power.
Follows his steps, each day, each hour,
And brand him "thief," then toot its horn,
And on the wind the shame is borne.

The majesty of law! Great God!
Her judges, too, who hold the rod,
And wield it, at the beck and nod
Of wealth and princely station.
What chance hath poverty with thee
What hope in law or court decree!
When justice, as the blind may see,
If but a strange epitome
Of courtly court evasion

Joseph Smith, Jos. Marco, Mm. Wilkins, were out of town Tuesday.

H. A. McClatchie was excused from serving on the Bahnsen jury for cause.

Rev, Ig. Balluff has commenced a set of new scenery for the Opera hall stage.

Johnnie McNerthney went to Lambert Monday where he has taken charge of a school.

The Russell trial has not begun. Great difficulty has been experienced in drafting a jury.

The teacher's examination will be held at the school house next Monday and Tuesday.

The Kilkenney caucus of last Saturday night is not socalled because of any disturbance by the Irish.

Jos. Smith, Jos. Helm and Geo. LaBissionere went to Crookston being subpoenied as jurors in the Russell case.

California oranges, 35 cts. per Doz. Florida oranges 45 cts. They are fine at J. N. NIMESGERN'S FRUIT STORE.

J. D. Marshall did business in Grand Forks and Larimore the last of the week. Mrs. Marshall accompanied J. D. to Grand Forks.

The slide from the head of Kretschmar av is used a great deal by the boys, but the fairer and gentler six don't exactly like the angle of the descent.

Geo. LaBissonicre was at Crookston a couple of days this week.

If you want a 10c smoke for 5c get the "Smokers club" cigar at Joseph Smith & Co's.

14 W. T. SPILLANE.

Danl. O'Connor Jr. was in the city Friday and placed the agency of the Havana Press Drill with H. B. Davis. Dan is in favor of county division—he wants "to give the Irish a chance."

C. B. Wells is now a full-fledged justice of the peace. His office is handy and Curt will at all times be found ready and willing to "tie a knot" or perform any such small favors for his friends.

The Northwest News building at Grand Forks burned Friday entailing a heavy loss upon the proprietors of thousands of dollars, and upsetting the regular routine. Bro. Bierley has our sympathy.

Joseph Smith and F. E. Hunt drove to Crookston Monday evening. Joseph had been drawn as a juryman on the Bahnsen case, but as he reads the paper and usually has opinions of his own, he was not wanted there.

Tuesday, the last election day, was an exact repetition, in point of weather, of that one six years ago. The snow was falling thick and fast all day and lay several inches deep, through which the voters plodded toward Kretzschmar's hall.

Pat Moylen came down from Red Lake Monday. He used snow shoes a great part of the way; says he has become proficient with them, and anybody would swear Pat was a full blooded Chippewa to see him at a distance, gliding over the snow.

Chas. D'Autremont, democratic nominee for attorney general in this state two years ago, resides at Duluth. His father cremated himself in New York last week by setting fire to a pile of hay and laying on it. He must have had about as much grit as his son who ran on the democratic ticket in Minnesota.

Jacob Skala has been shaking hands with friends here the past week. Jacob started on a pleasure trip to St. Paul Chicago and other points last night. He will return in the course of a few weeks. Since his departure from here he has been doing business at Tower, and has made a small fortune in the lively burg. Having sold out there, he will probably remain at Red Lake Falls for some time.

A Maine farmer two years ago took the prize for raising the largest crop of potatoes on an acre. He harvested 738 bushels! But considrable money was paid out for fertilizers and the farmer sat up nights to kill any weed that dared appear. The next year a Wyoming farmer took the prize with 974 bushels and he used no fertilizers. This year some Red River Valley or other North Dakota farmer should beat the record by digging 1,000 bushels from a single acre —Plaindealer.

The merchant or business man in any line who desires to reach the public, and profit in doing so, should give his announcements and invitaiions a genial, frank and good nature cast. The advertisement that bears on its surface the indications of a disordered liver does not attract. It repels, and instead of doing the writer good, it injures him and drives people elsewhere. The merchant who smiles through his announcements and over his counter makes friends and money. "We go this way but once," and people turn aside and pay good money to meet a warm hand clasp and a mile.

Henry N. Copp, the Washington (D. C.) land lawyer, has revised and reprinted his Settler's Guide, the seventeenth edition. In view of the recent confusing legislaion of Congress, this book is an indispensable assistant for all who are, or expect to be, interested in public land. Settlers will save money by purchasing it, and all who expect to take up land any time in the future should get posted and save expensive mistakes. A chapter, illustrated with numerous cuts, shows how to tell townships, section, and quartersection corners and explains the system of surveys. It gives full information about the homestead, pre-emption, timber culture, desert land, and other laws. The price of the book is 25 cents. Address the author.

Go to Wells' and make a selection of fruit,. He keeps a fresh supply of all kinds.

The late J. B. Laird of Red Lake was converted to Catholicets before his death a monthago, Rev Fr. Thomas assisted him in his last moments.

Geo. Burgdorf started for Red Lake this morning with a load of provisions for P. & J. Meehan. Pat Moylan, who will be foreman on one of the drives—return to the lake to make preperations for the drive.

The total cut of logs on the waters tributary to Red Lake will reach at least eight million feet. With the abundance of snow on the ground there is every prospect for good water in the spring, and no doubt most of the logs will reach their destination during the summer.

Frank Kratka was down from Thief River today. Frank has been raised to the dignity of president of the village council. Says their election went off quietly, the caucus previously having decided it. Thief River Falls people want a bridge across the river there and have the piling, all in place ready to begin operations, which will soon be inaugurated.

Mrs. Lila H. Borum, after a pleasant visit with Mrs. Jas. Meehan, returned to Crookston. She will remain there a short time and proceed to her home in Norfolk, Va. This will, no doubt, be Mrs. Borum's last visit to the Northwest and her many friends here wish an abundance of happiness in her Old Dominion home.

Hop Sam has taken his departure to a more congenial locality, where his hours of rest will not be disturbed. The small boys here did not appreciate Hop, doubtless from the fact that they don't wear white shirts and standup collars, and his sensitive soul, pining for more human sympathy and laundry work, at last yielded, and he fled. Warren will hereafter be his home.

It is not generally known or remembered that the pre emption and timber culture laws have been repealed. In the future the homestead act alone will be in force. This marks an era in the public land policy of the United States, showing that the days are passed when Uncle Sam's public domains were well nigh limitless. All the land in the reservation will thus be taken under the homestead act.

A. D. Wishard was down from Red Lake Falls, yesterday on business. Prof. Wishard has the exclusive agency for Polk county for the sale of F. T. Day's lands and publishes in this issue a list of the lands he has for sale. He says he is doing a good business, and good farming lands such as he has got, are becoming more in demand every day.—Crookston Times.

The firm of Hunt & McClatchie has been dissolved by mutual consent, Mr. Hunt retiring. For the past three years this firm has been doing a very profitable business. Mr. McClatchie will continue at the old stand. Mr. Hunt has not decided what he will do but is content to remain quiet for a time and keep an eye to the windward and invest when an opportunity is presented. He has confidence in the future greatness of the Falls and isn't afraid to put his money in here. The NEWS wishes success to both Mr. Hunt and Mr. McClatchie.

Ed. Garceau was around Thursday last with spaces to sell on the advertisement portion of the drop curtain. The business men represented will be Bangs & Co., Joseph Smith & Co., The NEWS, W. A. Schreiter, L. A. Kaufer, Adam Schmitz, S. J. Sprague, J. P. Harren, Joseph Helm, Nick Nimesgern, C. B. Wells, Mrs. B. Zaiser. Joseph Helm will do the painting. The curtain will be 20 feet long and considerably higher, and the stage will thus present a much more pleasing and roomy appearance.

Napoleon Marleaumet with an accident last night that is liable to lay him up for a long time. He was doing chores when one of the horses kicked him in the ankle, breaking one of the bones, The wound thus inflicted is painful, Dr Watson dressed it. and Napoleon has now a bandaged foot and must necessarily be idle a long time. His friends extend their sympathy, which is liable to take substantial form. A year ago he met with a similar misfortune, and it is remarkable that his father received a broken leg about a year ago in the same manner.

The Beaudry church which stands about three miles south, has been given by the people of that parish to the St. Joseph's congregation of this place and will be removed here shortly and placed upon the ground formerly occupied by the church destroyed by fire. The two parishes will unite. The edifice is sufficently large to accommodate the people of both parishes and with the large congregation, the work of finishing and decorating the interior, will soon be accomplished. This is what the people like to see. The energy displayed by the congregation is commendable. The fine, commodious edifice will be a credit to the city.

The Village Election

Officers Chosen for Another Year to Steer the Rudder of Our Municipal Ship—A Closely contested and Interesting Race—The Result Satisfactory.

Tuesday was election day.

And everyone that knows anything about Red Lake Falls and her wide-awake and enterprising citizens, knows what an important day this is for Red Lake Falls—how far-reaching the results and what energies are brought into play!

Friday night a citizens' caucus was held in the council room to nominate a ticket. Subsequent events showed that the caucus was a perfectly rerpesentative one—remarkably so, in fact. After the caucus several alterations were made and Tuesday morning two tickets were in the field. This of course was only the natural order of events. The wildsst sculptor of peaceful visions could hardly stretch his imagination to the extent of an election in Red Lake Falls with but one ticket in the field! The deepest interest centered in the contest for the presidency. At the caucus Jas. Meehan Jr. had been nominated by a majority of one over W. A. Schreiter. The latter's friends insisted on him making the run, however. It was evident that the outcome would be very close, and the council room was crowded to the utmost while the ballots were being counted. The outcome was first unoficially announced a tie, and at once the excitement rose to a high pitch. Everybody talked in a very shrill key to everybody else, and it was apparent that such a state could not possibly result in anything good. It was the diplomacy of Judge Jim Holmes that at last restored order. It was then unanimously agreed to adjourn and leave the judges of election for a tete-a-tete. A statute book was procured to settle the point in contraversey, which arose from the fact that two votes had been cast together. The disposal of these settled the question. The judges declared James Meehan Jr. elected by a majority of one, thowing both the ballots out that had been cast, folded together, in pursuance of the statute in the instance. Consmption Cured.

An old physician, retired from practice having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Affections, also a positive and radical cure for Nervous Debility, and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge, to all who desire it, this receipe in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Sent by mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper. W. A. NOYES, 820 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

"Scarcely Able to Walk."

How often have we heard that from people just getting about after a severe illness: how often is it on the lips of the weary house-mother at the close of the day, when it seems as if every burden of the whole family had been laid on her shoulders. How welcome to such is the invitation of some friend to "take a ride;" how the spin through the fresh air brings color to the pale cheek, lights up the dull eye, and renews the strength. If your friends are in this tired condition, give them a ride, and one that has a constant change of pleasant scenes will be the best. The most charming scenery in the West is that along the Mississippi River, from Rock Island to St. Paul, and "The Burlington" is the line by which to see it, gliding over a smooth track in palaces on wheels. Buy a ticket over this line for your friend who is "scarcely able to walk," and get your money back in noting the improvement sure to follow the journey. Any ticket agent "The Burlington" or connecting lines, can attend to a call, or if you wish to know more about the lines, write to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.

Happy Hoosiers.

Wm. Timmons, Postmaster of Idaville Ind., writes: "Electric Bitters has done more for me than all other medicines combined, for that bad feeling arising from Kidney and Liver trouble." John Leslie, farmer and stockman, of same place, says: "Find Electric Bitters to be the best Kidney and Liver medicine, made me feel like a new man." J. W. Gardner, hardware merchant, same town, says: Electrict Bitters is just the thing for a man who is all run down and don't care whether he lives or dies; he found new strength good appetie and felt just like he had a new least on life, Only 50c. a bottle at Schrieter's.

La Grippe Again.

During the epidemic of Lagrippe last season Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, proved to be the best remedy. Reports from the many who used it confirmed this statement, They were not only quickly but the diseas left no bad results. We ask you to give this remedy a trial and we guarantee that you will be satisfied with results, or the purchase price refunded. It has no equal in La Grippe, or any Throat, Chest or Lung Trouble. Trial bottles free at Schreiters.

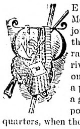
INSULT TO INJURY.

A wise professor loved a pretty maid,
Calling the cause of science to his aid,
'Twas thus he wooed her:
"My life work on the prehistoric Human
Has need of your bright wits, as I'm a true man;
O, share my toil and fame, most lovely woman!"
'Twas thus he sued her.

The mercenary girl made answer trite:
"I really fear I must, sir, in that light
Decline to view you;
Although you cause me pride a great elation,
I cannot wed above my mental station,
But I'll become, for a consideration,
Assister to you."
—Harvard Lampoon.

HELD FOR RANSOM.



WE had been out from Melbourne two days, journeying toward the new town of Murray City, on Murray river, and we were only two miles from a post station, where a guard of mounted police had their headquarters, when the driver of the stage or wagon suddenly brought his horses to a dead stop. This was in the days of thirty year ago, before any part of Australia was half civilized by the English, and before the big island had been more than half surveyed. There were plenty of bushrangers hunting every highway, and every stage was usually accompanied by a guard. In our case five of us had put together and hired a private conveyance. It was one of the usual stages, but making a special trip for our benefit. Of the five three were Englishmen, going up to the valley of the Murray to locate land, the fourth was an American, who had been in the country two years, and I had landed in Melbourne only the week before. My compatriot was named Davis, a widower, and he had his only child along—a bright little girl eight years old. He was going up to sheep-ranch in partnership with a friend already settled, and he could not bear to leave his child behind him in the town.

The five of us were well armed and every hour since leaving Melbourne we had been ready to defend ourselves. As we had met with nothing to alarm us thus far, and as we knew we were close upon a station, no one was prepared for what happened. The stage had no sooner stopped than two men came up on each side, covered us with revolvers, and a gruff voice announced:

"Now, then, the first move and off goes yer heads! Step out here one by one!"

I was the first one out. It was just at sundown, and on a portion of the road between two ridges. The two men on that side were rough, unkempt, desperate-looking fellows—fair samples of the other two— and the instant I saw them I knew we were in for trouble. When we were all out they ordered the driver to turn into a blind road to the right, and we followed after the wagon. As we were ordered to follow the vehicle the leader of the gang said:

After going thirty rods we were as well hidden from the highway as if we had gone ten miles, and were brought to a halt in a little glade. As there were five to four, you may wonder that we did not make a break. The first man who had moved to pull his revolver would have been shot in the back. Davis could not have been counted on anyhow, as his anxiety for his child took all the fight out of him. The driver, if not in league with the rangers, was at least treated as neutral. While he was armed, he took matters so coolly that he saw he was out of the scrape. The five of us were placed in a row, and while three men stood behind us the fourth disarmed us and went through our pockets. We were a poverty-stricken crowd. The $30 they took from me constituted my worldly wealth, while Davis and the others had been too sharp to trust their money to a stage ungarded. The whole amount did not pan out over $150, and the bush rangers were furious.

"Why, you bloody bloke!" shouted the leader, "you alone ought to have at least £200 with you!"

"Do you think I'm carrying my money about the country for such as you?" protested the hot-headed victim.

"I'm a-wishing you hadn't got a blasted penny!" added the second.

"The idea of it! You'll all be hung for this!" growled the third.

Davis and I had nothing to say. We didn't see that the case could be helped by protestations. The words of the Englishmen provoked our captors to a white heat, and they were knocked about unmercifully the next five minutes, Then the leader, speaking to the two of us, asked:

"You are not English?"

"No; Americans."

"I thought so. Where are you bound for?"

We gave him our destinations.

"Well, we're a bit sorry to take your money, small as it is, and so delay your journey; but we've got to do both. These three coves is rich, and we ain't going to let 'em off with shillings where we ought to have pounds."

While we were held under guard one of the men went over to the driver and held a consultation with him. and the result was that he turnrd his team about and dissapeared in the direction of the highway. We were then ordered to proceed in a northerly course through the scrub, one man leading and the others bringing up the rear. Not a word has been addressed to little Eva by any of the men, although all had looked at her with softened expersion. She realized what was going on, but went through it bravely, and when we started through the scrub her father carried her on his shoulder. We traveled for six or seven miles before halting, and then came upon a camp fire, with a fifth bushranger sleeping beside it. He was rudely awakened, and I then saw that he had his right arm in a sling having been wounded or meeting, with an accident. The camp was a thicket, with a temporary shelter of brush to sleep under. The five of us were ordered to sit down under this shelter, and then every man's feet were tied together, at the ankles and a guard took a seat before us. Then the fire was replenished, and the bushrangers gave us such a supper as they could afford, which consisted solely of roast mutton and a flour cake baked in the ashes. When we had eaten this and been offered a drink of water all around the leader sat down before us and said:

"Now, genis, business is business the world over. We have got to have money. We want it to convert these 'ere natives from the error of their ways, and, it will take a heap to do it. You first gent who was so ready with your tongue, how much are you worth?"

"It's none o' yer blasted business, you scoundrel, you," was the hearty reply.

"Well, mebbe not. Bein' as you is so poverty stricken I'll put you down for only £300. Now you second gent."

"I could raise £100 if in Melbourne."

"That means £200 for you, then. You'll lie a half or more. Now, you third gent."

"I'll see you hanged for this day's work," was the reply.

"Mebbe you will, but not after I sees your money. You also go down for £300. Now, the fourth gent."

"You've got my last dollar," I replied. "I landed in Melbourne only a week ago."

"That's bad for all of us. but I guess you tell the truth. Now, you fifth gent."

"I might possibly raise £5 if up at the ranch," replied Davis, "but that would be all. I am poor and just making a start."

"Is that your little gal?"

"Yes."

"Where's the mother?"

"Dead."

"Shoo! That's too bad. What's the gal's name?"

"Eva."

"Mighty sweet. Say, gal, come and kiss me."

She went over to him and kissed his bronzed and bearded cheek without the slightest hesitation, and he held her for a moment and looked her over and said:

"Sweet as honey! I wouldn't hurt you for all the gold in the big world!"

She was allowed to return to her father, and the leader then said:

"We shall hold you three peppery gents until you raise $800 for us, and as these Americans might give the alarm we shall be obliged to hold them as well. Sorry to do it, but business is business, and if we don't look out for ourselves no one will."

Each one of the Englishmen swore by all that was good and great that he'd never pay a cent, but the bushrangers only laughed at their words. At a late hour we were ordered to go to sleep, and the last thing I saw before my eyes closed was the guard sitting on a rock at my feet. The night passed quietly and as soon as we had breakfasted in the morning the leader took pen, ink and paper from a box and said to the Englishman:

"Now, then, here's the chance to write to your friends to raise the rocks, and I'll see that the letters reach them."

Each one of the three refused point blank to make any attempt to raise money although it was plain they had a desperate lot to deal with and that they would suffer for their obstinacy.

"Well, some other day will do just as well," laughed the leader. "But I want it understood that each day of delay adds £25 to the ransom."

We were then untied, given a few minutes to get over our stiffness of limb, and then we all set off over a rugged, scrubby country toward a range of hills. We traveled steadily until noon, and then came to a very secure stronghold among the hills. By placing as in a natural enclosure of about an eighth of an acre we were surrounded by rocky walls on three sides and on the fourth the bushrangers built their fire and made their camp. As we were penned in here the chief of the bushrangers announced to the Englishmen that he would give them two days in which to make up their minds to send for the money. If they held out at the end of that time he would take his own measures to extort the money. One of the Englishmen was a large landowner in Australia, another was a civil officer at Melbourne, the third was fresh from England, and was intending to start a manufactory of some sort at Melbourne or Sidney. Davis and I both labored with them to make them realize the situation but they were pigheaded and obstinate declaring that it was all a bluff, and that the rangers would not dare proceed to extremes. We believed differently. They were escaped convicts, each one outlawed, and a more villainous gang one never looked at.

On the morning of the third day, without having annoyed us in the least during the interval, the chief called for their decision. Each Englishman curtly replied that he would never get another dollar of their money. The civil officer was the leader and most independent. He was seized, tied hand and foot, and after his boots and stockings had been removed he was placed with his feet to a fire. He stood the torture until he could smell the odor of his burning soles and then gave in. The other two followed his example without waiting for the torture. Each one wrote a note to a friend in Melbourne worded by dictation.

While the chief was a rough looking fellow, he proved to have a very fair education. When the letters were ready he took them and started, presumably to find a messenger to act as go-between. There were four left to guard us, and after the chief had gone one of them bruised some herbs and kindly tied up the Englishman's feet. Our three fellow prisoners rather shunned Davis and myself during the afternoon, seeming to be put out because we were not called upon to ransom ourselves. But we afterward recalled that they made much of the child, and had her with them a good share of the time, Each outlaw also had a good word for her whenever she came near, and she was permitted to run about without restraint.

At 4 o'clock in the afternoon this was the situation: Three of the guards were asleep beyond the fire. The fourth sat on the ground, with his back to a rock, reading a novel, while he had a rifle across his knees, Davis and I lay close together talking matters over, and the Englishmen were ten steps away. Little Eva was running about, shouting and playing. All at once we heard the pop of a revolver, followed by a death cry, and as we sprang up two of the Englishmen, each with a pistol in hand, dashed past us. In sixty seconds more every one of the bushrangers was dead. They had coaxed Eva to bring them the pistols, which were lying on the far side of the camp, and she had passed behind the guard and made two trips. As soon as they had the weapons one of them shot down the half-asleep guard, and then the others were slain before sleep was fairly off their eyelids.

The smoke was still hanging over the camp when we began the construction of a litter, and within half an hour we were headed for the highway and carrying the victim of torture along with us. We kept going all night, as we had to go slow, and about daylight came out at the stage station. A squad of mounted police set off for the camp, and on their way to it came across and killed the leader of the bushrangers, thus wiping out the last of a bad gang.

A Scheme that Didn't Work.

Two young assistant city physicians paid a visit to the Washington school, the other morning which they will remember to the longest day they live. So will 16 young misses who rank nearly or quite as young ladies. Prof. Ridgeway had a hand in the affair, and, deeply appreciative of a good joke, he enjoys the telling of this one. There is some sort of a law about the vaccination of children, and the young medicos called at the school with a request that a number of the pupils be brought out for examination as to whether their scars were of a recent enough date. Their pockets were stuffed with points ready for use, and they were eager and anxious to experiment. Prof. Ridgeway, the obliging principal, told them they should have all the subjects they wanted, and stepping into a recitation room, spoke to the pupils of the seventh grade. Then they filed into the hall, 16 as fair young ladies as one could wish to see. The doctors stood aghast, while the young ladies stood up in line with wondering interest. Prof. Ridgeway introduced the young specialists, and tersely explained the object of their visit. The young ladies blushed and hesitated. The young men blushed and looked for a means of escape. One bright young miss, with a convenient pair of scissors, quietly cut a slit in the left sleeve of her dress, and this brought the young ladies to the giggling stage, which threatened to become hysterical as a companion whispered, "Don't start that fashion! Mine isn't on my arm." Then the young medicos fled wildly, the girls went into convulsions, and Prof. Ridgeway erased every black mark against everybody for the day. —Kansas City Times.

Remarkable Surgical Operation.

It is rather an unusual occurence to remove part of the thigh bone by the aid of a chisel and hammer, but such an operation was successfully accomplished the other day at St. Mary's hospital by Dr. D. J. Hayes. Stephen McGurty, of Franklin township, Manitowoc county, had his right leg injured two years ago. Inflammation set in, and finally the disease developed into necrosis of the bone. Then a new growth of bony tissue, an inch in thickness, soon incased the diseased structure, and prevented the young man from walking. The contiguous tissues became perforat with fistulæ, from which flowed disagreeable pus. The surgeon operated on the new bone with a chisel and hammer, and after two hours' labor removed every vestige of the structure. The young man has rapidly improved and will shortly be able to walk.—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Four Thousand Years.

How many of the engineering works of the Nineteenth Century will there be in existence in the year 6,000? Very few, it is feared, and still less those that will continue in the far-off age to serve a useful purpose. Yet there is at least one great undertaking conceived and executed by an engineer, which, during the space of 4,000 years, has never ceased its office, on which the life of a fertile province absolutely depends to-day. We refer to the Bahr Joussuf—the canal of Joseph—built, according to tradition, by the son of Jacob, and which constitutes not the least of the many blessings he conferred on Egypt during the years of his prosperous rule. This canal took its rise, as given in Engineering, from the Nile at Asiut, and ran nearly parallel with it for nearly two hundred and fifty miles, creeping along under the western cliffs of the Nile Valley, with many a bend and winding, until at length it gained an eminence, as compared with the riverbed, which enabled it to turn westward through a narrow pass, and enter a district which was otherwise shut off from the fertilizing floods on which all vegetation in Egypt depends. The northern end stood seventeen feet higher than low Nile, while at the southern end it was at an equal elevation with the river. Through this cut ran a perennial stream, which watered a province named the Fayoum, endowing it with fertility and supporting a large population.

In the time of the annual flood a great part of the canal was under water, and then the river current would rush in a more direct course into the pass, carrying with it the rich silt which takes the place of manure, and keeps the soil in a state of constant productiveness. And this, with the exception of the tradition that Joseph built it, can be verified to-day, and it is not mere supposition or rumor. Until eight years ago it was firmly believed that the design has always been limited to an irrigation scheme, larger, no doubt, than that now in operation, as shown by the traces of abandoned canals, and by the slow aggregation of waste water which had accumulated in the Birket el Queran, but still essentially the same in character.

Many accounts have been written by Greek and Roman historians, such as Herodotus, Strabo, Mutianus and Pliny, and repeated in monkish legends or portrayed on the maps of the Middle Ages, which agreed with the folklore of the district. These tales explained that the canal dug by the ancient Israslite served to carry the surplus waste of the Nile into an extensive lake lying south of the Fayoum, and so large that it not only modified the climate, tempering the arid winds on the desert and converting them into the balmy airs which nourished the vines and olives into fullness of fragrance unknown in any part of the country, but also added to the food supply of the land such immense quantities of fish that the royal prerogative of the right of piscary at the great weir was valued at $250,000 annually. This lake was said to be 450 miles round; and to be navigated by a fleet of vessels, while the whole circumference was the scene of industry and prosperity.

The Oldest Man.

The Metropolitan.

Victoriana, who was probably the oldest man who has lived in this century is dead. Victoriana was an Indian and was 132 years of age when he passed to the happy-hunting-grounds of the good red man. He passed his last days at an Indian village called Soboba which is situated in the northern part of San Diego county, California. Victoriana was one of the most picturesque and interesting figures among the scattered tribes of the extreme West. He was unique, in that he was noted for his industry, honesty and sobriety. In his younger days Victoriana was a very "big Injun," as was also his father before him. The latter was one of the makers of Indian laws now existing among the redskins, and his word was always final in the settlement of disagreements or the elucidation of knotty subjects. A curious incident in Victoriana's life was that toward the close of it, his eyes though retaining their keenness of vision to the last, slowly shrivelled and dried up in his head, until there was no trace of either eyelid or pupil. Notwithstanding his loss of sight, however, he traveled about on a trusty horse, having gone to town on horseback on the very day of his death. He was a true stoic, with the indomitable courage and indifference to hardship so characteristic of the American Indian. Victoriana was supposed to have reached the remarkably advanced age of 132 years, and in all probability was much older. His hair was perfectly white, which is an occurence of great rarity among the redmen.

Remarkable Somnambulism.

Two remarkable cases of somnambulism are reported from Berlin. A boy and girl, aged about 11, suddenly developed somnolency. While playing in school they suddenly fall asleep; also while walking, standing or speaking, so that they do not finish their sentences. If they are put to bed and afterwards awake, they try to continue the conversation which was broken off by sleep, and answer questions which were then asked them.—Montreal Star.

RUSSIAN GIRLS.

Nearly All of Them Marry Young Without Long Engagements.

The daughter is a great pet in Russian families, perhaps because there are generally more sons than daughters. Take the younger members of the imperial family as an example, and we find twenty-two grand dukes and only seven grand duchesses; and this may be stated to be about the average proportion in most families. The necessity for men in the rural districts as assistants in the agricultural labors of their fathers, has given rise to a saying: "One son is no son; two sons are half a son; but three are a whole son."

Notwithstanding the pride and satisfaction with which the birth of a boy is hailed, the little girl is the darling; the object of the tenderest affection and care of parents and brothers, not to speak of other adoring relatives. Much is not expected of her in the way of assistance in the family, she is indulged as far as their means and circumstances will permit, and she takes it quietly and as her due, but it is rarely that she does not voluntarily and tacitly contribute her share in helping her mother. Her occupations are much about the same as those of all European girls, but parish work in Russia existeth not for her. She cannot have classes at Sunday schools, as religion is taught by priests or deacons.

It would be thought quite extraordinary and improper were a young unmarried girl to visit the sick or poor in towns, but in villages it is sometimes done under the direction of mamma or grandmammá. She is undoubtedly fond of pleasures, likes to be well dressed, and generally adores dancing. Music is not the Russian girl's forte, nor is solo singing. Most of the institukas, though they thoroughly understand the theory of music, play like a child of 12; of course there are exceptions, but it is seldom you find a girl able to play a quadrille or polka off-hand.

Girls marry very young in Russia, and there are very few of those most estimable individuals called old maids. There are no colonies for the Russian's to run away too, and satistics show that the birth of boys much exceed those of the girls.

Long engagements are not approved of, they seldom last longer than a few months, during which time the fiancee is the mistress of the house. Her girl friends assemble to help sew the dowry, the sewing afternoon generally ending in a dance after tea, when the bridegroom drops in with a few bachelor friends. Another wedding is thus often arranged, and so on, little by little, till, like the fifty one cards in the game of "old maid" they pair off, and one, generally of the sterner sex, is left—forlorn.—English Illustrated Magazine.

Prices for Rare Books.

People who are fortunate enough to possess first editions of Burns will do well to send them into the market while the craze for them lasts. A copy which sold for £66 in 1887 sold for £120 last season. It is clear that for some time to come there will be a great run on the late Mr. Halliwell Phillipps' folio edition of Shakespeare in sixteen volumes, of which only 150 copies exist. Nine years ago this work was sold for £51, but last season the copy which was offered realized £171. —London World.

"German Syrup"

J. C. Davis, Rector of St. James' Episcopal Church, Eufaula, Ala.: "My son has been badly afflicted with a fearful and threatening cough for several months, and after trying several prescriptions from physicians which failed to relieve him; he has been perfectly restored by the use of two bottles of Boschee's German Syrup. I can recommend it without hesitation."

An Episcopal Rector.

Chronic severe, deep-seated coughs like this are as severe tests as a remedy can be subjected to. It is for these long-standing cases that Boschee's German Syrup is made a specialty. Many others afflicted as this lad was, will do well to make a note of this.

J. F. Arnold, Montevideo, Minn., writes: I always use German Syrup for a Cold on the Lungs. I have never found an equal to it—far less a superior. ⑨

INCOMPLETE.

I think the words that are sweetest,
Are the words that are never said;
And the moments that pass the fleetest
Are the last ones with the dead.

The thoughts that are truest and bravest,
Are the ones that are never expressed.
And the tender love thou cravest,
For fear is never confessed.

I know that the friends that are truest
And those we see in our dreams;
Though we feel the one that is newest
Is very near what he seems.

The rose that is sweetest and fairest
Is the bud that is killed by the frost;
And the love that is dearest and rarest
Is the true love we just have lost.

AN UGLY CUSTOMER.

"I've stood this kind of business 'bout as long as I shall," said Fred Harper coming in from the pasture where the sheep and lambs were kept.

"What troubles you now, Fred?" asked his father, anxiously.

"There's another sheep gone out of the flock since I looked them up the first of the week," replied Fred, as he scrubbed his face vigorously at the sink.

"Another one gone!" exclaimed Mrs. Harper. "Something must be catching them. Perhaps a bear from Potter's mountain has come across Sucker brook to our ridge."

"We've lost three sheep and a lamb and Mr. Elkins has lost his calf within six weeks," said Fred excitedly. "If a bear caught them I think 'tis strange I can't find a trace of the place where he's taken them. Not a bit of wool or any thing to show where they were caught and eaten can be found in that pasture."

"It does seem strange," assented his father, as he raised himself on his elbow and looked out of the window. "You'll have to do the best you can, Fred; I can not be much help to you yet."

Mr. Harper was just recovering from a severe illness and was still too feeble to worry much about the farm work.

About the disappearance of the sheep Fred had his own opinion which he was determined to verify that very night, if possible.

He said nothing to his father, or indeed to any one, of his intention, but he was resolved to watch in the midst of that flock of sheep every night until he had satisfied himself the sheep were taken in the day-time. Then it would be time to make further investigations.

That evening, as the plucky boy of fifteen was leaving the shed with an axe on his shoulder and an old robe to spread on the ground under him, he encountered his sister Nellie, a year younger than himself.

"What are you doing Fred?" asked she.

"I'm going to camp up on the ridge by that big, lone maple, where the sheep come at night," replied Fred, as he put down the axe and began to roll up his robe so as to carry it easily.

"What makes you do that?" asked she, in astonishment. "I don't believe mother would want you to."

"I am in hopes to find out who's stealing our sheep and lambs," said Fred. "I mistrust Hank Garcelon, and if I catch him at it I'll spoil his appetite for mutton for one while."

"Oh, Fred! May be 'tis a bear after all! I'm so 'fraid something'll happen to you. Can't I go, too?" entreatingly.

"Go, too! I should smile! Why, you'd be scared to death before morning," returned he.

"No I wouldn't either; and you'll be dreadful lonesome up there all alone, Fred. Can't I please go?" coaxed she.

"No, indeed, Nellie, I couldn't let you;" said he decidedly. "The house is not more than forty rods off and all in sight and hearing, and I can come down if I get very sick of it. Don't tell mother, she'd worry so; but you see we must save the sheep to pay the doctor's bill."

He again shouldered his axe and marched off down the road to the pasture bars and up the steep ledge to the maple, where he ensconced himself under the tree and in the shadow of a huge pile of cord wood, hauled there and "yarded" the winter before from higher up on the ridge, when a new clearing was beling made. It was a bright moonlight night and he could see his home almost as plainly as in the day-time.

Nellie went up to her room and raised the window, "so as to keep Fred company," she said to herself, and it seemed nearer to have the window wide open. She had determined to keep watch with him even if she were not permitted to join him.

The sheep came back and settled down near the dark shadow of the wood pile where Fred had disappeared, as if a human companion were agreeable to them, and all was quiet once more.

An hour passed and Nellie found herself nodding and rightly guessed that Fred, tired with his hard day's work, must be fast asleep.

It was now half past ten o'clock and she felt a strong inclination to retire, but resisted because of the feeling that it would be leaving Fred alone and in danger!

She strained her eyes to catch a glimpse of him in the gloom that surrounded the shady side of that wood pile.

Suddenly there was a scampering among the sheep, and while she held her breath and clung to the window in her excitement there was a frightened scream followed by loud calls for help.

She waited for nothing more, but sprang down the back stairs and turned Rover loose. The instant the intelligent dog was free he disappeared with a savage growl in the direction of the struggle, which now she could plainly hear.

Let us now return to Fred.

He was awakened by the scattering of the sheep and lay quite still for a moment grasping his axe and looking to see if it was a bear or Hank Garcelon, as he had imagined, that was depleting the flock.

What ailed that tree? He did not remember that either limb reached the ground when he was there that morning. Now it was sweeping the ground and waving into the air more than any of the other limbs.

Great Scott! Look at those glittering eyes! With the scream Nellie had heard he sprang to his feet to face the oscillating body capped by the horrible head of an immense snake!

The long limb of that tree had evolved a great serpent!

Months before the story had been circulated that a python had escaped from a traveling menagerie which had been exhibiting in that vicinity, but people had laughed at the report as a good advertisement and also a good excuse for the absence from their exhibition of the interesting reptile.

Here he was to-night to answer for himself, however. Nothing to laugh at, either!

He had probably been coiled under that pile of wood or quite possibly within that very tree-top all through that hot July day. The coolness and quiet of evening had tempted him out for recreation or plunder, and poor Fred had chosen the right time and place to get a good view of a "rare specimen," without paying his quarter!

Fred raised his axe to strike, but before he could bring it down upon the sleek, fat body of his dreadful antagonist there was a blood-curdling hiss, a lightning-like glide along the short distance between them, and the snake, with one sweep of his lithe coil, had enveloped the boy's body and right arm in an ever-tightening fold that, without immediate outside interposition, would soon have rendered this story too tragic to be told.

Then rang out his cries for help from those who would so gladly aid him did they know his peril.

As he struck away the distended jaws and swaying head, which seemed to be forever before his face, and every moment to threated him, his situation was not unlike that of Laocoon of old.

All his efforts seemed to be in vain; the awful, crushing constriction was fast telling upon his strength and he fell on one knee upon the body of the python.

He will never forget just how it seemed; the cold, slimy surface and its ivory-like impenetrability and resistance to the touch of his hands.

Could no one hear his cries, which he felt were growing fainter?

Just as he was about to succumb to his fate, and the fierce compression of that tense, steel-like coil, so cold, so revolting, he heard Rover's savage growl and with a last cry of: "Take him, Rover! Take him, old fellow!" he fainted.

As Nellie rushed down the road to the pasture bars she encountered a two-horse hay-rack loaded with the the paraphernalia of hay-making and with three men on board; neighbors returning from cutting hay on a distant meadow.

She hastily summoned them to her assistance.

They arrived on the ridge just in time to hear Fred's last cry, and see Rover plunge desperately to the rescue.

When Rover's sharp teeth closed in the snake's body, he swept one coil from about the boy, and turning like a flash attacked the dog, hissing angrily.

Rover sprang back in affright, but, still true to his young master, he immediately charged upon his foe with renewed vigor. But here the terror-stricken spectators came to their senses; and while one pounded the audacious cannibal with a pitch fork he had brought with him from the wagon, another seized the axe Fred had dropped, and cut him into a dozen pieces before he would let go his vise-like grip upon poor Fred, who now lay like one dead.

The boy was taken home, and by their united efforts was finally restored to consciousness. He looked around the room, at his nearly frantic mother; at his father, pale and trembling, seated beside the bed; took as long a breath as his strength and recent squeezing he had been subjected to would admit, and asked in a voice scarcely above a whisper:

"Am I dead, father? Did he get away, Mr. Burton?" turning to the rescuer, who was rubbing his arm, which was numb and powerless.

"No," replied Burton. "We got there just in time to prevent his getting away with you inside him. "He's dead."

"All right, then," whispered Fred. guess he broke a rib for me, but I can stand that as long as he'll never get a chance to steal another lamb."

Fred didn't recover from that encounter for several days, and even now the sight of the most harmless of snakes gives him an uncomfortable chill.

His friends thought he displayed good courage, but he often asserted that in the surpreme moment, when his arm was raised to strike, he would gladly have taken to his heels and fled if he could, and that his part in the battle was wholly defensive.—Annie L. Beal, in Yankee Blade.

Help Your Neighbor.

An organization has recently been formed in this country, formed of men and women—the latter preponderating—whose motive and creed are as simple as they are lofty. To become a member and subscribe to the tenets of this organization, it is necessary to agree to one thing, to be pledged to one act. It is that each member shall, each, and every day of his life, preform at least one act for the good of a fellow being.

In this age of selfishness it is refreshing to learn that an assemblage of human beings can be fouud whose watchword is altruism, and who bind themselves to forget self at least once every twenty-four hours The age in which we live seems one in which the plant unselfishness finds a poor soil indeed. It grows sporadically, not generally, and is too often a stunted and weakly affair. And yet the need of altruism, of self forgetting, is more widespread every year.

The rich grown richer, and, vice versa, the poor grown poorer. Selfishness, on the one hand, and sorrow on the other are growing quantities. Any measure that will lead toward warming into life the chilling embers of altruism must have the sanction and support of all right minded men and women. It is a small thing, indeed, to devote one impulse, one act each day, to the lightening of some other mortal's life burdens. Opportunities offer to all of us at home and in the bustle and whirl of business life.

There are heavy hearts all about us that we may make brighter; there are gloom and despair, and there are "gray days" that we can render more endurable by the sunshine of a kindly deed or sincerely spoken words. It is not necessary to bear the badge of the Red Cross society to bind up the wounded or alleviate pain. The keenest hurts do not flow blood, and the sorest bruises are not those of the flesh. They can be reached and cured by the exercise of the divine qualities of sympathy and unselfishness, and can be healed by those that never graduated in a school for trained nurses.

In every eighteen hours of waking life there are at least as many opportunities for the display of a practical, unostentatious bit of unselfishness that will make the recipient happier and the bestower happy as well. The organization referred to is one that should find encouragement from all that can realize what it is to be poor and friendless and hopeless. And even if they can not, it will at least be possible to give intelligent sympathy, to perform a small act of pure unselfishness for the mere pleasure which such doing confers. They will find that a little bit of altruism has power to bestow a happiness not purchasable and a delight beyond the scope of a bank note or a check to bestow. The sum of human happiness is not so great that individuals may not add thereto, and it is far easier to do this than most people imagine.—Pittsburg Bulletin.

Relieved from Jury Duty.

Once when a Wisconsin Circuit Judge was empaneling a jury, he said that if anyone wished to be excused from service reason should be given at once, and their sufficiency would be duly considered. One man had a sick child and another had a sick cow. Presently after considerable rumination, an Irishman arose. His face and attitude bespoke a heavy sorrow and a reverent humiliation to Divine Providence. His words were few and simple:

"Jedge, me woife's did," with a stomachic emphasis on the "did."

"Well, my good man, I guess we'll have to let you go."

The Irishman slowly took his hat and went. When he had gotten his body well out side of the room he poked his face back through the nearly closed door, with a triumphant grin, and said:

"Yis, sor; an' she's been did fhorty year."

The Sheriff was told to let him go, for the Judge was Irish himself.—Milwaukee Evening Wisconsin.

Leprosy in the Northwest.

Dr. Armaur Hansen, a Norwegian savant, recently visited this country, and in Wisconsin and Minnesota examined a number of lepers who had emigrated from Norway. He arrived at the interesting result that of 100 of such emigrants the offspring has remained free to the third generation. This, the author believes, shows emphatically that leprosy is not a hereditary disease. He thinks that the different mode of life in the new country does not afford the same opportunity of contagion as given by the peculiar condition of life in Norway. —Chicago Tribune.

Obtuse.

"I take it for granted, Miss Laura," said young Dr. Smidgley, "that you condemn, as all sensible young women do, the unwholesome and barbarous practice of tight lacing."

"On the contrary, Mr. Smidgely," returned Miss Laura, with a wistful, yearning look in her glorious dark eye, "I think a compression of the waist to a reasonable extent not only harmless but at times positively exhilerating."

And that dense, stupid, woodenheaded youth sat there for an hour and argued with the young lady on the evils of tight lacing.—Chicago Tribune.

Substance and Form in Literary Judgment.

And is it not true that from the nature of things the contemporary judgment lays most stress on substance, and that the "final" judgment is favorable to form? Substantially speaking, how many historic things of immense contemporary vogue seem insipid to us, whereas scarcely anything of very great formal merit has been allowed to perish. In other words, is there not an element of universality about perfection of form which significance of thought does not possess; or, at any rate, is not perfection more nearly attainable in form than it is in substance? And nothing is so preservative at perfection or any approach to it.

One thing is very certain—neglect of form involves the sacrifice of an element of positive attractiveness as well as offending positively by perverseness and eccentricity. Whether rhyme and rhythm, cadence, purity, flawlessness, melody are essential or not to poetry, the abandonment of the artistic quality which they imply is obviously a loss.—Scribner.

SCOTT'S EMULSION
PALATABLE AS MILK
A State of Siege

How many people there are who regard the coming of winter as a constant state of siege. It seems as if the elements sat down outside the walls of health and now and again, led by the north wind and his attendant blasts, broke over the ramparts, spreading colds, pneumonia and death. Who knows when the next storm may come and what its effects upon your constitution may be? The fortifications of health must be made strong. SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will aid you to hold out against Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases, until the siege is raised. It prevents wasting in children. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

her from it. At the same instant Latour's mare planted her forefeet, and with straight stretched neck peered into the heavy shadow of the gateway.

One flashing glance of her rider's quick eye assured him that Edith had her horse well in hand, then it turned to the shadows for the cause of alarm.

A tall Arab leaned against the stones wrapped in a dingy bournous. Near him, within the gate, leaned another, equally motionless, the gleam of their drapery frightening the sensitive horses. But their intelligence quickly overmastered fear, and in less time than it takes to tell, both broke into their long stride again.

Not so Harris. His horse, less from sympathy than from bad handling, made a series of plunges that sent the cockney, stirrupless, upon his neck. There he clung fiercely, despairing terror on his face and clammy perspiration on his brow.

"Harris will never live through this ride," Edith said, in amused pity.

The next instant Latour's horse wheeled; he gave Harris his conge, drew up again at the lady's side, and then cantered easily through the ancient gate, past the still motionless offenders.

Latour's trained ear caught the guttural words of the nearer one, "Ingleeze eunain!" ("English, both?")

But the clatter on the stones drowned all of the grunted reply save the words:

"Binta quiesa—bukara—quiesa kitteer!" ("A beautiful woman—to-morrow—very beautiful.")

Low as the words were Edith's ear caught something of the sound, if nothing of the sense.

"What did those men say?" she asked.

"They are both Arabs," he answered with a smile, "yet they told one truth. The first one said we were both English—by Jove!" he suddenly interrupted himself, "they must be strangers. Almost every Arab in Cairo knows me; every one of them knows my horses! Some of the sheik's tribe probably."

The Bab-el-Nassr was left behind. The horses, scenting the desert, stretched into a sweeping gallop in the freshening evening air. The moon, now hanging her silver disk clear above the horizon, melted the yellow sands into a placid sea and her light toned the shadows of the Tombs of the Caliphs. On slender minaret and tumbling arch the moon gleamed with softening touch, and behind them she tipped the towers of the citadel and domes of the mosques with molten silver.

Suddenly Latour broke the silence.

"Thank you, so much!" he said simply.

"And for very little," she answered, not hesitating one instant. "Even in the east I do not need the harem guard. What an absurd paradox is the thing we call 'society,' that an absurdity like Harris could condone our indiscretions"—she paused imperceptibly—"were we indiscreet? I have been long, and often, alone with you, with curious eyes to follow us and busy tongues to comment, too. What was correct for Edith Van der Huysen is surely seemly for Lady Martindale."

In the softening moonlight her face was turned full to him. It seemed less the face of yesterday than that of long ago; the eyes deeper, darker, more tender than he had ever felt them.

"But I do thank you!" he repeated earnestly. "As you say, the gossips are absent; and you are now—married!"

She did not answer, but she looked at him again with a strange expression on her face. The moon, gleaming white and strong, made even distant objects plain as day; and had Latour glanced behind him he might have noticed a Bedouin mount his horse amid the ruins of the caliphs' tombs, ride out into the shadow of a great dome and watch their retreating forms from under his hand.

To the southward a few dark specks dotted the desert like molehills—the only breaks in that moonlit sea of sand.

"What are those low hills?" Edith asked, as she pointed her whip south. "I do not remember them before."

"They are tents, not hills," he replied. "The messengers of the recusant sheik for whom I gave up the Suez trip arrived only at dawn."

"How I should like to visit them!" she said with eager interest. "I have heard so much and seen so little of these desert kings. Can we not ride that far?"

"Easily; it is not far. But not to-night," he answered. "The Arabs keep early hours always, and these are in open disaffection to the viceroy. When his answer comes we can arrange a visit—unless," he added, with a laugh, "they fold their tents and silently steal away meanwhile—with some of our horses."

"I should hate to be disappointed,' she rejoined. "I do not bear disappointment well, even in small things. And you know"—she paused an instant—"I have had great ones."

For a while they galloped on in silence, the detour bringing them into the Shoubra road, their path back to the city. But they were not now the sole night riders on the desert. The Bedouin at the tombs, still watching them, now gave rein to his steed, glided out of the shadows and sped straight for the distant tents. But, looking only at the companion by his side, Latour took no note of him; only spoke abruptly and inconsequently:

"It seems to me but yesterday!"

"To me it has seemed so ever since we came," Edith answered instantly, as though continuing a steady conversation. "It may be that the air about us dwarfs those long ten years to nothingness, but somehow I seem to have lost reckoning of all those days between West Point and—this!"

"And was their memory so pleasant to you?"

"Yes; the memory was pleasant, spite of the pain it gave," she answered simply.

"Pain!" Latour echoed. "Why, you were brilliant, envied, ever surrounded by men"——

"Whom I despised!" she broke in passionately. "Adrien Latour, were you blind then? Are you blind now? Boy though you were in those days, experience should clear your vision as you look back at them!"

The man did not answer. A thrill went through him, half hope, half dread. The white moon, higher overhead, reflected from the yellow sands in saffron gleam. In that silence Latour seemed to hear the wild beating of his own heart, and twice the words forming in his brain had rushed to his lips. But twice those portals of speech remained closed. At last the woman spoke, and again as though continuing a subject:

"Yes, there is a world of things from those days that I recall so well. You remember one walk around Flirtation, when you answered my badinage about Arthur and Guinevere? When we parted, four hands crossed; and, as you reminded me just now—I am married!"

"I recall the day as clearly as yesterday," he answered. "When the hands crossed, you said, 'Farewell, Sir Launcelot!'"

"Would you have had me say, Welcome, Sir Launcelot?"

A hot flush rose to the man's face. He drew a quick breath, about to speak, when she went on, quietly:

"Ah, we were younger then, in years; very children, in world knowledge. Since I have lived ages in experience. Now I know that the legend of Guinevere does not belong to ancient Britain. Indeed, it is no legend, but the crystallizing of a living, bitter truth. It belongs to all nations today, as it ever has and ever will! Who may say but she, that archetype of woman"—she waved her whip to the Sphinx, towering grim and hoar in the moonlight beyond the river—"was the Guinevere of some immemorial Arthur?"

"Who knows, indeed?" Latour replied. "You yourself have told me that woman is the riddle of the ages."

"Yes," she went on; "a Guinevere in ancient Memphis may have inspired the Titanic poem yonder. In Rome she would have spoiled the pretty moral fable by listening to the Tarquin. In France and England today she is the victim of convenance, that octopus grasping all that is best of us to crush relentless in its slimy tentacles. In Paris she may drive her pony phæton in the Bois, la riene du demi-monde; in London she only lunches with his Highness of Wales!"

There was bitterness in the tone, though it floated low and musical upon the desert night; and the eyes that held him in their darkening gleam grew blacker still as she added slowly:

"Who among us, without sin, dare cast the first stone at her? I shall not. I pity her—sympathize with her!"

By deft touch upon the bit she checked her speed so suddenly that the man had to throw his mare upon her haunches to keep beside her.

They were close upon those magnificent memorials in Saracenic architecture, reared to departed glories of that line of Memlook sultans who seized the Egyptian throne in mid Thirteenth century and held it 300 years.

In the white moonlight the fretted minarets glittered like frost work, coldly pointing to heaven from the immemorial past. The silence befitting those mausoleums of an antiquity almost forgotten brooded over the lovely picture, unreal and fantastic as a mirage exhaling from the desert sands.

"How cool and restful that depth of shadow looks!" Lady Martindale said, pointing to the massed blackness thrown almost over them by the mausoleum of the Sultan Bergook. "Its invitation to dismount and share its quiet is resistless."

Without reply Latour threw himself from the saddle to assist her easy dismount, looping the bridles of both mares under their fore shoulders, more from habit than through fear of desertion. Then the woman sat upon a fallen pillar, the man pacing now in the moonlight, now in the deep shadow, through which her form gleamed vague and ghost like in the gloom.

Not of the dead past, but of the living present, seemed the thoughts of both; and she went on as though not interrupted:

"And you remember how I jested about her and Elaine? Poor little Elaine! She—the type of weakness and unresistance in that grand epic of the passions—was the type of woman, too. And Elaine of our day went—downward with the flood!"

The man stood still, his face in full light. Over it passed a flickering memory; but an impatient gesture was his sole reply.

"Ah, strange, truly, are those revenges brought in by the whirligig of time," Edith went on slowly. "But stranger still the reversal of that epic's moral; for 'twas godlike Arthur's self from whom Launcelot would have borne her back to"——

On his face the memory came back, deepening to wondering pain; but he only gasped:

"Great God! You know?"

"Yes, I know," she answered in unchanged tone. "The clash of sabers by moonlight is too romantic not to make echo, and sudden vanishing of maidens from enchanted towers may be followed by quest too eager even for most discreet ogres to keep secret. Besides, Capt. Arnold entertained us at Newport that summer; and you know what sieves young officers are!"

"And the—she fled from him after that night?" There was neither pain nor eagerness in Latour's voice—only a dull curiosity.

"Yes; she fled from New Orleans. But"—and genuine surprise crept into the woman's voice—"do you mean that you did not know?"

"No; how should I?" and he resumed his restless pacing on the sand.

"But in all these years have you never made inquiry about her?"

"Never once. Why should I?" he answered steadily. "Since the last night I saw you on the Hudson—that night she sold herself as a pasha sells his female slave—her name has never passed my lips."

Edith rose quickly, as though from impulse, advancing a step toward him.

"But you—loved her then?" she asked in low, eager voice.

"Did I? Perhaps." His voice was calm and steady as he added, "I thought I loved her enough to have made her my wife, had she not lost my respect the first time she sold herself—the right to any man's, the second time."

Perhaps it was well for Lady Martindale that her face was in the shadow as he spoke. Over those well trained features passed a flash of joy, quickly clouded by a shadow of doubt. When she spoke her voice was calm and low, but its music thrilled him strangely.

"Yet you did love her at West Point," she said. "Not as you might have learned to love, Adrien, but with the first wakening of the boy's heart. Had you forgotten that?"

"I had forgotten it," he replied calmly. "The whole past was as deeply buried as the Caliphs whose tombs these are. And you knew it, then?"

"Knew it!" she echoed. "How could I, feeling as I felt then, fail to see what others saw? Your tent mate knew it. She, too, knew it; and her dotard of a husband knew to his cost"——

She checked herself abruptly. The caress in her voice had died as she went on, replaced by the vibrance of an almost fierce triumph as she stood there Judith the venger! But it came back, as she stole nearer to him saying:

"Forgive me, please. I was selfish in the memory of my own loss then to call those specters out of your past, which I would help you exorcise! And how I did it I cannot guess, for only last night I twice stopped Lord Martindale's abrupt mention that we had met—him!"

"Dale Everett?" This time there was eager interest in the man's tone.

Noting it the woman turned away her face, an ugly shadow over it, and the lips curled in a strange smile. But she answered simply:

"Yes; he was the guest of our cousin, Hoyne-Cecil, of the guards."

"Did you talk of me?" The flood of recollections sweeping through the man trembled on his voice.

She turned full to him again, gazed at him earnestly one instant, then answered coldly:

"No, why should we? He never mentioned your name. In London I was coolly courteous to Cecil's guest; in Paris I barely recognized him. You have reason to know that I am no prude, but an open scandal like"——

"Pardon me," Latour interrupted. "I had forgotten that in boyish memories of him."

"And of her?" she rejoined quickly.

"I have answered that already," he said quietly. "She has been dead to me ten long years. You are too much a woman of the world to hold the man responsible for the follies of the boy."

"The world does not teach us wisdom always," she answered, with thrilling pathos. "The weakness of our youth pursues us often. A man may crush—a woman only suffer for it!"

They were face to face in the broad moonlight. A tenderness unusual to it swept her face and settled in her eyes, gazing into his, deep—dark—passionate! Impulsively he seized her hands, half drawing her to him, as he whispered:

"What do you mean?"

She did not answer; her eyes fell before the hot eagerness of his.

"Tell me!" he urged. "Do you mean that in the past I was blind enough"——

Gently she withdrew her hands. Her bosom rose and fell in tumult, as she answered, very low:

"Hush! I was weak then, but then I had the right to weakness. You yourself reminded me that now I am safe with you—that I am—married!"

He drew abruptly off, turning to release the horses. She looked after him. Over her raised face a hot flush rose, and burned there. Her eyes gleamed black as night. In them were some wonderment, much tenderness; but through both gleamed the hot light of triumph.

He stooped to make his hand her step to saddle. With a sweep of his strong arm he raised the lissome, regal figure high as the seat. Somehow the perfect French boot, clinging round the still more perfect ankle, slipped from his hand. The beautiful form slid down between the horse and man, pressing heavily against his breast, as the soft perfume of her breath warmed his cheek.

The cry that would have escaped another woman Latour did not hear. He only heard the throbbing of his own heart, only felt the fluttering of hers, as though struggling to break through the sculptured bosom. In the impulse to break her fall, he had thrown his arm about her. She did not recoil; a wild joy thrilled through him that she nestled closer in its pressure.

For what might have been seconds, might have been ages—for all the man recked—they stood thus.

Suddenly the stately head, resting on his bosom, was lifted; the face, glowing and tender, was raised to his, and as the luminous, liquid, midnight of her eyes melted into his own it fell upon his shoulder.

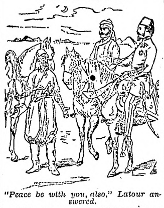
A dizzy whirl mounted to his brain as he felt the warm sigh from the parted scarlet of her lips! His own crushed down upon them in one long, clinging, passionate kiss.

Slowly her long, lissome arms stole up about his neck, the strong, slim fingers interlaced as to unlock nevermore. And again those eyes burned into his soul as, the glow of passion hot upon her cheek, her lips again sought his, with the whispered sigh:

"At last! My Launcelot!"

PART III—CHAPTER V.

A MORNING SURPRISE.



"Peace be with you, also," Latour answered.

At the entrance of the Hotel d'Orient Lady Martindale dismounted from her horse with easy grace. The hand she rested on Latour's was steady and cool, and her voice was softly clear as she said:

"I shall not attempt to thank you for—this ride. Lord Martindale will be home soon. Good night!"

Neither she nor the man turning away, as though in a dream, took note of a tall, dusky form, wrapped in a long bournous, that slunk in the shadow of the palms opposite. Nor had they noted, as they rode rapidly homeward through the Bab-el-Nassr, that this Arab glided out from the gateway, running swiftly and noiselessly behind in shadow of the houses. Now he stood motionless against a tree, but his black eyes glittered as they caught the flash of the solitaires upon her hand and ears.

The waiting orderly led off the horses. Latour, still without a word, turned toward the Ezbekieh; but, listening only to the voices within him, he did not catch the one word muttered again by the Arab:

"Bukara!"

Hour after hour was called from the minarets, and long past midnight Adrien Latour was trying to think, but in reality only acting over and over the strange short hours of that evening.

No prude was he; still less a fop, but woman's ever quick acceptance of his approaches taught him that he was attractive beyond the average of men. But above all had he ever held to that high, chivalrous sense of honor belonging to his race for centuries. Nor had it been belittled by one act of any of the stately men who had looked down upon his childhood from the walls of madame's salon.

The busy events of the past ten days, their culmination that night, the tingling thrill of success—all so dazed him that he could not force his mind to clear discussion of the present. And the more he struggled to compel it to the outcome of the immediate future all the more did it resent coercion and raise the past before him.

Again Edith Van der Huysen strolled with him round "Flirtation;" again he sat with her in the garden of Rose villa. Scraps of conversation, careless bits of badinage, came back clearly, full freighted with meaning now. He had indeed been blind, as she told him! He saw himself as

> One whose hand,
> Like the base Indian, threw a pearl away
> Richer than all his tribe!

And how faithful had been that love to seek him after all those years in friendship—to find friendship too tame progeny for it, even in its age—to sweep aside habit, reserve, fear—even her vows at the altar!

And, as is man's way, he analyzed her feelings, not his own. Not once did he ask himself how he loved this woman; if the hot rush of passion surging through him from pressure of her lips was higher, because stronger, feeling than a hundred fancies he had reared one week, only to bury under the satiety of the next.

When at last, fevered but wearied, he threw himself upon the divan the dreams that visited his first fitful sleep reversed the tenor of his waking visions.

Beautiful, alluring, dazzling, Edith would stretch her arms to him. And ever, as he reeled toward her, dizzy with passion, the face would change to the stony, fathomless one of the Sphinx, the sightless eyes looking beyond him. Then the voluptuous form would merge into the one he had last seen under the orange trees of the Creole garden, its scornful lips upbraiding:

"She knew I loved you then; Dale knew it; my husband knew it, to his cost! You—only you—would not know it!"

He still lay, half dressed, upon the divan after the sun had long slipped up above the Eastern desert, suddenly as it ever does in Egypt. Now changed to a ruddy orange, it gilded the domes of the citadel, the minarets of Cairo's four hundred mosques, and warmed the dull shade of the Mokattam hills. Suddenly he was roused by a heavy footstep and a loud voice at his side. Lord Martindale stood there with flushed face, crying in a voice strident from excitement:

"Odd hour, I know, to beat you up! No time for ceremony, you know. Lady Martindale's conduct must explain. Inexplicable, really!"

Latour was on his feet, confronting the excited husband calmly, but a dozen conjectures whirled into his brain, only to be dismissed as quickly. Had she betrayed herself? Could she have confessed her fault? Were the Arabs he had seen her husband's spies?

SENATOR LOMMEN ACCEDES TO THE WISHES

OF THE MAJORITY---TWO COUNTICS CUT FROM POLK.

RED LAKE FALLS TO BE CO. SEAT OF RED LAKE CO.

SenatorLommen onTuesday of this week introduced two bills in the senate setting off from the present territory of Polk county, two new counties to be known as Sherman and Red Lake. There is no question but the bills will go through the house without dely as the representatives from this district have deliberated well and ascertained the wishes of the people before they decided to take this innitiative step.

Tne news was received with great enthusiasm here, but was not unexpected. Red Lake Falls and McIncosh had been represented at the capital for several weeks previous by hard workers in the cause. Ii is confidently expected the bill will have clear sailing, if Lomen uses his influence in its behalf, which is expected. If passed, two years hence the people will vote on the question whether or not to divide the county, and there is no reason why their answer could be anything but an affirmative one.

Sherman Memoirs.

General Sherman, shortly before his death, by written contract, put his memoirs in the hands of Webster &Co.,of New York. They, carrying out the spirit of the contract, are about to bring out a cheap edition of his celebrated work; with a brief appendix by theHon. James G. Blaine, including the closing years of General Sherman's life, his last illness, death and funeral pageant. The work will be in one volume and will contain the full tex of the original memoeris. It will be sold at $2.00, all former editions having been sold at $5.00. The proceedings of the work will be devoted to the interests of those whom General Sherman has left dependent for support upon the income of the estate.

The New Land Law.

Section 1 repeals the timber culture act but saves the rights of all existing entiries, and gives right of commutation to those who have for four years in good faith tried to comply, at $1.25 per acre.

Sectiod 2 provides modification of the desert-lands act, providing for actual reclamation of the land entered,and preventing speculative accumulation of the land,with a saving of all rights under existing entries.

Section 3 enlarges section 2288,Revised Statutes, by including reservoirs,or ditches for irrigating purpuses.

Section 4 repeals the pre-emption laws, with a modification of the homestead law and with provisions more strict as to proof at entry and all final proofs, extending the commutation from six to fourteen months.

Section 7 and 8 provide details as to final action in the Interior Department on final entries, and provide limitations as to contest, suits to cancel patents,now issued and six years as to future ones, and provisions as to timber trespasses.

Section 9 prohibits offering of public lands at public sale hereafter,thus preventing private or cash enteries.

Sections 10 to 17 relate to the lands in Alaska,for their acquisition for manufacturing and commercial purposes and for townsites.

Section 17 allows mineral entries in addition to the maximum allowance of 320 acre allowed by existing law.

Sections 18, 19, 20 and 21 relate to ditches and reservoirs, and providing for their construction.

Section 23 cures defects in the titles of settlers on certain former Indian lands oaused by different rulings of the Department of the Interior.

Section 24 authorizes the President to set apart trust reserves, where to preserve timber,he shall deem it advisable.

"Atonement."

This grand drama is being rehearsed by the local footlight fever sufferers. They find it taxes their utmost energies and capabilities, but it is hoped by Easter all the difficulties that now arise glaringly before them will be swept away. It was found that the time (till Easter) for preparation of so difficult a drama is scarcely long enough, and thus to ensure a success, those connected with the play have downright hard labor before them. A full house,a creditable presentation and an appreciative audience, is all that will repay them for their labor.

The scenic effects in this play will be very good. Rev. Ig. Balluff has completed two full scenes—a street and a mountain scene, that are to say the least, exquisite. To get an idea of their beauty they must be beheld.

The stage is now nearly twice as wide as formerly. The drop curtain has been enlarged and beautified, and the stage fixtures have been made strong and permanent, carpenters having been employed for a week or more at this. Red Lake Falls now has as fine an opera hall as any city in this upper tier of counties.

St. Mary's dramatic society is to be thanked for all this, the expenses having been payed from proceeds of dramatic entertainments the past couple of years. It is to be hoped the public will understand this and turn out with a large attendance at the Easter play. People here are not want to encourage local efforts of this kind. The criticism in most cases is as severe as it might be of foreign troupes; but while it is always not best to give credit where none is deserved judicious patronage and encouragement are no more than any home entertainers might justly expect, especially when the benefits go to build up a religious institution right in our midst. Who will say that a better attraction can be offered to settlers in a town than wide educational and religious advantages, that grow in importance as their condition becomes more and more improved.

Evidences of Bribery.

It looks now as if two years would not be long enough time for the Alliance members of the Minnesota legislature to explain matters to their constitutents. It is generally understood that these members have their pockets stuffed with railroad passes and money received from the State of mileage far in excess of cost of reaching and returning from the Capitol (even if they had payed full fare), and that instead of repudiating that horrid night mare of fresh politicians, "King Caucus," they really went into a combine which bound them hand and foot and controlled their votes on all questions of importance. These things were expected to harden old Republicans and Democrats, but the Alliance representatives were sent toSt.Paul to reform things,and yet they and the rest laughed a member down who attempted to make it a crime to accept railroad passes. The alliance in various portions of the State, made up of men who were in dead earnest at the election, are now passing resolutions caling their representatives to account. Now The Agriculturist is not disappointed at the outcome, and directly after the election,warned its readers not to expect too. An honest man, or even a large number of honest men, without experience in legislation, have little influence in carrying through reforn measures. They mean well, but designing leaders bewilder them, making white appear black and black white. Besides, half the projected reform legislation, while intended for thegood of the people, would, in practice, work great harm. On such measures, sensible and practical men get new light and change their minds, and honestly oppose what they once favored, not because they have been "bought," but because they have heard the other side, and have been convinced that the effect of the proposed enactments would be bad instead of good. It is unreasonable, therefore, to expect that men elected on a reform platform, even if in the majority will enact into laws all the alleged reforms advocated from the stump. For these reason, The Agriculturist would incline to deal with all legislators with the utmost charity and tolerance as to individual opinion, but there is no justification in sight for the members elected on reform platforms, who go home with their pockets full of railroad passes and other small evidences of bribery. If all such are roasted brown by their constituents they will deserve small sympathy. —Northwestern Agriculturist.

SINGLE TAX DEPARTMENT.

SINGLE TAX MOVEMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA,

W. A. Wilson, of Vancouver, in a letter concerning the progress of the single tax movement in British Columbia, says:

The work that has been going on for some time in Victoria, Vancouver, New Westminster and other towns throughout the Province has had very encouraging results, and we have abundant evidence to show that public opinion is being slowly, but none the less surely, molded in our favor. This new country, like most others, has been and is now handicapped in its development by land grabbing and speculation. To such an extent had this evil become manifest that the Provincial Government last August withdrew all that remained of the public lands under its jurisdiction from sale, pending legislation on the subject. As several good single tax men have lately been elected to the Provincial Legislature, we hope that their influence, backed up by the pressure that will be brought to bear on the outside, will have the effect of procuring legislation in accord with our principles.

In municipal matters, too, there is a steady movement towards the final abolition of taxing improvements. In the city of New Westminster a petition was presented to the city council last week containing over four hundred signatures of the most influential citizens there, praying that body to enact a bylaw exempting improvements from taxation. The indications are that the petitions will be successful and score a victory. Victoria has also been moving in this direction, and Single Tax men there are active in spreading the light. They have a well-attended club, which has been a powerful factor in directing public attention to needful reforms, and that the single tax idea is not a mere "fad," but has come to stay and grow up with the country.

In Vancouver we have several out and out single taxers in the newly elected city council, and some others more or less favorable to our views, so that we feel confident of good results to the city generally and the single tax cause in particular. Some of our ministers have been interesting themselves in the movement, and alluding to it in their sermons as being worthy of consideration; but, like some of our Eastern professors, they are not anxious to accept its teachings and forsake the moss-covered fallacies concerning our social and economic conditions that have played their part so long in the world's history. We believe, however, that their conversion, inwardly if not outwardly, is only a question of time.

On the 10th inst. the single tax men of this province held a convention in Vancouver. Delegates attended from the principal cities and towns, and altogether it was most successful in the results attained. An organization was formed to be known as the "British Columbia Tax Reform Association," and the following officers were elected: David Evans, Vancouver, president; Alexander Hamilton, New Westminster, vice-president; W. A. Wilson, Vancouver, secretary, with an executive committee having one or more members in each city. The following platform and resolutions were adopted:

We hold that all men born into the world have an equal right to life and the means of living. The earth is the only source from which the physical wants of mankind can be supplied. Therefore, man's right to the use of the earth, the common gift of the Creator to the race, is the one essential condition of his existence. With a reasonable amount of labor the earth is capable of producing abundantly for the support of its population, and it becomes the duty of all citizens to use every reasonable effort to secure to capital and labor free access to the land which is the source of all wealth.

To carry out these principles we are in favor of raising all revenues for governmental purposes by a direct tax on land values, irrespective of improvements.

The adoption of this method of taxation would be of an untold benefit to all classes of the community. It would stimulate industry, reward enterprise, and secure to every man a just and equitable return for his labor, and at the same time would render it unprofitable to hold valuable land for merely speculative purposes.

With respect to monopolies other than the monopoly of land, we hold that where free competition becomes impossible, such monopolies are then a proper social function, and should be controlled and managed by and for the whole people concerned.

The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That this Association would impress upon every voter in the Province who believes in the views advocated by Single Tax men, to take a careful interest in the matters discussed by the local Legislature, and especially the action taken thereon by their representatives in that body, in order that they may be prepared at the next Provincial election to select candidates who will work for the adoption of laws in accord with the principles of the Single Tax.

The conference adjourned to meet in Victoria on the second Saturday in January, 1892. Last Saturday we had a spirited debate in the city Market Hall on the Single Tax, in which delegates took part, and much interest was taken in both the convention and debate by both the press and the general public.

In Hawkes' Bay, New Zealand, there are 2,950,000 acres of land, of which 2,000,000 are occupied—that is, owned. Of the occupied land, 1,176,000 acres belong to forty-seven people. The land question is coming to the front out there. Hawkes' Bay is one of the places where the Single Tax agitation in the Antipodes was first vigorously pushed. Mr. Arthur J. Desmond was a leading and active worker for the cause in that region back in 1884.

One of the great evils of our methods of raising taxes to-day is that they tax conscience, that they make men lie and perjure and bribe and corrupt.

The Greatest of Monopolies.

But all other monopolies are trivial in extent as compared with the monopoly of land. And the value of land expressing a monopoly, pure and simple, is in every respect fitted for taxation. That is to say, while the value of a railroad or telegraph line, the price of gas or of a patent medicine, may express the price of monopoly, it also expresses the exertion of labor and capital, but the value of land, or economic rent, as we have seen, is in no part made up from these factors, and expresses nothing but the advantage of appropriation. Taxes levied upon the value of land can not check production in the slightest degree, until they exceed rent, or the value of land taken annually, for unlike taxes upon commodities, or exchange, or capital, or any of the tools or processes of production, they do not bear upon production. The value of land does not express the reward of production, as does the value of crops, of cattle, of buildings, or any of the things which are styled personal property and improvements. It expresses the exchange value of monopoly. It is not in any case the creation of the individual who owns the land; it is created by the growth of the community. Hence the community can take it all without in any way lessening the incentive to improvement or in the slightest degree lessening the production of wealth. Taxes may be imposed upon the value of land until all rent is taken by the State, without reducing the wages of labor or the reward of capital one iota; without increasing the price of a single commodity, or making production in any way more difficult.

But more than this. Taxes on the value of land not only do not check production as do most other taxes, but they tend to increase production, by destroying speculative rent. How speculative rent checks production may be seen not only in the valuable land withheld from use, but in the paroxysms of industrial depressions, which, originating in the speculative advance in land values, propagate themselves over the whole civilized world everywhere paralyzing industry, and causing more waste and probably more suffering than would a general war. Taxation which would take rent for public uses would prevent this, while if land were taxed to anything near its rental value, no one could afford to hold land that he is not using, and, consequently, land not in use would be thrown open to those who would use it. Settlement would be closer, and, consequently, labor and capital would be able to produce much more with the same exertion. The dog in the manger, who, in this country especially, so wastes productive power would be chocked off.—Progress and Poverty.

A Case of Unearned Increment.

New London, Ct., Jan. 22.—At the outbreak of the civil war there was located in Augusta, Ga., a business man named Daniel Hand. He was the son of a New England farmer and had been settled in Augusta for many years. Not sympathizing with the Southern cause, he found it profitable and advisable to sell his stock of goods, real estate and other property and return to his old home in Guilford, Ct. But there was one piece of property—a tract of Georgia pine land—which he did not sell, for the reason that he looked on it as practically unsalable and valueless. This pine land he left in the care of his partner, a Mr. Williams.

As the war progressed Mr. Hand was in his quiet home in the little New England village, away from the sounds of strife and scenes of bloodshed, and took no concern for the Georgia pine lands. With the return of peace came renewed prosperity and an influx of Northern capital to the South. The value of land in Georgia began to rise, and pine land proved no exception to the rule. Still Mr. Hand was careless and ignorant of what was going on. He had made plenty of money to live on and did not have to trouble himself about his pine lands in the South.

If my memory serves me, it was some time in 1885, twenty-five years or so after he had left his Georgia store, that Mr. Hand received a letter from his farmer partner, Mr. Williams, stating that he had succeeded in finding a purchaser for that tract of pine land that they had considered valueless. Mr. Williams also stated that as a sale had been effected, and that on account of such sale Mr. Hand had standing to his credit in bank and subject to his order the nice little sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

This appears to me to be a pretty clear case of the pocketing of an unearned increment. As far as Mr. Hand personally was concerned that tract of land had practically ceased to exist. His whole interest in it had gone out of his mind entirely.

And yet while he was at his home in Guilford, Ct., passing his old age peacefully and happily, utterly oblivious of the whole matter, $750,000 were accumulating for his special benefit.

To Mr. Hand's credit it ought to be said—which, however, in no way breaks the force of the story—that he has invested the whole sum and placed it in the hands of trustees to be used as a perpetual fund for to defray the educational expenses of worthy colored students in the Southern States; but this only shows how much the community could have for public use and benefits if no individual were allowed to pocket what he did not create.—W. C. Miner.

Whatever other causes there may be in existence, it is indisputable that the general system of taxation which prevails in this country and which has prevailed for a hundred years, is such as to take very much more largely from the pockets of the poor than it does from the pockets of the rich.

Increase of land values simply means that the owners, by virtue of their appropriation of something that existed before man was, have the power of taking a larger share of the wealth produced by other people's labor.—Social Problems.

HE LIED HIS VERY BEST,

A Nantucket Man Takes a Hand and Spins a Considerable Sea Yarn.

The company was now thoroughly aroused. The emergency called for a really distinguished and original liar; and happily the company possessed one in the venerable Captain D—, who had sailed in all known seas, and in every manner of whaling and merchantcraft. On Nantucket or off island there was never his rival at a yarn.

"H'm," said he calmly, and waited a moment chewing with his front teeth reflectively. "Yes, I guess it was '45—or no, 't was '46 for I remember the night before, we see the reflection of the great fire in Nantucket."

"The—reflection—o' the—great—fire!"

There was a general gasp around the circle.

"And you was in that part of the world, Cap'n?" asked one.

"On the northerly edge o' the Pacific Sargasso, in about 40 north, 15 west," said Captain D—, without flinching. "We was on our way back from Bering's. We had sighted the seaweed drift to the south'ard, when we see, a little to the west'ard a monster the like of which I never see before or since. She looked about a half mile long, and she humped her back up along the water once in about a ships' length. Yes, boys, it was a sea serpent, an' no mistake. But in those days I wan't afraid of nothing. I ordered a boat lowered' and I went off in her myself. The serpent never made a sign of noticin' us until we was pretty close alongside, and then, like a flash, I had Joe Folger put a couple of irons into her.

"I tell you, no mortal man ever see anything like the speed that that serpent went off with to the north'ard. It makes me ketch my breth to think on't. Lightnin' would compare with it all out the way the 'Sconset train compares with lightnin'. But we hung on gentleman, and then the thing occurred that I'm a tellin' ye about. Happenin' to look back, I see what was seemingly our own boat—which was an extra large green-painted whaleboat—follering along behind us. I looked again down to the boat that we was settin' in; and there she was right under us, to be sure, safe and staunch but without a shred o' paint on her. An' now I'll tell ye what had happened; we had been goin' so fast that the speed had drawn the boat clean out of her paint, and left the paint follerin after us with the momentum!"—Boston Transcript.

A BRAVE WOMAN AT THE HELM.

Her Sailor Husband Died, and Alone She Brought the Ship to Port,

The sea still furnished its full quota of the romantic and horrible, and among modern instances of disaster, suffering and heroism none is more interesting than that of Mrs. Meinders, last survivor but one of the crew of the Johanna.

This vessel, a three-masted schooner, left Port Louis, in the Mauritius, with a cargo for Melbourne. Captain Meinders had with him his wife and little daughter Susanna, a great favorite with all. The captain was a thorough sailor, and his wife had taken grear pleasure in learning the details of navigation.

The mate, H. Heyen, was also a capable sailor, and the crew consisted of four men and a lad. All were Germans.

Soon after their departue the Mauritius fever broke out, the boy being the first victim and then the mate. The boy barely escaped with life, but the mate regained a little strength. Then the captain was prostrated, and all the men. Mrs. Meinders took entire charge of the ship, steering twelve hours a day, and administering to the sick whenever the boy was able to hold the helm a few minutes. The mate, after staggering with weakness, took his turn at the helm, read the burial service, and launched the corpses into the deep as the four men died in rapid succession.

The infant girl had to be locked in the cabin, and during foul weather the water there was sometimes a foot deep. Often in the lull of the tempest Mrs. Meinders could hear the child calling, "Oh, mutter, mutter!" and would shout encouraging words in reply, but could not leave the wheel. In this woeful condition they reached Freemantle without sighting a sail.

She then thought her troubles were over, but her husband suffered a relapse and died before they reached Melbourne. Out of the seven attacked by the fever only the mate and boy escaped death. The underwriters of the ship have rewarded the brave women suitable, and the German captains will add enough to enable her to rear and educate her two children.—New York Journal.

FASHIONS FOR MEN.

What will Be Considered the Proper Thing in Men's Attire.

The moonstone is a favorite for scarf pins.

Black silk handkerchiefs are considered vulgar.

All the indications point in the direction of a triumph for the neglige shirt.

At no time since its introduction has the patent-leather shoe been so popular as at present.

A new fancy for spring and summer is cotton half-hose with woolen soles. It is an imported idea.

The white pique vest of a season sgo while not wholly under the ban is not effected by the exquisites.

The puff scarf is still popular, but is smaller than that worn last season. One of the new colors is stone blue.

The embroidered shirt front is passe. Only those who pay small heed to the proprieties of dress now wear it. Pique fronts, however, if not pronounced are still in good form.

The ultra fad in suspenders is the portrait of one's best girl embroidered in silk on the webbing near the heart of the wearer. Of course, one's best girl should do the embroidering with her own sweet, white hands.

Let no man wear a Derby to whom a silk hat is becoming, except at business. That is the general law laid down by the arbiters. The silk hat for spring is almost straight in the crown, with a narrow brim rather sharply curled.

Among the swells who haunt the uptown clubs it is considered unpardonable to insert the scarfpin in the center of the necktie. The latest mode is to insert it diagonally from the left side. It is permissible, however, to insert it diagonally from right to left.

With link sleeve buttons, which are all the rage, the fashionable thing to wear is a link button in solid silver, or in silver ornamented with gold. Stone or diamond settings are not worn except by those who are not conversant with the contemporaneous requirements of fashion.

The general trend of the spring fashions goes to demonstrate that Americans are rapidly setting up idols of their own, instead of worshiping at the shrine of English ideas. It is claimed by not a few leading authorities that the Americans are the best dressed men in the world.

No decree of fashion, apparently, can displace the four-in-hand scarf. It is more popular than ever, and varies so little this season from the style of last year that the difference is not preceptible. Fashionable men the world over now tie their cravats. Make-up scarfs are for the masses; men of taste eschew them.

The day of the big walking-stick is past. The most coveted effects just at present are natural sticks of medium size, with modest silver trimmings Gould-mounted canes are used chiefly by elderly men or members of the sedate profession. The latest fad for spring is a stick with a natural root, ornamented with a spiral silver band.

The tan glove, while still in popular use, is not the correct caper among men who pretend to set the pace for the rest of New Yorkers. The latest conceit is a glove as tight fitting as physical endurace will permit, and of a rich gold-brown hue. Deep embroidery on the back cannot be worn without sinning against etiquette.

The double-breasted, straight sack coat is undoubtedly the most popular garment for spring. The tailors say that most of their customers want it. It should not be worn, though, on fromal occasions, as it is intended wholly for business wear. This season the coat is an inch or two longer than formerly, and the patterns, as a rule, run to plaids and stripes. Solid black is gradually disappearing.—Daily Continent.

A LITERARY SOLUTION.

We stood in the bookstore together,
She chattering of this and of that;
My heart kept time with the feather
That clung to her Gainsborough hat.
On Stevenson, Stockton, and Kipling,
And poets galore she enthused
But how to propose to her, rippling
With music and laughter, I mused.

On this one and that one she tarried
To label their place on the shelf;
"This How to be Happy Though Married;
Absurd!" and I thought to myself.
"But those who have tried it may surely
Be trusted to know," I replied.
"I tell you," she said, "it is surely
The tone of the age to deride."

"The task for solution," I ventured,
"Is how to be married though poor;"
I know that I ought to be censured;
She looking so sweet and demure,
Her voice was so low, 'twas the border
Of thought where it breaks into word:
"We might," she said, "solve this, in order
To prove that the book is absurd."

THE DEVOTED WIFE.

A great many years ago, during the prevalence of that terrible Southern pestilence, the yellow fever, in the city of Boston (United States) —when thousands, becoming frantic with fear, were deserting their homes, and leaving their stricken friends in the hands of strangers—when the heavy rumble of the death-carts, with the solemn and appalling cry of "Bring out your dead!" were almost the only sounds that broke the dismal stillness of the streets —at that time, we say, a man in the prime of life, surrounded by his wife and little ones, was smitten by the devastating scourge.

Upon the first appearance of the fearful symptoms, the wife immediately gave her children into the care of her friends, with a request that they should be forth-with taken from the city to the country.

"And you must go with them!" said they.

"No!" she replied; "the place of the wife is by the side of her husband—especially in his darkest hour of need."

"But he will die, and you become a victim also."

"As God will!" she piously rejoined.

"But why remain, and thus expose yourself, and make your children orphans?"

"Would you have me leave my husband in the hands of strangers?"

"But he will soon become delirious, and not know who attends upon him."

"But I shall know!" returned the devoted wife; "and should I survive, it will ever be a consolation to me to remember I did my duty."

No remonstrance, no persuasion, could induce that heroic woman to depart. Taking leave of her beloved little ones with maternal tenderness—perhaps for the last time—she resigned them to heaven's care and her friend's, and went back to the gloomy dwelling, which till late had been a bright and happy home. Already the dreadful sign was upon it—the sign which told the passers-by there was another victim of the pestilence within, and would probably soon be another burden for those whose duty it was to bear the remains of the departed to the common sepulchere; but with the heroism of a matyr, that angel wife crossed the threshold to perish or to save.

We will not dwell with a physician's minuteness upon the alarming symptoms and progress of the disease. Suffice it to say that the sick man soon became delirious, raved like a maniac, and in spite of the best medical attendance which could be procured, and the most careful and devoted nursing of that devoted wife, gradually sunk, grew weaker and more weak, and at last lay still, and became rigid and cold in death.

In that solemn moment, when the fond wife, kneeling beside the corpse of him she loved, his cold hand clasped in hers, was pouring out her loving and agonized soul in a prayer to heaven for strength and resignation to bear the earthly separation; in that dread moment when not a living thing stirred in all the house except herself—and the night-lamp burned dim—and the clock, with its steady tick, as it measured the time to her but not to him, made the only sounds besides her sobs that broke the dreary stillness—in that awful moment, we say, there came a low distant rumble, the noise gradually increasing; and then the appalling words, "Bring out your dead!" resounded along the almost deserted street, striking a fearful chill to many an anguished heart, and causing many a tear-fevered eye to rest mournfully upon the beloved form that must soon by the living be beheld no more for ever.

There were two or three ominous pauses of this dread semi-hourly visitor—two or three repetions of the dismal cry—and then it seemed to pause under the very windows of that death chamber, and the awful words "Bring out your dead" seemed to pierce the very heart of that poor, horror-stricken wife and mother

"No dead here!" she cried, with a strange unacountable impulse, starting to her feet, clasping her temples with her hands, and gazing wildly upon the ghastly, withered form of him she loved. "No dead here! My husband is not dead! He still lives! He only sleeps! Great heaven give me power to wake him, ere he be torn from me!"

And as these sentences were uttered rapidly and wildly, heavy steps were heard advancing along the hall, and ascending the stairs with slow measured tread. The next moment the door of the death-chamber was slowly opened, two rough visages and figures were presented to the view of the agonized wife, and a deep gruff voice said, "Is it over, good woman?"

"No, no—it is not over! My husband still lives; he will soon recover!"

Without making a reply, the foremost advanced, took up the light, walked to the bed, held it close to the face of the ghastly form that lay there, and quietly observed, "He's as dead as ever he will be;" Then turning to his companion, he added, "Let's take him down!"

"No, no!" cried the startled wife, throwing herself before them; "I tell you he is living, and will soon be well! Go; he is not a subject for you! Come to-morrow, if you will, and witness the truth of my words—but touch him not to-night!"

"She raves, poor woman!" said the spokesman; "but we've got to do our duty."

"Back!" screamed the almost frantic wife; "you shall not touch him! Back, and do no murder here, or the curse of heaven will light upon you!"

The two men whispered together a few moments; and then the spokesman rejoined, "We'll leave him be a half-hour, till we come again; but if we were to leave him to eternity, you'd find no life there."

With this, they slowly withdrew; and as that self-sacrificing wife heard their heavy, descending steps, she threw herself upon her knees, thanked heaven for the brief respite, and prayed for strength and power to deliver her companion from the already yawning grave.

Strange prayer was this to follow the other, in which she had asked the for strength and resignation to bear the earthly parting! Wherefore the change? Why did she believe him living, who reason told her was dead?

There he lay ghastly and cold, without motion, without breath, without life. One half-hour—one brief half-hour—and they whose duty it was to quickly consign the dead to dust, that the awful contagion might not spread through mortal decay, would again be there to claim that beloved form.

There was not a moment to be lost. And with an invocation to heaven for assistance, that trembling wife began the seemingly hopeless task of restoring her dear partner to life. She chafed his temple, his body, his limbs, rolled him to and fro on the bed, and called upon him in the most endearing terms.

She was thus engaged, using almost superhuman exertions, when again she heard, with a chill of despair, the distant rumble of the vehicle of the grave, and the appalling cry of "Bring out your dead!"

Nearer and nearer it comes—louder and louder sound those awful tones—still more actively and painfully she labors, and yet no signs of life—the same cold, ghastly, inanimate form!

Hark! there are steps along the hall—there is the same measured, heavy tread upon the stairs—the door once more slowly opens, and with a suppressed shriek of agony the almost frantic wife once more turns and beholds those same grim, unsympathizing visages before her.

"We've come again for your dead!" said one, as both advanced towards the bed.

"Back!" shrieked the wife; "there is no dead for you, here!"

The man still advanced, aad came up to the corpse.

"This here's perfect folly!" said the spokesman; "it's our duty to take away dead bodies wherever we find 'em; it's the only chance there is to keep down this horrible disease; and so stand aside, good woman, and let us take the body quietly. Don't take on so; it's got to be done; you can't keep it with you, and the longer it remains here the less chance you'll have of escaping the same fate yourself."

"But my husband is not dead!" cried the wife, wringing her hands, and keeping her place between the body and those who had come for it.

"We can see, good woman, and our eyes tell us better," was the somewhat gruff reply. "Come, stand aside and yield to what you can't avoid!"

"Oh, no, no! never. He is not dead, I tell you—and you shall not touch him!"

"Good woman, we've got to do our duty," pursued the man, more positively, attempting to put her aside.

"For heaven's sake, spare us!" she shrieked, dropping down on her knees, clasping her hands and looking up imploringly. "Spare us, I beseech you! See, I am kneeling to you—I am praying to you! For the love of heaven, spare us a little longer! He will soon revive! He only sleeps!"

The men, preceiving that the only chance of getting at the corpse would be by a forcible removal of its guardian angel, again conferred together, and again agreed to give her another half-hour.

As soon as the friendless wife again heard the welcome sound of the departing footsteps of her dreadful visitors, she again renewed her efforts to resuscitate that which to reason appeared hopelessly dead. She took a new course. She raised his head—almost sat him up in bed; heated flannels and rolled them around his limbs, placed hot onions upon his feet; and thus worked with the will and strength of love and hope united with despair.

But in vain were all her efforts. No life—no signs of life! Yet the time was swiftly rolling on; and what seemed to that nearly distracted woman but a few brief moments, again brought around the terrible half-hour, and with it those whom she now regarded as her most terrible foes.

This time, those men, in the performance of their painful duty, would listen to no prayers, no entreaties, no remonstrances. They told her plainly that she was as unreasonable as a lunatic: that though they pitied her, their duty must be done; the body must be removed, and the apartments fumigated; there was no alternative; and what could not be done peaceably would have to be done forcibly.

Accordingly, they put her aside, approached the body, and laid hold of it. But she burst frantically in between them, threw herself upon the corpse, and clung to it with spasmodic, convulsive tenacity: at the same time shrieking forth, in the most heartrending tones, "As God Almighty liveth, you shall not separate us! If you bury him' you bury me with him!"

"Good woman," said the spokesman, "why will you go on this way? We don't want to use force; but we'll have to, if you don't let us do our duty without. The man's dead; and I tell you we've got to take away the body this time; and we'll do it, by fair means or foul."

"Then you shall take me with my husband," persisted the wife; "we shall both have the same grave. Oh, for the love of heaven!" she pursued in tones of the most passionate entreaty, "give me one half-hour more! Just one half-hour! only one!"

"But it'll be all the same when we come again," returned the other, "you will fight just as hard for the body."

"No, no—give me one half-hour more—and if you find him not living when you return, I will make no further resistance."

Again there was a brief consultation between the two men; and the spokesman rejoined, "If you'll solemnly promise us this, we'll agree to wait till the next round, but don't hope to put us off any longer."

"I solemnly vow to you," cried the wife, with a gleam of joy," "that if you find him not alive on your return, he is yours for the grave."

The death-men departed once more; and once more that poor wife, with feelings which no pen can describe, set about the hopeless task of recalling the dead to life.

One half-hour—only one half-hour—no hope beyond! She glanced at the clock; but the light was too dim to show its face; and tearing out her watch, she hung it upon the post of the bed, and recommenced her task more eagerly and tremblingly than ever.

She re-heated the flannels, and re-wrapped the limbs; she placed bottles of hot water against different parts of the cold body; she forced hot brandy through the death-locked teeth; she renewed the hot onions; she blew her breath into the lungs; she applied ammonia to the olfactory nerves; she did, in fact, everything that love, and hope, and despair could suggest.

But, alas! all to no purpose; all were of no avail! Death claimed his victim! the loved form remained cold and rigid, without the faintest sign of life or animation. Poor woman! with a deep, heavy groan, she looked for the hour, and saw with feverish eyes it wanted but a few points of the fatal moment; and while she looked, the distant rumble of the death-cart became audible, and the appalling words, "Bring out your dead!" once more resounded along the dismal street.

Then it was—in the very agony of despair—with the last faint spark of hope extinguished—the poor wife let fall the head she had been supporting, and from her trembling hand the powerful ammonia was spilled upon the palid face. And then it was, most strange and wonderful to relate, a mighty change took place. There came a quiver—a short, quick gasp—a struggle for life—and then, with a wild shriek of joy, the late desparing wife clasped a living husband in her arms:

We need not dwell upon a scene which no language can portray. When the death-men again came for the body, to their utter amazement—almost terror—they beheld a living man sitting in place of the dead—his now speechless wife clinging fondly to him, and weeping such tears of joy as rarely flow from mortal eyes.

That husband, so miraculously snatched from the jaws of death by the strange and unaccountable devotion of his wife, lived many long years after, to speak of the providenee of heaven, and make happy by true affection the loving heart of the being who had saved him.

Do Americans Overfeed?

An intelligent and close observer says the majority of people eat about a third too much. The average American really dines three times a day, with his beefsteak breakfast, chops for lunch, and roast beef at his 6 o'clock dinner. And he does it at his peril, for this habit of overfeeding, especially of eating so much meat, is one of the provoking causes of so many sudden illnesses and so many sudden premature deaths. Three meals a day of hearty food is exhausting to all the vital processes, and even the strongest succumb finally to this "ridiculous and wasteful excess." Americans are a nation of brain workers, and can not safely indulge in high living. High thinking, or constant use of the brain in any direction, calls for a plain but nourishing diet. Brain workers, especially, ought to live sparingly. Luxurious feeders require much exercise in the open air and freedom from pressure on the brain. For the aged, or even for those above 50, luxurious living and overeating are especially dangerous. As functional activity lessens with increasing years, the supply of food should be decreased accordingly. The hardiest races live on the simplest fare. Frugality in diet—i. e., a minimum amount of the right quality—serves far more certainly to prolong life, insure health and well-being, than a rich abundance and variety, which is accountable in a large measure for the ill-health and dissatisfaction of the present time.

First White Child Born In New York.

The notices of the death of a farmer at New Lots, L. I., named Rapelje, described him as of an old family. There never was truer word written. The first white child born on this island was a little girl named Rapelje, and the news of her birth was sent to Holland in the first ship that left here after the trading post was established on Manhattan island. She was in all probability born within the stockade which stood where the Bowling Green now is. There are only 14 Rapelje families on the island now, and not one belongs to the 400. They spell Rapelje in six different ways, and only one follows the old spelling of the name.—New York Sun.

Fortune Seeking Emigrants.

Many a poor family that seeks the western wilds in the hope of winning a fortune, is preserved from that insiduous foe of the emigrant and frontiersman—chills and fever—by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. So effectually does that incomparable medicinal defense fortify the system against the combined influence of a malarious atmosphere and miasma-tainted water, that protected by it the pioneer, the miner or the tourist provided with it, may safely encounter the danger.

THE NEWS.

Official Paper of the City.

Jas. Meehan, Jr. Editor and Prop.

The question of appointing a village attorney came up before the council at the last meeting. While we do not wish to deteriorate the chances of any one in his efforts to obtain the appointmnt and thus obtain one hundred dollars for little or no work, we feel that the popular demand is economy. When the council is in need of legal advice the matter of procuring it will be less expensive than should an attorney be appointed at a regular salary. The office of street commissioner has been thrown upon the marshal as well as other duties which will help to lessen the running expenses of the village, and why not as a matter of economy to keep up the retrenchment scheme dispense with the services of an attorney until it is evident the village council cannot do without a legal adviser.

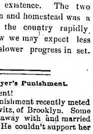
The massacre of the eleven Italians in New Orleans lately, a few of whom are reported, as being subjects of Italy, only goes a step farther in proving the necessity of making all foreigners become American citizens as soon as they are eligable under our laws. A foreigner who comes to our country and does not become an American citizen should be refused admittance. While Europe is the mother country in sending her children to our shores she should remember that we have laws here which must be respected. When a foreign citizen commits a crime within our borders and through the corrupt use of money baffles justice, they must except the sovereignty of the people to exert its authority and thereby make our laws be respected. If foreigners must come let them become citizens and abide by our laws or remain at home and do homage to the potentates whose subjects they are.

Abolition of the pre-emption law, while it may work to the benefit of the country in preventing corporations from securing land, will nevertheless rob many a worthy citizen from an opportunity of obtaining more than a small piece of the public domain. One hundred and sixty acres of land is not enough in a country as broad as ours. Men often make a poor selection at first but according to late law they must abide by the mistake. Our great landed interests which have been thrown away to railroads, might better far have been given to the poor man in various ways. If every male citizen who is farming to day had a section of land our country would be richer, but why lament because the government has decreed that man can have only a quarter section. Farming to day is not an occupation to hanker after, only in a few sections of the country, the Red River Valley for example, does farming pay. Here with our broad fields we can realize the gift of a bountiful Creator and appreciate that decree of provid nce which says the land belongs to the people. When the time comes when the people want the land the law power will no doubt succumb to the popular demand. There is land enough in the country to supply the demand though the old law was still in existence. The two rights pre-emption and homestead was a means of settling the country rapidly. Under the new law we may expect less immigration and slower progress in settlement.

A Wife Slayer's Punishment.

Life imprisonment!

That is the punishment recently meted out to Charles Lovitz, of Brooklyn. Some time ago he ran away with and married Martha Brown. He couldn't support her and she had to go back to her parents. Lovitz became jealous of his wife's cousin, and traded his watch for a revolver. Then he called on Martha and asked her to write a letter for him. She sat down to comply with his request, but had hardly put pen to paper when the man shot her in the forehead. The woman's mother rushed in and Lovitz raised the pistol at her, but turned and sent three more bullets into his wife's body. He next fired a shot through his hat and fell to the floor. The ambulance surgeon, who soon arrived, found the wife dead, and declared that her slayer was shamming. On the trial Lovitz claimed that he had attempted suicide and hit Martha solely because of bad aim.



CHARLES LOVITZ.

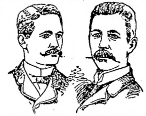
The Decrease of Legal Executions.

The world grows more merciful as it grows older. Many crimes that are today punished lightly were deemed capital offenses a few centuries ago. During the reign of Henry VIII there were hanged in England over 72,000 "robbers, thieves and vagabonds," and in the days of "Good Queen Bess" nearly 500 malefactors suffered death each year. At present, in Great Britain and America, any such slaughter as this would be impossible. People are not sent to execution nowadays unless it is pretty well proved that they have committed most heinous offenses.

EDITORS IN DEADLY COMBAT.

The Recent Terrible Affray on the Streets of Columbus.

Time: 2 p. m. of the day Washington's advent was celebrated. Scene: High street, Columbus, O., west side, opposite the state capitol. Dramatis personæ: Three editors, four "innocent victims," two policemen, crowd of sightseers, unlucky woman, etc. Action powerful; details horribly realistic. Two killed, four wounded.



P. J. ELLIOTT. W. J. ELLIOTT.

Such is a brief resume of the bloodiest encounter among newspaper men for many years, the outcome of the most sensational Sunday journalism yet known in Ohio—a journalism as questionable as the results are bloody. In the worst days of the old dueling times in the southwest, when, says Harriet Martineau, duels were fought every Sunday morning on the levee near New Orleans, and there were thirty-one serious street affrays a month—at that time, be it repeated, women were always spared. In all the fierce recklessness of the Rocky mountain mining camps women were safe alike from direct attack as well as vile insinuation; but the writers of the Columbus Sunday press dealt with each other's female relatives in language too plain to be quoted.

F. A. Levering is proprietor of The Sunday World and A. C. Osborn was its city editor; W. J. Elliott and his brother, Patrick J., own and edit The Sunday Capitol. An extremely innocent "personal" appeared in The World to the effect that Mrs. Florence J. Elliott was visiting at the home of her brother-in-law, William J. As it was an error, Mrs. William J. Elliott was vexed, and so her husband opened a war on Levering. Then began such throwing of mud as is rarely witnessed.

Osborn and Levering charged that the Elliotts had let their mother die a pauper. The Elliotts retorted that Osborn was a thief, seducer and blackmailer, and that Levering had bought his paper with the profits of a house of bad repute. This was published a few days after Levering's marriage. Osborn in The World charged William J. Elliott with being a debauche, a drunkard, a wife beater, and an English spy in the Irish camp, and in the same issue Levering intimated, or rather openly stated, that he had held intimate relations with a relative of the Elliotts. Then every one "knew there would be blood." It came the day after the publication.

The Elliotts opened fire in the midst of a crowd that was looking at the parade. The first result was the death of Washington L. Hughes, an old citizen, who was shot through the head. A. C. Osborn fought as long as he had a shot, then retreated into a store, where Pat Elliott shot him dead. He had made his will and selected a coffin a few days before, informing a friend that he knew the controversy would end in his death. Four other bystanders were wounded besides Pat Elliott, none seriously. A woman testifies that William J. Elliott held her in front of him while he fired three shots over her shoulder.

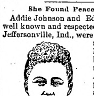
It Was Called the Gallows Plant.

There have existed many queer superstitions regarding plants, but none more grewsome than that attaching to the mandrake. The roots were formerly supposed to bear a strong resemblance to the human form, and are figured as such in the old herbals, being distinguished as to sex by the respective roots having long hair or long beard. During the Middle Ages mandrake was declared to grow only upon the scene of some terrible crime, or where some one had suffered the death of a felon. Some writers said that the plants of it which grew under a gallows were the result of corruption dripping from dead "bodys" left long in the chains. "When dug up," they said, "it would utter a great shriek or a terrible groan." "If a man pulls up a mandrake," says an oldtime writer, "he will surely die soon thereafter. In common prudence it is best to tie a dog to the plant, and thus escape the evil thyself."

She Found Peace in Death.

Addie Johnson and Edward Wyatt, two well known and respected young people of Jeffersonville, Ind., were lovers. Recently they quarreled, as lovers often do, but Edward arranged to visit Addie on an appointed evening, and things looked bright for a reconciliation. The girl donned her best and looked her sweetest. The hour for the meeting came and passed without the arrival of the looked for suitor. At 9 o'clock Miss Johnson went to a drug store and purchased ten cents' worth of strychnine. This she swallowed, and going to her room lay down on the bed to die. At midnight her cries of agony awoke the family. A physician was called, but his services proved unavailing, and the poor girl breathed her last two hours later.



ADDIE JOHNSON.

Her Speech Restored by Anger.

A sudden shock to the system sometimes produces a cure where "physicians were in vain." From Philadelphia comes the story of Mary Murphy, an hotel vegetable cook who has been dumb for three years. Being aroused to a fit of intense anger by the impudence of a colored waiter named Joe Todd, she suddenly recovered her speech. Miss Murphy is a buxom Irish girl about 25 years of age. Three years ago she suffered from a bad bronchial attack and completely lost her voice. All the employes in the kitchen were astonished to hear the autocrat of the vegetables speak. What the doctors for years had failed to do rage had achieved. The girl's hot blood had loosened her tongue. There was much rejoicing over the event, and a festival was extemporized. Miss Murphy, in her joy, took back all the cruel things she said to Mr. Todd, and everybody was happy and joyful.

A. D. Wishard,

RED LAKE FALLS,

f-21may Polk Co., Minn.

State of Minnesota, County of Polk } ss In Probate Court, Special Term Feb. 5, 1891.

In the Matter of the Estate of Peter Bischoff, Deceased:

On receiving and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff of Red Lake Falls, of the county of Polk, Minnesota, representing, among other things, that Peter Bischoff, late of the county of Polk in the State of Minnesota, on the 3d day of April, A. D. 1888, at Dayton, N. D. died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county, at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to said petitioner, Joseph Bischoff granted;

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before this court, on Tuesday the 17th day of March A. D. 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the probate office, in Crookston in said county.

Ordered Further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 5th day of February, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. Benson,
Judge of Probate.

Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:59 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. Jackson, St. Paul. Address letters to Chas. E. Dixon, acting city passenger and ticket agent, St. Paul, F. H. Hanson, Gen. ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

A Fable (Not from Aesop)

An owl once said: "Who so wise as I?
See the shape of my head; see the size of my eye:
I will get me up in a tree and cry,
'Who! Who! Who! so wise as I?"
The chickens began to cackle and fly,
The rabbits off to their holes did hie:
The mice they hid in the granary.
But a boy with a gun stole out on a sly,
And blew that owl to eternity.
That owl, perhaps, though very wise,
Did unjudiciously advertise.

Moral—Don't advertise your weak points to your competitor.

Contented.

Everything pleased my neighbor Jim,
When it rained
He never complained,
But said wet weather suited him.
"There's never too much rain for me,
And this is something like," said he.

When earth was dry as a powder-mill,
He did not sigh
Because it was dry,
But said if he could have his will
It would be his chief, supreme delight
To live where the sun shown day and night.

When winter came with snow and ice
He did not scold
Because it was cold,
But said, "Now, this is real nice:
It ever from home I'm forced to go,
I'll move up north with the Esquimaux:"

A cyclone whirled along its track,
And did him harm—
It broke his arm,
And stripped the coat from off his back,
"And I would give another limb
To see such a blow again," said Jim.

And when at length his years were told,
And his body bent,
And his strength all spent;
And Jim was very weak and old,
"I long have wanted to know," he said,
"How it feels to die," and Jim was dead.

The Angle of death had summoned him
To Heaven or—well,
I cannot tell:
But I know that the climate suited Jim,
And cold or hot, it mattered not—
It was to him the long-sought spot.

Mrs. Bardean while here made many warm friends whose sympathy is extended to her in this affliction: Bourdeau—On March 11th inst. at her mother's residence in St. Boniface, Marie Anna Jane, aged 9 years and 1 month, daughter of the late J. B. Bourdeau, printer.

To a certain extent general advertising creates a want. It announces new things and familiarize in keeping an established article before the public and in introducing a new one. The most successful business men realized this, and they never let the public forget their existence. The oft repeated assertion that advertisements are not read is proved to be a lie of the most senseless kind by the advertisers, record of results.

An exchange says: "No sensible man should or does ever get angry because a newsprper man duns him for money. A dun is not an impeachment of a subscriber's integrity, but is simply an outcropping of the publisher's necessity. For instance a thousand men owe a man from one to four dollars each. He has to dun them all in order to pay his expenses. Instead of getting angry and stopping the paper, because the publisher asks him for what is honestly due, the subscriber should thank the editor for waiting on him so patiently, and pay up like a man.

The coasting party on 7th st hill met with a rather sudden and disastrous termination Tuesday night. The new sled, which holds six or eight persons, was descending, loaded with a merry cargo, when suddenly it veered to one side, ran into the railing and off the bridge. The speed had been brisk and the percussion threw the different persons right and left. Mrs. H. B. Davis received a severe bump on her lip, which was soon frightfully swollen and painful. Mrs. Jos. Smith was bruised badly with severe cuts in her face and over her eye. George Smith, who occupied the first seat, was also scratched and bruised in the face. J. D. Marshall, S. J. Sprague and others who were on the sled also were slightly but not sesiously injured. Though the evening's sport was thus peremptorily put to an end, all may be thankful that no more serious injuries were inflicted. The fall from the bridge to the embarkment below was about five feet, and it is nothing less than a miracle that no limbs were broken or lives lost.

No more completely illustrated copy of the Cosmopolitan has ever gone out than that for April. Miss Elizabeth Bisland, always a bright and attractive writer, is fairly fascinating in her description of dancing, the eldest of the arts, and the illustrations charmingly interpret the article itself. The executive mansion, the "White House," always an object of interest to the people of the United States, and one of the first points to be visited by those who go to Washington, is described by Mr. George Grantham Bain, the Washington correspondent, while the interior is illustrated with many views taken specially for The Cosmopolitan by permission of the President.

Perhaps the feature which will appeal most strongly to literary people, is Brander Matthews' article on the Women Writers of America. Mr. Matthews' criticism shall be read by ever American woman who writes for the press, for magazines, or for the book publisher. Mrs. Cruger, Amelie Rives, and all the best known modern writers, come in for a touch of criticism.

The Nicaragua Canal is described and illustrated by Harvey, and the Japanese theatre by Miss Scidmore. Samples are given of the best work of Meissonier, and Frederic Villiers tells the curious story of a war correspondent's life.

The frontispiece is a portrait of General Sherman, drawn by Gridayedoff, and Sherman and Bismarck come in for the major part of Murat Halstead's Review of Current Events. (Price 25 cents, Cosmopolitan Publishing Company, Madison Square, New York.)

Electric and Health.

A favorite illustration to make vivid the comparison between our grandfathers' days and our own, used to be the wonderful development caused by the use of steam power But that has been cast in the shade by the applications of electricity during only the past ten years. The uses to which it has been put remind us most forcibly that truth is stranger than fiction. Still, through the electric spark has been caught and harnessed for the world's daily work, what it really is remains as much mystery as ever. Some declare it to be the all-providing principle in nature, without which any life or motion is impossible, the only tangible and visible ultimate cause and moving force of the whole universe. If this be true (and none can say it is not) then the theory is probable that the position of the body during sleep, if due north and south, is frvorable to the great electrical currents of the earth exerting an immense beneficial effect of the health. The business man of the to-day generally takes the night for a journey, and such will find that the great north and south line "The Burlington," will afford, in its elegant and luxurious sleepers, a most refreshing night's rest, in harmony with the mysterious electrical forces. For tickets by this line, and any information, apply to agents of this or connecting railroads, or address W. J. C. Kenyon. Gen. Pass. Agent, C. B. & N R R., Paul. Minn.

Humor in a Beanery.

In one of those all night restaurants where the succulent fruit of the beanstalk is deftly served by muscular Ganymedes to a public with an equal muscular digestion humor of a grim, remorseless order occasionally asserts itself. It was the hour when the brawny cup bearers were busily engaged in bringing out the relays of heavy crockery to meet the rush of the midnight attack, with broad triangles of "hickory" pie or the round ring shot crullers. Above the roar of battle there suddenly rang out the clarion tones of a muscular servitor as he glanced about for a stray spoon. Seeing none at hand he turned to the steaming sanctuary at the rear, where the esculatory gods were at work, and in thunderous tones broke forth with, "Hey, Jimmie, bring out der silver ware!"—New York Times.

Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

The swindler has a saying that a fool is born every minute, and he seems to prove his assertion by a recent occurrence at Belfast, Ireland, where four rogues put their heads together and called themselves "The University club." They then affiliated a number of the local football clubs, obtaining the use of their names by a simple expedient of giving them a commission on the tickets sold in their particular districts. Large prizes were offered, and in due course came the public drawing. A simple minded policeman was called up to preside over it, and lend an air of fictitious respectability to an otherwise somewhat barefaced performance. However, nobody seemed to look critically on the two mysterious barrels of coupons, and the rogues might have got off with their spoils if they had only taken the precaution of allotting the prizes to agents of their own among the audience instead of to themselves openly. When, however, the chairman of the "University club" drew both the first and the second prizes, and was naively congratulated on his good luck by one of his colleagues, the astuter part of Belfast began to scratch its head. The sequel was the police court.

Her Mission Was to Kill.

The career of Sophia Gunsberg, the Nihilist, now undergoing life imprisonment at the fortress of Schlusselburg, has been a remarkable one. She is a Jewess who conceived the idea that her mission was to compass the killing of the czar. At Geneva she met a number of young men, and, dazzling them by the almost irresistible charms of her beauty, administered to each, unknown to the others, a solemn oath binding him to do her behests, and to assassinate the emperor on a day and in the manner fixed by her. She was determined that if one failed another should take his place until the deed should be done. She sacrificed without hesitation or regret all that a good woman holds dear in order to maintain her power over her modern Catilines. She had the veiled ferocity and relentlessness of a tiger, yet she fell in love and guarded from her lover all knowledge of the plot. The first he knew of it was after his arrest.

Looks Like a Ground Hog.

A most remarkable monstrosity was seen on the streets at Rome, Ga., the other day. It was Jack Lacy, the "ground hog child," as he has been called from his startling resemblance to that animal. Lacy was born in Cobb county, Ala., sixteen years ago. He has every characteristic of the animal. His feet and hands are clublike, he has no check bones and the bones of his body are a double set without any joints. He can see in the dark as well as in the light. His only language is a grunt like that of a pig. He can only eat after his mother has chewed the food. He never walks, but stands in one position with a continual swinging motion, playing all the time with a stick. Though 16 years old, he is only three feet seven inches high. His face has all the outlines of a ground hog, and altogether the creature looks to be as much beast as human.

The Fire Eaters of Europe.

It is to the prevalence in Europe of obligatory service in the army that must be attributed some peculiar ideas of military honor, and the retention of that universal belief among persons of social standing that insults, either real or imaginary, can only be atoned for by blood. The result is that men are led to treat one another with a degree of politeness and consideration that is unknown in Anglo-Saxon countries, such as the United States and Great Britain. For they know that the slightest neglect of the customary courtesies or the utterance of any distasteful remark is apt to be interpreted as intentional insult and to become the cause for duels.

Truth is eminently stranger than fiction. A big, long, lank male human entered the Delaware and Hudson railroad depot and went up to the ticket office. He folded himself up until his chin came on a level with the window, and asked in a small voice for a half fare ticket.

"Stand up," said the ticket agent.

"I can't," piped the six footer, "unless you get me a stool to stand on."

But it didn't work. The ticket agent blocked his little game and he had to pay.

TERMS, $1.50 A YEAR.

SOME energetic penny-a-liner has written a life of Sitting Bull. All that the rascally old warrior now requires is a monument to make him a greater man than General Grant.

IT was not woman's curiosity so much as man's which sent ex-Empress Frederick to Paris to sound the temper of the French people. The sound was no uncertain one.

IT is reported that Gen. Sherman declared that he would not have a more costly monument than a $75 stone. If this be true, the subscription for the Sherman monument in New York will doubtless be zealouly pushed.

CHICAGO has secured a copy of the first printed bible at heavy cost. This is in keeping with her ambition to be at the head of the procession. The good book will now go upon Chicago's Centre table and become a charge to the wielder of the feather duster.

WHEN they make up their tickets over in Canada they are required to state on the ballot the occupation of the candidate, as Charles Brown, farmer; John Sleeknose, gentleman. In this country the "gentleman" would have a slow race in opposition to the farmer or mechanic.

THE present base-ball war is apparently beyond the diplomacy of even a General Miles, but it is a long time until the season opens. They will stop the ghost dance and get down to business when it is time to gather in the ducats from the public.

THE amendment to the British election laws, based on the "one-man, one-vote" principle, which prevents a voter from voting in more than one electoral area, has been defeated in the House of Commons. The British subject can therefore continue to vote at general elections in every county and borough where he may happen to hold a house.

IN opening the new Spanish Cortes, the Queen announced that the existing commercial treaties with foreign nations would not be renewed but it would be necessary to establish customs relations with them on fresh bases. Her Majesty doubtless had in mind the proposed reciprocity treaty between the United States and Cuba, and wished to prepare the way for it.

THE critics are poking fun at Thomas Wentworth Higginson because his latest poem makes "morning" rhyme with "dawning." Well, "morning" rhymes with "dawning" in Boston; besides, if Tennyson is permitted to rhyme "Penelope" with "Cape of Good Hope" and "whisky" with "Paris, Ky.," why may not Mr. Higginson's Bostonese patois be overlooked?

THE idea of raising the stars and stripes over the school houses of the country originated with the late Gen. Sherman, and every state in the union should adopt the practice as a tribute to the memory of the dead soldier. Sherman was one of the finest examples of a devoted patriot, and if our school children can be infused with his spirit our country is safe for all time.

WHO would have supposed when John Wesley died that the sentennial of his death would be marked by the erection of a statue to the great dissenter in the city of London, and the delivering of a magnificent eulogy of him by the scholarship of Westminster. Yet both was done this week. The world moves a long way in a hundred years.

No details of the Australian election law recently adopted by the Arkansas Legislature have been printed, but so far as the reports of its provisions go, it appears to embody the essential features of the Australian system, and it does not impose any educational property or poll-tax test. It even provides an officer whose duty it is to prepare ballots for those who are illiterate or physically incapacitated for voting,

SEVENTY-ONE years ago the first savings bank in America was organized by solid and benevolent New Yorkers as the first step in a vast anti-poverty scheme inaugurated by Thomas Eddy. Although we still have poor people among us, few things so modestly begun have wrought such far-searching benefits. The bank opened its doors July 3, 1819, and is still in existence. We should suggest a monument to its founders were they not New Yorkers. Under the circumstances it might be regarded as a sarcasm.

The man who left the mysterious box on the ice in the river at Manitowoc has been found. He lives in Cheybogan, Wis., The remains consigned to the river were those of his own child, two years old. It is supposed that he took this means of getting rid of the body to avoid paying funeral expenses.

The bondsmen of the defaulting ex-county treasurer, Sever Serley, made a proposition to a special committee of the county board at Chippewa Falls that they were willing to pay over to the county $15,000 in full settlement of Serley's defalcation, amounting to over $20,000. The board will act on the proposition, and it appears as though nothing but the full amount will be accepted.

Untimely Interruption.

Loud talking in public places is vulgar, especially on the part of women, and more especially when the matters talked about are of a private and personal nature.

The Kansas City Star reports that a very pretty young lady was lately conversing with a young gentleman in a street-car, and pitched her voice so high that none of the passengers could help hearing every word.

"This is my birthday," she said. Every one was interested, the speaker's escort in particular.

"Is that so?" said he.

"Guess how old."

"I can't."

"Shall I have to tell you? Well, it's my—"

"Twenty-fourth!" bawled the conductor, as he opened the door. The passengers all knew that it could not be true, but the young lady was annoyed, and perhaps angry. At all events, her fellow-travelers heard nothing more from her.

HENNESSY AVENGED

The Murderers of Chief Hennessy are Shot by Indignant Citizens of New Orleans.

A Mob of Over Three Thousand Headed by Prominent Men of the City do the Job.

NEW ORLEANS, March 16.—New Orleans struck the Mafia a death blow to-day.

It rose in its might almost at midday and wreaked a terrible vengeance upon the Sicilian assassins who relentlessly slew David C. Hennessy; and, though there are eleven men dead to-night who were happy yesterday over their victory in the greatest criminal trial the city has ever witnessed, the work of bloodshed was accomplished without unnecessary disorder, without rioting, without pillaging, and without the infliction of suffering upon any innocent man save one, and he was only slightly hurt.

Following are the names of those who met death at the hands of the enraged populace:

Manuel Polietz, Pietro Monastro, Antonio Scaffedi, Joseph P. Macheca, Antonio Marchesi, Antonio Bagnetto, Frank Romero, Jim Caruso, Rocco Gerachi, Charles Trahme and Comitez.

It was not an unruly midnight mob. It was simply a sullen, determined body of citizens who took into their own hands what justice had ignominously failed to do.

Last night a body of cool-headed men, lawyers, doctors, merchants and political leaders—all persons of influence and social standing—quietly met, and decided that some action must be taken, and the people's justice, swift and sure, visited upon those whom the jury had neglected to punish. This morning a call for a mass meeting at Clay square on Canal street appeared in the papers, which editorially deprecated violence. The significant closing sentence of the call was, "Come prepared for action."

W. S. Parkerson, the leader, is a prominent lawyer here, the president of the Southern Athletic club, and the man who led the vigorous city reform movement three years ago. Walter D. Doneger, another of the speakers, is one of the leaders of the New Orleans bar; John C. Wickliffe also a prominent attorney, and James D. Houston, of the foremost men of the state. After denouncing Detective O'Malley, who is supposed to have tampered with the jury, the speakers announced that they would lead the way to the parish prison, Mr. Wickliffe concluding with these words:

Shall the execrable Mafia be allowed to flourish in this city? Shall the Mafia be allowed to cut down our citizens on public streets by foul means of assassination? Shall the Mafia be allowed to bribe jurors to let murderers go scot free?

HEADED FOR THE JAIL.

The Determined Crowd, Well Armed, Starts for the Prey.

By this time the crowd had swelled to three thousand or more and before any one could realize what had happened, the great throng, gaining recruits at every street, was tramping down the street to the neighborhood of the prison, stopping only once, and that was at the arsenal, where double barrelled shot guns, Winchester rifles and pistols were handed out to responsible and respectable citizens in the party.

When the vanguard of armed citizens reached the prison which is many squares from Canal street, that grim old building was surrounded on all sides. Sheriff Viller, when he heard that a movement was on foot to take the prisoners and then started on a hunt for Mayor Shakespeare. The Italian consul and Attorney General Rogers joined in the pursuit, but his honor does not reach his office till noon and he was not to be found at any of his regular haunts. The governor had not heard of the uprising and had no time to act. The police force was too small to offer much resistance to the army of avengers.

Meanwhile the prisoners were stricken with terror, for they could hear distinctly the shouts of the people without, madly demanding their blood.

Innocent and guilty alike were frigtened out of their senses, and the prisoners who were charged with crimes other than complicity in the murder of the chief also shared in the general demoralization. Some of the braver among the representatives of the Mafia wanted to die and they pleaded for weapons with which to defend defend themselves, and when they could not get them they sought hiding places. The deputies, thinking to deceive the crowd by a ruse, transferred the prisoners to the female department, and there the miserable Sicilians trembled in terror until the moment when the doors would yield to the angry throng on the outside.

Capt. Davis refused the request to open the prison and the crowd began the work of battering in the doors. On the street there was a heavy wooden door which had been closely barred in anticipation of the coming of the avenging mass.

pressed into the yard of the white prisoners. The door of the first cell was open and a group of trembling prisoners stood inside. They were not the men who were wanted, and the crowd very quickly, though with remarkable coolness, burst into the yard.

Peering through the bars of the condemned cell was a terror-stricken face which some one mistook for Scoffedo. A volley was fired at the man and he dropped, but none of the shots struck him, and it was subsequently found that he was not one of the assassins. The inmates of the jail were ready to direct the way to where the Italians were. "Go to the female department," some one yelled, and thither the men with their Winchesters ran, but the door was locked. In a moment the key was produced. Then the leader called for some one who knew the right men, and a volunteer responded and the door was thrown open. The gallery was deserted, but an old woman, speaking as fast as she could, said the men were up stairs.

A party of seven or eight quickly ascended the stair case, and as they reached the landing the assassins filed down at the other end. Half a dozen followed them. Scarcely a word was spoken. It was the time for action.

FILLED WITH LEAD.

A Deadly Rain of Bullets Pours Into the Screaming Prisoners.

When the pursued and the pursuers reached the stone court yard the former darted toward the Orleans side of the gallery and crouched down beside the cells. Their faces blanched, and, being unarmed, they were absolutely defenseless. In fear and trembling they screamed for mercy. But the avengers were merciless. Bang, bang, bang, rang out the reports of the murderous weapons and a deadly rain of bullets poured into the crouching figures.

Manuel Polietz and Antonio Bagnetto, were hanged and their bodies riddled with bullets, the rest of the assassins were shot. As soon as the bloody work was done the leaders addressed the mob and asked them to disperse.

This they consented to do with a ringing shout, but first they made a rush for Parkerson, and, lifting him bodily, supported him on their shoulders while they marched up the street. The avengers came back in a body to the Clay statue and then departed.

The bodies of some of the slain were removed this evening. Caruso was married but leaves no children. Romero has a wife and children and Macheca a wife and family. Comitez leaves a wife.

The coroner and his jury viewed the remains and presented a simple finding. They did not say who shot the men.

Intense indignation is manifested toward the jurors who tried the Italians. Many of them have been discharged from their situations. Foreman Seligman has been expelled from the Stock Exchange and the Young Men's Gymnastic club. It is charged that the jury was bribed.

HENNESSY'S ASSASSINATION.

The Cause Which Led to Summary Punishment of the Italians.

The following is given as a clear statement of the actuating causes which led to the tragedy enacted this morning, as ascertained from interviews with a number of prominent citizens, some of them active participants in the stirring events of to-day:

On October, 1890, at about 11 o'clock at night, D. C. Hennessy, chief of police of the city of New Orleans, going from his office to his home was waylaid and shot to pieces by a band of Italian assassins, armed with such blunderbusses as could only have been made and used for the purpose of assassination.

The indignation and the excitement was such that mob law and lynching were about to be resorted to. To allay excitement and to assist the constituted authorities, the mayor of the city appointed a committee of fifty representative citizens to take charge of the investigations and to aid in the trial and conviction of the assassins. This measure arrested violence.

The committee entered upon its work, and at a meeting subsequently held in [illegible] of the city hall the actions of the committee were ratified, and they were encouraged to continue their labors to secure the prosecution and trial by the courts.

BRIBERY AND CORRUPTION.

After months of preparation and a trial which continued three weeks and in which distinguished counsel, assisted by an able district attorney, a jury charged to have been bribed and corrupted, in the face of testimony establishing their guilt, rendered a verdict of mis-trial as to three assassins, Scoffidi, Nonastrio and Politz, and acquitted the three assassins, Macheca, Marchesi and Bagnetto. Three more were on trial and were acquitted because of insufficient evidence, these being Mastranga, Incordona and the boy Marchezi.

The acquittal of Macheca, the chief conspirator, and of Marchezi and Bagnetto and the mistrial as to Pollitz, Scoffedi and Monastiero fell like a thunderbolt upon the community, and impressed law-abiding citizens with the conviction that laws had been violated, that their verdict invited assassination and the engrafting of the Italian Mafia upon American institutions.

IN THE METROPOLIS.

Dago Sentiment Set Forth in an Unusually Lurid Editorial.

NEW YORK, March 16.—The following most important portions of the editorial on the New Orleans tragedy in Il Progresso, Italo-Americano, the leading Italian newspaper of this city, give an idea of the feeling of the Italian colony in the matter:

We believe that never in the history of nations has such a horrible tragedy been committed, not even among the most barbarous people or tribes the most entirely removed from the principles of civilization and the maxims of Christianity—never, for savages and barbarians respect the sentences and the members of their courts of law. In what world are we living? Where, oh where, is the much boasted reverence of the American for the constitutional laws of his country? Why is the verdict of a jury in a capital process a farce, a joke, a child's play that they should make beasts of the natives and beasts of others? All narratives confirm the fact of the tacit acquiesence and connivance of prominent citizens; of the premeditated determination to carry out the tragedy; of the security, impunity in the face of the law. Therefore the responsibility, the shame upon the American name is so much the greater. Therefore the more severe must be the account and explanation asked and demanded in the name of justice and truth and human inviolability; in the name of hospitality and of common rights; in the name of constitutional franchises; in the name of international treaties and protections."

The editor of the Italo Americano telegraphed the different Italian papers of the country to-day, asking for opinions on the New Orleans tragedy. Among many replies received were the following:

"Richmond, Va., March,—The Italian colony is very sorrow for the tragedy of New Orleans, and hopes to have satisfaction by the American government.

V. DONATI."

"Boston, March 15.—The colony is excited and unanimously believes in the intervention of the home government, a naval demonstration asking satisfaction and respect for the people's rights.

"M. E. MOEVILLE."

DEMAND REPARATION.

Italians in Chicago Incensed Over the New Orleans Affair.

CHICAGO, March 14.—Signor Oscar Durante, editor of L'Italia of this city regards the lynching of the Italians at New Orleans as a great shame for the American people.

I think the Italian government is going to take prompt action and ask a serious reparation from the United States government. I know that Cavalier Corte, our consul at New Orleans, has already telegraphed to Baron Fava, our minister in Washington, to that effect.

A reparation, a strong reparation, must be had and it will be had, too, I know. If not, then our countrymen here would be treated worse than dogs henceforth. I love Italy because I am a son of that country, but I love America, too, as I am a citizen, and I think that by putting this disgraceful affair to sleep this country would approve of it, and it would be shameful, simply shameful.

The banquet of the Italians of this city in honor of the forty-seventh birthday of King Humbert of Italy has been indefinitely postponed on account of the lynching of the Italians at New Orleans, and a telegram has been sent to the prime minister of Italy, the Marquis Rudini at Rome, signed by a number of prominent Italians, to this effect:

The Italians assembled in Chicago to celebrate the birthday of the king of Italy have postponed the banquet on account of the news of the massacre of our brethren in New Orleans. We demand energetic intervention and protection from the government of the fatherland.

Michigan Diabolism.

MOUNT PLEASANT, March 17.—Shortly after Dennis Burns left his home in Wise, eleven miles north of here, yesterday, his wife went to a neighbor's well for a pail of water, leaving her three children in bed. While gone an unknown man entered and assaulted the oldest girl and set fire to the house to hide the crime. The house was destroyed. The oldest girl was so badly burned that she died in an hour after telling her story.

TAKEN FOR TASCOTT.

A Barber of Aberdeen, S. D., Is Arrested as the Long-Looked for Murderer.

His Resemblance to the Murderer of Millionaire Snell is Said to be Remarkable.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Special Telegram, March 18.—Lee Barnes, a barber of this city, was arrested to-night on the complaint of a man named Owen, charged with being Tascott, the murderer of Millionaire Snell of Chicago. Barnes' examination was adjourned until Wednesday, when a man named Clark, who gave much valuable information to the grand jury which indicted Tascott, will arrive to identify the prisoner.

Owen has been working on the case for a year, being struck with the remarkable resemblance of Barnes to the pictures and descriptions of Tascott. He succeeded in getting a picture of Barnes and forwarded it to his brothers, J. G. and Willis Owen of Chicago, who showed it to Clark, State's Attorney Longenecker and a number of detectives and officers who worked on the case. Clark declared the photograph more closely resembled Tascott than any before seen by him. Some of the detectives thought Barnes "too stocky" for Tascott, but admitted the startling resemblance. Owen claims that Longenecker advised the arrest of Barnes.

Up to-night the location of the supposed Tascott was kept from Clarke, whom the Messrs. Owens feared would seek the murderer on his own account and claim the reward.

Barnes has been here a year, and is reckless and dissipated. He has been remarkably reticent concerning the past, was never known to receive a letter, and has no relatives and friends hereabouts. He claims to be thirty-five years old, but looks younger. He is five feet nine inches in height, and weighs 165 pounds or more. He has light hair, inclined to be red; prominent hazel eyes, and small sandy mustache. His face is full and red and his body erect.

The consensus of opinion here is that it is another case of the wrong man, though the Messrs. Owens are unshaken in the belief that the murderer of Snell is at last captured. The remarkable resemblance certainly warrants the arrest, however.

HEAVILY INSURED.

Important Discovery in Connection With a Mysterious Death.

NEW YORK, March 18.—District Attorney Fitzgerald of Tottenville, S. I., who is investigating the mysterious death of Carl Ruttinger, to-day found in a valise, among Ruttinger's effects, photo negatives of Ruttinger and his brother-in-law, Wright. After a careful comparison Mr. Fitzgerald said that he had no doubt that Ruttinger was the dead man lying in the morgue.

A reporter who saw the negatives was struck by the resemblance of Wright to the man who committed suicide in the Astor house Feb. 3, and who was buried under the name of "Fred Evans."

The latest and most important development in the case is the discovery by the police that Ruttinger's life had been insured in a German company and through a foreign branch of a New York company for $30,000. This has led to the theory that possibly the body which was found bound and gagged in the marshes at Tottenville was not that of Ruttinger at all, and that the whole mystery is an ingeniously contrived "graveyard insurance" plot. In other words, it is suggested that the conspirators may have obtained a body of a man very much resembling Ruttinger in appearance, shipped it to Tottenville, dressed it up in Ruttinger's clothes, and placing the passport in the pocket, dumped the disguised corpse into the Arthur kills in the expectation that, when found, the only means of identification would be the clothing and the written document.

NOTHING IN IT.

The Northern Pacific Has No Desire to Engage in the China Trade.

NEW YORK, Special Telegram, March 18.—James B. Williams, vice president of the Northern Pacific, was seen to-day in regard to the reported negotiations for chartering the steamers Abyssinia, Parthia and Batavia for the Chinese trade.

"Such a loan is an impossibility under the charter of the Northern Pacific," said Mr. Williams. "We have no more right to run steamships than to establish shoe shops. We would not embark in that trade if we could The tea trade does not last more than two months in the year and the other imports amount to little as freight. The steamers used to make a profit by bringing over a load of 1,000 or 1,500 Chinamen at probably $50 apiece. The Chinamen cannot come now and the profit in the trade is gone."

Mr. Williams added that he did not think any officer or any subsidiary company of the Northern Pacific had made any negotiations that would give rise to the report referred to.

PERMITTED BY THEIR CHARTERS.

The Lehigh Valley Will Probably Disregard the Commission's Order.

PHILADELPHIA, March 16.—Secretary John R. Fanshawe, of the Lehigh Valley Railroad company, makes the following statement concerning the decision of the interstate commerce commission in the Coxe suit that is of interest:

"With no disrespect to the commission, which has evidently given to the cause very deliberate and intelligent thought, we will probably refuse to reduce our rates, and in the proceedings which may then be instituted in the United States circuit court for Pennsylvania, will endeavor to show that our rates are not unreasonable. Our charters, under which our whole carriage is made, permit us to charge much higher rates than those which have been condemned. We do not think that it is within the power of congress to disregard these charters and to compel us to carry for a less rate than we are permitted to charge. We do not think that the act of congress is meant to permit any condemnation of rates as unreasonable and unjust, which are specially authorized by the states which confer the franchises to transport. We do not see in the act of congress any authority to pass upon such question."

Serious Charge Against an Old Man.

UTICA, N. Y., March 18.—Amos L. Edict, aged sixty-three, a prominent citizen and a former supervisor, was to-day arrested charged with outrage on the affidavits of six girls, whose ages ranged from eleven to fifteen years. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded for examination.

Put Up a Certified Check.

ASHLAND, Wis., Special Telegram, March 18.—W. P. Frazier, who shot S. MacDonald four weeks ago, secured bail to-day in the shape of a certified check on a bank of Shakopee Minn.

RECALLED BY PINKERTON.

The Famous Detective Ransacks His Memory to Good Purpose.

CHICAGO, March 16.—W. A. Pinkerton, of the Pinkerton detective agency, was an intimate friend of the late Chief Hennessey, and was thoroughly acquainted with the dangers which threatened the chief. He is firmly of the opinion that Hennessey was killed by the Mafia. He tells the following story:

"Last April the Provenza and Matranga stevedores engaged in a fight, the result of a vendetta of old standing, and a Matranga had his leg shot off. The Provenzanos used old-fashioned horse pistols bored out and loaded with slugs. After this shooting the Provenzanos were tried and found guilty, but it was claimed that perjured testimony had been given, and a new trial was granted. That brings us right up to the assassination.

"Detective D. C. O'Malley helped the Matrangas in prosecuting the Provenzanos. Joe Macheca, who was riddled with bullets Saturday, and who had been on good terms with Hennessey, wanted the latter to assist in convicting the Provenzanos even after it was known that the Mafia was producing perjured testimony. Hennessey refused. During the summer he sent to Italy and got the records of all the witnesses who had testified against the Provenzanos. He dug deeper into the order than any outsider ever dared, and when he was up here to see me in October he said he had the evidence to root up the Mafia in this country. He had ascertained facts that would have uncloaked their organized band of assassins and would have sent a great crowd to the penitentiary for perjury. Chief Hennessey told me he believed O'Malley had told Joe Macheca and Matranga they must get Hennessey out of the way or all go over the road. The day for the new trial of the Provenzanos was set for Oct. 15. Hennessey was killed on Oct. 13."

EAST-BOUND SHIPMENTS.

An Insinuation That the Lackawanna Is Secretly Cutting Rates.

CHICAGO, March 16.—The statements of east-bound freight shipments for last week show that the Chicago & Grand Trunk and the Nickel Plate captured a much larger proportion of the tonnage than any of their competitors. In the case of the Nickel Plate it would be indeed surprising if it were not generally known that many shippers receive orders from Eastern buyers to forward their grain over the Lackawanna line, of which the Nickel Plate is the Chicago connection.

Of course, this is understood to mean that the Lackawanna is influencing business by paying rebates, or absorbing lighterage charges in the interest of the consignee who orders the property so routed, but it does not appear that any effectual means have been devised for putting a stop to this irregularity.

The shipments of flour, grain and provisions from Chicago to the seaboard last week aggregated 44,131 tons, against 40,588 for the week previous, an increase of 3,543 tons, and against 56,977 for the corresponding week last year, a decrease of 12,846 tons.

As the Nickel Plate secured 23 per cent of the whole business, the proportion of the Vanderbilt lines combined was 52 per cent, while that of the Pennsylvania lines was 12 per cent, the Chicago and Grand Trunk 27 per cent, and the Baltimore & Ohio 9 per cent.

THE ANNEXATIONISTS.

Talk of Proceeding Against Them on the Grounds of High Treason.

TORONTO, Ont., March 16.—It is understood that the government has been considering what it should do with such men as Edward Farrar. A firm of Toronto solicitors have been at work investigating his conduct, and some weeks ago they advised the government that he came well within the law relating to high treason. As the law now is, it is said, there would be no difficulty in securing his conviction on the charge of high treason. Whether the government will go this far is yet to be decided.

The report says that if the authorities do move they will probably move against some others who are members of parliament. Any punishment that may be meted out to them will be of the nature of banishment rather than of confinement.

It is also said that the government is being urged to ask Lord Salisbury to station in Canada from five to ten British regiments, quartering them in Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver. It is argued that the presence of these regiments in Canada would do more to put down the annexationists and put a check to their conspiracy than anything else could do.

CATTLEY ON TRIAL.

He Reported Himself as Not Well When Danger Was Apparent.

OMAHA, Neb., March 16.—The court martial to try Capt. Henry Cattley, Company C, Second infantry, on the charge of cowardice convened at department headquarters this morning. Charges were read which allege that Capt. Cattley feigned sickness when there was prospect of fighting at Pine Ridge, and shirked duty when it was dangerous. There were four specifications, to all of which Cattley pleaded not guilty.

The only witness examined was Lieut. Turner, who testified that Capt. Cattley ordered him to take command of the company when it was ordered to go after the hostiles on the White river, as he was not feeling well. On other occasions when danger was apparent Cattley reported himself not feeling well and unable to command, but when the duty was not dangerous he was on hand.

The meeting adjourned until to-morrow after the cross-examination of Lieut. Turner had been concluded.

FOUND A WATERY GRAVE.

Twenty-Two Lives Lost by a Collision Between Steamers.

LONDON, March 18.—A serious maritime disaster is reported. The ship Roxburg collided with the ship British Peer, of Calcutta for London, 120 miles southwest of the Scilly islands. The Roxburgh sank, and twenty-two of a crew of twenty-four were drowned, the captain and one seaman being rescued. The other ship was also badly damaged.

Lynched a Woman.

MOUNT STERLING, Ky., March 18.—A mob went to the house of Mrs. Wigginton, whose husband and sons are charged with poisoning Mr. Ferguson and Mr. Watts, and hanged her, and are now searching for Wigginton, who has fled. Two of the Wigginton boys are in jail, which is strongly guarded.

Poisoned Five People.

PARIS, March 18.—A saloonkeeper of Marseilles named Mouttet has been arrested on the charge of poisoning with arsenic his wife, mother-in-law, grandmother, infant, and a friend who had lent him money.

Killed by His Insane Wife.

IOWA CITY, Iowa, March 18.—Mrs. A. C. Richards, living near Charles City, rose from her bed last night, and in a violent fit of insanity grabbed a shotgun and shot her husband through the head, killing him instantly.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Saturday, March 7.

SENATE.

Not in session.

HOUSE.

Petitions were received opposing the passage of the Currier railroad bill and favoring the passage of the bills relating to the age of consent and female municipal suffrage.

Mr. Weatherston introduced a bill to prevent the dissemination of "quitch" grass.

A resolution was adopted for the appointment of a committee to investigate the sanitary condition of the house of representatives.

Several bills, mostly of a local nature, were introduced and referred to committees.

The house adjourned until Tuesday morning.

Monday, March, 9,

SENATE.

Senator John Day Smith called up the matter of the claim of Platt B. Walker for services in obtaining from the United States a refunding of money collected from Minnesota as direct taxes. The resolution of Senator Leavitt for the appoint a committee of three to investigate the claim was adopted, and Senators Leavitt, Tawney and Barr were appointed as such committee.

When general orders were reached the senate went into committee of the whole, with Senator Sanborn in the chair. Senator Lienau's bill providing for state teachers' certificates was recommended to pass, and also the bill raising the age of consent. According to the bill as recommended the age of consent is fixed at sixteen years. The penalty is graded, so that if the girl is under ten years it is imprisonment in state prison for life; if ten years of age and under fourteen, imprisonment in state prison not less than seven years nor more than thirty years; if fourteen years of age and under sixteen, imprisonment in state prison not less than one year nor more than seven years, or imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months nor more than one year.

HOUSE.

Not in session.

Tuesday March. 10.

SENATE.

The attendance of members in the house yesterday was unusually light, and during the morning session but little business was transacted. Several petitions presented against the Currier bill were received, and citizens of Wright county presented petitions asking that all liquor licenses be turned into the county, instead of the village treasuries. A letter from the family of the late Gen. Sherman was read, thanking the Minnesota legislature for its resolutions of condolence and sympathy.

Senate bills were reported upon by the committees, among which were the appropriation bill for the St. Cloud reformatory and the bill abolishing the state board of corrections and charities.

The order of the introduction of new bills was reached, and ten or eleven measures, mostly of a local character, were read for the first time by Judge Dakin. Several were of a local character, but of no great importance.

The principal general bill introduced was by Mr. R. A. Walsh of Ramsey county, and is to establish a court of appeals.

The following senate files were recommended to pass: 308, 28, 341, 97, 85, 8, 78, 213, 140, 54, 66. 101, 57 and 29.

The house then adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

HOUSE.

The senate yesterday postponed the consideration of the usury bill again, and if another postponement is not agreed upon, it will be taken up this morning at 10:30. The day was occupied with the transaction of business in the regular order. One of the principal acts was the recommendation by the committee of the whole that Senator Donnelly's railroad constitutional amendment bill should pass. The bill is nearly a copy of a provision of the constitution of Illinois.

Senator Hompe's bill requiring court commissioners to give bonds for $2,000 was recommended to pass.

Senator Allen's bill amending the law relating to ownership of real estate by corporations and aliens so that it will allow lumber companies to own more than 5,000 acres of land was recommended to pass as amended. The amendment limits the amount of land to 10,000 acres and provides that it shall be what is known as pine lands.

Senator S. D. Peterson's bill requiring the railroad commissioners to ascertain the cost of railroads was recommended to pass.

Senator Lienau's bill adding two members to the high school board and creating the office of high school inspector, with a salary of $2,000 per year, was recommended to pass after some opposition. The objections raised were to the creation of another state office.

Wednesday, March. 11.

SENATE

So far as progress on the usury bill was concerned but little was accomplished. One additional section of No. 1 was finally adopted, but the temper of the senate is so uncertain that it may be changed by today's proceedings.

At 10:30 o'clock the senate resumed consideration of the usury bill. Senator Donnelly read a list of alliances which had petitioned for the retention of the usury laws.

Senator Dean considered that both bills, No. 1 and No. 375, were departures from the correct system of finance, and argued that it would be a great calamity to make the laws relating to interest and usury more stringent at this time.

Senator Keller spoke in favor of 6 and 8 per cent interest, with simply the forfeiture of interest for usury.

A vote was finally reached upon Senator Donnelly's amendment to Senator Tawney's amendment to section 3, of S. F. No. 1. Senator Tawney's proposition was to strike out the clause providing for forfeiture of principal for usury and insert a penal clause, and Senator Donnelly's amendment was to strike out that portion striking out the forfeiture clause. This amendment to the amendment was carried by a vote of 25 to 24,

Senator March then presented an amendment to section 3, which again brought up the question of substituting the penal clause for the forfeiture, it being exactly the same as that of Senator Towney, except that the limit of the fine was fixed at $300 instead of $500.

Senator Donnelly moved to amend Senator March's amendment by striking out so much as repeals the forfeiture of principal clause. This was the second time during the day that the senate had voted on this question. This time the amendment of Senator Donnelly was lost by a vote of 23 to 23,

As soon as the president declared the amendment lost, Senator Donnelly arose and said he presumed the senate was about to adopt the amendment of Senator March, which would repeal the present usury law and replace it with a law making the taking of usury a penal offense.

"I have," he continued, "been holding something in my breast for several days, and I think the time has come to disclose it. A member of this senate, who is a banker, said to me that the banks of this state had raised $10,000 to beat the bill now pending before this body. I do not charge that any of this money has been given to buy senators. But I do charge that money has been raised to defeat the question upon this floor."

After order was restored Senator Leavitt said he presumed the senator from Dakota had kept his charge of corruption for the last shot, but it was a blank shot, as there was nothing in the charge. He then presented the following resolution:

AN INVESTIGATION ORDERED.

Resolved, That a committee of five shall be appointed, of which the senator from Dakota shall be chairman, to investigate the charge that the bankers of this state have raised $10,000 to defeat S. F. No. 1.

The resolution was adopted without division, only two or three voices being against it, and the senate adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

HOUSE.

After the house had assembled and the opening ceremonies had been gone through, Mr. Reeve called up his resolution memorializing congress against free coinage and had its discussion made a special order for Friday at 2 p. m.

A motion by Mr. Ringwald providing that each member of the legislature be allowed five additional copies of the new legislative manual went over on notice of debate.

The new bills introduced were not very numerous, but seven or eight of them possessed points of general interest.

A bill by Mr. French relates to the method of procedure by heirs to real estate, in cases where a person dies intestate.

Mr. Smith introduced a bill providing for the creation of a new lumber district to be known as Lumber District No. 8, which shall comprise St. Louis, Lake, Itasca and Beltrami counties and tributary territory to the Rainy river. It further provides for the appointment of a surveyor general for the new district, and fixes the scaling fee at five cents.

Thursday, March. 12.

SENATE.

The senate at yesterday's session finally succeeded in recommending an interest and usury bill for passage. The bill recommended was Senate File No. 1, which reduces the interest to 6 and 8 per cent and retains the present law, which forfeits both principal and interest for usury.

Senator Donnelly presented a resolution authorizing the investigating committee, which was ordered the day before to be appointed, to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer to take evidence.

When the special order—the usury bill—was taken up, the first question was upon the amendment of Senator March, which in effect repeals the forfeiture clause and substitutes a penal clause in its stead.

Senator Wood, in discussing the question, said that no action taken by the legislature could bring a great measure of relief. The remedy must be furnished by the national government in providing a greater volume of currency.

A vote was then taken upon Senator March's amendment and it was defeated by a vote of 24 to 24,

Senator John Day Smith moved that the amended bill be recommended to be placed at the head of general orders, but the motion was defeated by a vote of 17 to 30.

Senator Davis moved to recommend the amended bill to pass. Senator Leavitt moved to substitute No. 375 as amended, but the motion was lost by a vote of 20 to 27.

Senate File No. 1 was then recommended to pass by a vote of 25 to 21, and the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Two petitions in favor of the Currier bill were received and referred to the railroad committee.

Under the order of the introduction of bills a large number of measures were introduced, among them being several of a general character. The most important was a proposed amendment to the constitution introduced by Mr. Smout by which it is proposed to radically change the qualification of a legal voter in this state.

The 110 bills on general orders gave the house a busy time during the afternoon. Mr. Greer was called to the chair when the house went into committee of the whole, and the galleries commenced to fill up with large numbers of railroad employes and others interested in N. P. Nelson's bill to compel railroads to fit their locomotives and cars with automatic breaks and couplers.

After a speech in favor of the bill by Mr. R. A. Walsh and short and lurid remarks pro and con in which Mr. McAllister, the Demosthenes of Hennepin county, participated, a vote was taken and the bill, which has been fought over and discussed for the past six weeks, was recommended to be indefinitely postponed by a vote of 53 to 07

Friday March. 13.

SENATE.

Senator O'Brien presented a communication from the warden of the Stillwater penitentiary saying that the binding twine machinery was now in working order and would be operated on the day when the legislature visited the prison. Later in the day it was agreed that the senate should adjourn at noon on Thursday next and spend the afternoon at Stillwater. A special train will leave the union depot at 1:30 o'clock.

When Senator Donnelly's bill proposing a constitutional amendment relative to railroads and warehouses was reached upon the calendar, Senator Leavitt spoke briefly against it, pointing out some defects which he thought existed in the measure. Without further debate the senate proceeded to a vote, and the bill was defeated by a vote of 27 yeas and 13 nays,

Soon after Senator Donnelly moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was lost. The motion prevailed by a vote of 25 to 14. The bill was then referred to the judiciary committee for amendment, with the understanding that it should be placed upon the calendar when reported back and not go again to the committee of the whole.

Senator Allen's bill amending the law relating to the ownership of real estate by aliens and corporations, so that it permitted corporations engaged in manufacturing lumber to own 10,000 acres of land, was defeated.

Just previous to the adjournment of the senate Senator Crandall presented a concurrent resolution providing for the adjournment of the legislature April 10. Notice of debate was given by Senator McHale.

HOUSE.

The committee on local bills reported back a large number of bills and occupied a great part of the morning. The bill to relieve Thomas Monahan was placed on general orders, and several local bills were passed under suspension of the rules.

Representative Bell's wolf bounty bill was indefinitely postponed on the recommendation of the committee on agriculture. The bill to prohibit granite cutting in the state reformatory at St. Cloud was disposed of in the same way.

Senator McHale's bill relating to the sale of poisons was passed on to the calendar.

On motion of Mr. Stockwell the committee on towns and counties was instructed to bring in a bill to organize every unorganized county in the state.

Mr. Linnemann presented a resolution to increase the pay of Reading Clerk Dakin to $10 per day, Assistant Clerk Moody's pay to $7.50 and the doorkeeper's committee room keepers and other assistants be paid $5 per day. Mr. Gildea gave notice of debate.

Mr. Bell introduced a bill authorizing the city of St. Paul to convey to the United States lots 3, 4 and 5, of block 8, Rice & Irvine's addition, for a site for a new post-office or government building.

A bill by Mr. N. P. Nelson defines and provides punishment for cruelty to children under sixteen years of age. The fines inflicted by infractions of the law are to go to the local society for the prevention of cruelty.

"And what of Lady Martindale?" he asked.

"Most singular freak, you know," his lordship answered, in real anxiety. "Been missing since dawn, you see. Pearson, her maid, tells me that she rode off, followed by Harris, at the first streak of day."

"There is nothing very alarming in that," Latour rejoined, in relieved tone. "Sit down and have some coffee before she returns for breakfast."

"Couldn't do it, you know," Lord Martindale replied, walking to the window and gazing over the desert. "She told Pearson to wake me in half an hour—she'd be back by that time, you know. That was two hours ago and—it's devilish strange, really!"

"It is an odd time, rather," Latour said absently. "But Harris was with her, and if anything wrong had chanced"——

Cries from the street interrupted him; the clatter of flying hoofs sounded on the stones of the court, and as he glanced down through the window a sudden dread sprang to his brain.

Morning stables nearly completed, the horses of the cavalry escort were tethered to the long rope in the yard beyond, wiry native dragoons finishing the grooming of their sleek coats by the last rub down. As Latour looked a riderless horse, covered with foam and snorting with fright, dashed by the sentry, clattered up the court and halted at the rope. Instantly strong hands seized him, some stroking his neck and muzzle, others lifting the saddle and examining his sides, gored by the sharp shovel stirrups.

Lord Martindale stared over his shoulder, asking anxiously:

"That is the horse Harris rides? My God, Latour, something is wrong! I may be a fool, you know; but if you loved her as I do you'd understand, really."

Without answer Latour clapped his hands, speaking rapidly to the prompt orderly.

"Saddle Said Pasha and another quickly; sling my holsters and examine the caps. Ask Capt. Ahmed to report here,' he said, in Arabic.

His mind was clear now, the soldier instinct rising strong over anxiety and doubt. The riderless cavalry horse had run a long distance, evidently over heavy sand. The two Arabs at the gate, the taller one later at the hotel, Edith's imperative wish to visit their camp, and, above all, the unusual comment made on her by those stolid children of the desert—all these flashed into his mind and had formulated into his plan before he had even donned his uniform coat. As he rolled a loose veil about his light helmet and slipped the strap of a field-glass over his shoulder Capt. Ahmed entered. To him Latour said rapidly, in Arabic:

"Captain, I have reason to fear trouble with Mohammed-ben-Zizi's Arabs. Mount twenty men with loaded carbines; trot to the Caliphs' Tombs. If I am not in sight signal by firing your revolver; but, if you see me riding toward the tents, follow at full speed."

As Ahmed turned to obey Latour said to Lord Martindale:

"Though your fears may be groundless, my lord, I have ordered horses saddled for us. This glass will surely give us a view of Lady Edith from the Bab-el-Nasr as she gallops home for breakfast. Come; they are ready."

Restless hoofs clattered below, and Lord Martindale again asked, as he followed his host:

"Was not that horse the one you loaned Harris?"

"Yes: but he's an Arab," Latour replied, forcing levity through the sickening dread that oppressed him. "Bow-Bells offers bad training for handling the desert born."

"The beggar is such a damnable rider, really!" the other growled. "If he has been thrown and left her ladyship to ride alone I'll break his bones, you know."

Two magnificent Arab steeds stood at the doorway—one a grand stallion, white as curd and taller by a hand than the average native horse. His long flank, the corded muscles of his thighs and flat forearms, showed power equal to the bottom indicated by great breadth of chest; and his calm, large eyes gazed with human intelligence into his master's, as he rubbed his lean muzzle on his shoulder and snorted low welcome through bright pink nostrils.

For Said had been Zoulfikar Pasha's gift to Latour with his rank of bey, and his master had tested his pure blood—of the Aneyzeh breed, flowing straight from the mares of the prophet; a pedigree jealously guarded as that of the sultans' selves—in more than one perilous ride. But now he examined the girths and bit buckles with unusual care, raised the flaps of his holsters and loosened the two army "Colts" resting in them. Then he said, abruptly, "Mount, my lord;" and the next moment those two men, so strangely met again—more strangely still, sent to their quest by one motive—were galloping toward the Gate of Victory.

Through the gate, out on the open desert, nearing the Tombs of the Caliphs, yet no sight of living thing upon the hot sands. For the sun, now two hours high, flooded the flat plain with blinding glare, and his heat, December though it was, was close and oppressive.

Any rider for pleasure had sought the shade of home—certainly of the Tombs—long ere this, and Latour's heart sank as they galloped near those wondrous mausoleums to the very spot where he had strained that beautiful form to his breast scarce half a day ago.

Suddenly that breast swelled with joy. Clear, sharp and near rang out a horse's neigh. But his joy died out, even before Lord Martindale had cried:

"There she is! Great luck, really!"

For Said, at the sound, had sent his sharp ears forward, but ere it died he dropped them, making no reply.

Latour shook his head gloomily.

"No, not she!" he answered. "Said would have answered a stable companion. But some one is there, and he must have seen her or the groom.

Then he turned Said into the deep shades thrown wide and cool upon the sands from the Caliph Bergook's tomb. There stood a wiry, ugly Arab, apparently busied with the thong of his stirrup, but unarmed, and with the bedouin's dingy bournous absent. The man looked up carelessly enough; but a strange gleam of recognition and surprise came into his dull eyes as they glanced first at Latour's face, then at his uniform.

"Salaam alickoum, Effendi," he said gravely.

"Peace be with you, also," Latour answered, in his own tongue. "You seem not of Cairo, but a stranger; and these be hot hours for a journey. Yet your mare shows no fatigue, nor heat," he added, eying mare and man closely.

"The mare is a good mare," the Arab answered, forgetting his stirrup mending and vaulting into the saddle.

"Peace be with thee, then, and coolness in thy ride," Latour answered pleasantly. "I also must go my ways." And he slowly turned Said's head, but kept his keen eyes rooted to the other's as he added quickly:

"Which way rode the lady?"

The Arab's eyes opened in surprise, and his dark face changed, but he quickly relapsed into stolidity, answering slowly:

"Of what sitta speaks the Effendi? Surely none would ride on the desert under this sun."

Latour rode off without reply. Joining Lord Martindale, he said briefly:

"The Arab in there lies, I think. Whether or not, we can learn nothing, and are wasting time."

He opened his field glass and swept the desert carefully. Some three miles southward, the low, black tents of the sheik showed distinctly in the clear atmosphere—even the gleam of a white bournous distinguishable. Out toward the Shoubra road, the great tree rows planted by Mehemet Ali now towered still and stonelike in the breezeless glare. Behind them glittered the domes of Cairo; but no speck of life moved on the desert.

Lord Martindale sat silent. Deep anxiety now marked his face; and as the glass fell he cried:

"My God! I can't stand this, you know! Anything is better than sitting still. You know this damned country: do you suspect danger to her?"

"Suspicions are useless; facts are what we want," Latour answered, closing the glass.

"But we might have missed her?" cried the now agonized husband, clinging to that shred of hope.

"Not if she rode to the desert," the other answered calmly. Into his quick mind the certainty had come. Still there was one chance that he erred, and, pointing to the Shoubra road, he said shortly:

"Gallop over there. There is bare chance she comes that way. I will take the desert."

Racked with dread, Lord Martindale turned without one word, speeding for the trees. Latour's loosened rein gave signal to Said, who bounded off over the hot sands straight for the Arab tents.

PART III—CHAPTER VI.

LOCHINVAR IN THE EAST.

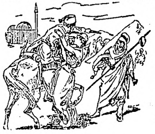
Swift as he swept along, swifter rushed to Latour's brain shame, contrition, self reproach, each in turn shrinking in the burning memory of that kiss, still tingling through his veins—of the soft pressure that held him to the heart beating so wildly—if so sinfully—for him!

Was he responsible for her mad freak? Had memory driven her forth at dawn, dreading to face the man whose honor she had smirched for his sake?

Exactly what the danger was he could not define. To life or limb, surely none; for the Arab of the desert is not of savage nature, and the first horror—of her capture for sale into some harem—had been dismissed as preposperous. But were her detention only for ransom, the thought of durance among savages, no word of whose tongue she knew, made the man grind his teeth in impotence of wrath.

Would the escort arrive in time? Not yet, he knew. Still he turned in saddle and glanced back at the Tombs, now a mile away.

There the Arab sat upon his horse, standing high in his stirrups, his bournous fluttering loose. In his right hand he raised his slender lance, hidden while they had spoken, and from its point waved his white turban.



"A signal! I was right!" Latour muttered, forcing his gaze once more on the tents, now fast growing more distinct.

Suddenly his eye caught a living figure on the sand, midway between. With voice and heel he urged his horse to racing speed, the hot air screaming past his ears as though the Khamsin wind were blowing; his eyes riveted on the moving thing, now seen to be a man, staggering onward.

On faster, over the burning sand, for seconds that seemed hours; and then the man, recognizing him, waved his hand.

"Harris! Alone!" Latour groaned through his set teeth. "My God! what have they done to her?"

Again the shovel stirrup gored the racing Arab's side. He was within hail, shouting to the struggling groom in the voice that had carried "Charge!" over the roar of battle down the long brigade:

"Where is she?"

The man screamed something, lost in the rush of wind past Latour's ears; but he saw that Harris was ghastly, exhausted, with blood streaming down his face.

Closer still he came, and again Latour cried fiercely:

"Where is she?"

Harris steadied himself, pushed back the matted hair from his forehead and shouted:

"At the tents!"

The flying Arab steed reached the staggering man. Latour's voice, trumpet clear in the stillness, hurled at him the words:

"Help will come! See!"

As he spoke he half turned in the saddle. The Caliphs' Tombs, dim and shadowy now, still glinted the sun from their minarets. But a gasp jumped from his heart to his lips, as he saw a dust cloud rising between.

On, still on, until the Arab camp was plainly seen. And there, was busy movement; but his quick eye told that it was to avoid, not meet, him. Most of the low, black tents were already struck and folded, their agile, sinewy owners moving swiftly among them. Foremost of those still standing was the rather taller tent of the sheik.

Between this and the nearest tent stood a sleepy, low nosed pack camel; while farther off another kneeled and busy hands piled tents and baggage in his saddle. The Arab mares, each picketed to a long spear driven in the sand, and with a bag of barley tied about the nose, stood quiet and docile.

Loosening the pistol in his holster, Latour checked his horse by a word, the great stride slackening to a swinging gallop, then coming to a stand at easy hail.

"Peace be with thee, O sheik!" Latour cried.

"And with thee also peace!" the Arab answered. He rose and stood silent as Latour advanced slowly within two paces of his mat. Then he added:

"Alight, O warrior of Ismail the Pasha, and sit beneath my tent."

The whirl and heat had gone from Latour's brain now, replaced by cool, quick resolve. He felt craft must meet craft, and this Arab was an adept. Quiet as though on parade he sat, reaching over to caress the grand neck of the steed that bore him so gallantly, but really listening to his breathing.

The three mile race over the sand, under that blazing sun, had scarcely tested the endurance of the Aneyzeh blood. Two long, deep breaths he took, then his sides scarce moved, and the man knew he could rely upon his horse if he could but trust his own coolness and sagacity.

"Little time have I to sit, O sheik Mohammed-ben-Zizi," he answered slowly. "Neither have I yet come on my visit to thee. Only on my way to other duties have I chanced near thy tents."

The Arab's brow clouded, and his dull eye grew brighter, as he answered:

"As thou sayest, O warrior, so shall it be. Mohammed-ben-Zizi forceth not his salt upon the unwilling, who careth not to eat it, but prefers to stand like a fakeer doing penance, rather than smoke beneath his tent."

Again the Creole answered very slowly; but his quick ear and quicker eye were busy, and when he finished his plan was formed upon the information both gave him.

"Thou, O son of the desert," he said low and quietly, "art free to do thy ways, but in our army there are rules that none may break. One of these commands that foot may not leave stirrup till duty be accomplished. Still, much do I marvel, O sheik, to see thy tents folded and thy people prepared for travel, while the answer of our sovereign unto the sheik of the Beni-Ali is yet unheard!"

So speaking, Latour noted three things. Before the nearest tent sat an aged Arab, who had risen with the sheik. His extended arm, lean and black, grasped his spear, the bournous falling from it like a curtain before the tent. Moreover, the camel's pack saddle had been replaced by mats strapped on him for a seat. And at last he noticed one mare, picketed apart, a bournous strapped around her, hiding head and sides. While he spoke she whinnied loud beneath this hood. Said raised his head, pricked his ears forward and nickered in reply, but his rider appeared not to note as the sheik replied:

"Yesterday said I to thee, O warrior of Ismail-ben-Ibrahim, that thy ruler of Mitsraim is no king of the Beni-Ali! For what thou seest here, the way of the Bedouin is the way of the wind. He goeth—even as he cometh—howso he listeth."

"Then, ere thou goest, O sheik," Latour said gravely and quietly, "in the name of my king, Ismail Khedive of all Egypt, speak I these words!" He paused an instant. Thus far all had been spoken in the low, guttural Arabic. Backing Said two paces, Latour now raised his clear voice, crying in resonant English:

"Courage, Edith! Speak no word, but come—quickly!"

"What Sheitan's gibberish"—— The sheik's exclamation of wonder was cut short. For, gliding by the old Arab, Edith raised her proud head in the sunshine. The bloodless olive face spoke nothing of fear; the defiant eyes softened only as they met Latour's, and her heaving bosom forced the whisper:

"Adrien! Then I am safe!"

Latour felt she was close to him, but his eyes never left the shiek's.

Knowing well the dual Arab nature, he watched eagerly which of its moods would sway the chief, and his breath came easier as he saw that craft, not force, would first be tried. For instead of snatching his spear Zizi only stared a moment at the woman.

"What jugglery is this, O warrior?" he asked, with cunningly simulated wonder. "Truly might I deem thee one of the wicked Jinns, that dost summon strange forms from the sands of the desert. In the name of Sheitan, speak! Who is she?"

"How should I know aught of her?" the Creole answered, with wonder equal to his own. "But if this verily be a Frankish woman who hath lost her way upon the desert and been rescued by thy people, then will I return with her to the friends who must now be seeking her."

A strange smile writhed the thin, black lips of the Arab. Adepts in dissimulation, even beyond the Levantine Greeks, his race ever honor craft in others. He saw the loophole of escape offered by the other's words; but he only answered calmly:

"If thou canst show me him who hath brought the infidel woman beneath our tents, by Allah do I swear to punish him!"

"It is well," Latour rejoined quickly. "Then she may go with me to El Kahireh."

"And wherefore?" replied the Arab, again with his ugly smile. "Safe is the Frank khanum under the tents of the Beni-Ali. Let the Giaour seek his own. As I learn, the Ingleeze prince from whose harem she cometh can lavish gems and diamonds upon this plaything"——

He broke off suddenly. Craft had carried him too far; and, as he realized that he had trapped himself, Mohammed-ben-Zizi's brow knotted and his eye shone with an evil gleam.

Not knowing if he breathed, so great was the tension on his nerves, yet with brain coolly alert, Adrien Latour had borne this trying interview. Still his eye never quitted the sheik's, but the hot blood of his race rushed to his heart with a wild joy, for he felt that time was past for parley, and now—for action!

As the sheik ceased his left hand swiftly twitched the bournous back, baring the long, tawny, muscular right arm. But ere he could grasp his spear the Arab stopped spellbound, as though he gazed into the eyes of the cobra di capello! For, quick as was his gesture, quicker still was that which flashed the pistol through the air.

"One word—one sign—is death!" whispered Latour, in Arabic.

"Quick! Mount!" he cried to her. "Your life—more—depends upon your courage!"

All had passed so rapidly, so calm and low had been the spoken words, that the stoical Arabs near had never looked toward him. And now, as the absent pistol unlocked Mohammed-ben-Zizi's voice, their wondering rush was too late.

As he had felt Edith settle upon the horse—and with wondrous presence of mind pass her left hand round him, not to shake his pistol arm—Latour called out to Said, and the noble horse sped away over the path he had come.

"Hold fast! Stoop low to the right!" Latour cried, bending his own body to the left to give her room. "They may hurl the spears!"

But no sound whizzed by their ears save the wind of their own rush; and, after a few more bounds, the man raised himself and glanced back. At the tents all was wild confusion—men running for their picketed steeds and tearing the bags from their noses; the sheik himself foremost among them.

Under his raised hand Latour scanned the desert. The dust cloud rose more distinct, yet full two miles away. But it now advanced more rapidly, as though his need were known. Again he twisted round to scan the camp, now nearly a mile behind. Mounted Arabs had rushed from it, on their fresh mares, spreading out wide over the sand, as is their wont in chase—many a white bournous trailing on the wind, and sharp spears glittering in the sun. Before him the moving dust cloud was still four times their distance away; yet the soldier did not urge his horse out of the even, steady gallop; each stride as regular as though he carried no extra weight.

On they pressed, steadily and in silence, for a half mile more. Then the strained ear of the man caught the cries of numerous pursuers gaining on him. Far to the right and left the cries were clear, while those behind grew fainter, and he knew that the fleetest steeds were deployed to hem him in more surely. Still Latour did not urge his horse, confident what the grand steed could do, and saving him for yet more urgent need.

"Courage!" he whispered to the woman behind him. "They waste their breath. See! In yonder dust is safety. Ahmed is nearing us."

He said no more. For dull, but surely, away to the right he caught the muffled thud of hoofs upon the sand.

They were gaining rapidly! Had he let them come too near?

Once more he urged the horse slightly with touch of stirrup, the sensitive animal responding with new strength, faster, faster still, until the level sands seemed flying backward past them! On at that tearing speed for a half mile! Then the distant dust cloud, still half a mile away, opened and showed the Egyptian troop charging at speed.

A great gasp of relief broke from Latour's breast; for the double weight, at speed, told heavily on Said, who labored in his stride. And just then, for the first time, Edith spoke.

"Look to the right," she said quietly and low.

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C,. St. P.,M. & O.Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St.Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7;45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their time as on other lines, because this is shorter than any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicag to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

'Tis Rabbits' Day.

Or Will be Pretty Soon, to the Everlasting Joy of Everybody.

The Dramatic Troupe Will Play 'Atonement'—New Scenery, and Other

Attractions, That is Sure to Draw A Crowd—An Easter Ball.—Notes.

Sunday, March 29th is Easter Sunady. Then quite surprisingly, the day following is Easter Monday. Writing this at an advance of five days before these precious dates, our lack of energy or enthusiasm will without a doubt, be readily pardoned. A month and a half of Lent—well, a joyous refrain refuses to flow from a starved pen, and there is an end of it. Red Lake Falls is to be highly fayored this Easter. The targedians and tragediennes, soupes and villains, comedians and juveniles have been in training for a couple of weeks and propose to give a wonderful dramatic entertainment as an opening of the glorious Easter season. By Monday evening it has been minutely calculated, the hard boiled eggs meat and other nutritious substences will have been taken into the system and digested in sufficient quantities to insure adequate strength for a full evenings jollification. A dance will wind up the occasion, it is to be understood, but no supper provided for so be prepared for a siege. (The managers wisely figured that a supper after the long Lentea vigil would cap the climax and outraged nature would burst with passion and take revenge on the stomache.)

The play that is to be presented is grand, without a question. We hope the company will not do it an injustice. Many, no doubt are not familiar with the work from which it springs. The moral is good, and those who might hesitata to go on fears upon this score may lull them to rest. The moral is sublime. The caste of characters is as follows.

Chances

Of all men on the earth, the American is the most hopeful, energetic, and self reliant. As he would phrase it he is a "hustler," and all he wants is a chance. Horace Greeley's famous advice "Go West, young man," has lost its value, for the chances are good in the West. But the United States is now, more than ever, a country of good chances and great opportunities, not alone in the west, but south and southwest. The Mississippi Valley, the Rocky Mountain Regions, the golden Pacific Coast and the sunny plains of the South, are full of chances for ambitious young men, who are not afraid to work hard. To visit any of these sections of our country, "The Burlington" has long been the favorite route, reaching as it does, the most important points in nine of the best states and territories in the centre of the continent, and by connecting lines being the short and direct route to all points, from Puget Sound to the Gulf of Mexico. Wherever you think of going, apply first for tickets to some agent of "The Burlington," or write for information to W. J. C. Kenyon, Gen. Pass. Agent, C. B. & N. R. R., St. Paul. Minn.

Guaranteed to Cure LaGrippe

We authorize our advertised druggist to sell you Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, upon this condition. If you are afflicted with LaGrippe and will use this remedy according to directions, giving it a fair trial and experience no benefit, you may return the bottle and have your money refunded. We make this offer, because of the wonderful success of Dr. King's New Discovery during last season's epidemic. Have heard of no case in which it failed. Try it. Trial bottles free at W.A. Schrieter's.

The injured coasters were delightfully enterained Monday evening at the residence of Mr. and Mrs Marshall by the hostess Mrs. Marshall. Among those who were on the unlucky bobs and who participated in the hospitality at the Marshall house are: Mrs. Joseph Smith Mrs. H. B. Davis, Messrs S. J. Sprague G.M. Smith J. D. Marshall Masters H. B. Davis and Fred Smith. The countenances of some of the guests resembled that of our newly elected Congessman who it is alleged, shortly after his election visited a city and seeing a locomotive become frightened and in his retreat ran against a barb wire fence much to the disfigurement of the physiognomy.

A little girl of ten, who was recently called as a witness in Camden, New Jersey, testified that she could not read, had never seen a bible and never been inside a church. It is the evident duty of the West to send missionaries to New Jersey.

Emperor William has concluded not to retaliate on the French for the reported slights to his mother during her recent visit to Paris. This means that the wife of the French minister will be permitted to ride through the streets of Berlin without being mobbed.

People who have suffered in a hasty trip across the British Channel will have plentiful sympathy for the unhappy passengers on the Servia, who have been tossed about helplessly on that particularly ugly bit of water for days, and during the worst storm of the season.

Boston is beginning to think it has made a mistake in having started so many "homes"—for the destitute, the aged, the orphaned, etc. It is a rather wide question in social economy, with a good many ramifications. But it may be laid down as a broad general principle that the more people are left to make their own way in the world the better for all concerned.

Vice-President Morton is the first vice-president who has been honored with the privilege of seeing himself on a bust in the Senate chamber; but happily the bust is not of liquid origin—it is a counterfeit in marble which is to remain for all time in its proper niche in the Senate chamber. Heretofore all busts of vice-presidents have been made after their retirement from office.

The Chinese, since their exclusion from this country, have been crowding into Manilla, in the Phillippine Islands by the thousands. The people of Manilla do not pass exclusion acts when the interlopers become too numerous to suit them. They merely rise up and massacre a few score thousand of the celestials, and then go on about their business. But in spite of that the Chinese continue to flow in and take their chances.

According to a dispatch from Berlin, Minister Phelps is being feted by rival factions among the German political parties. Whether the sentiments expressed on these occasions by the distinguished guests are radical, conservative or mid-way between the two, all unite in expressions of the warmest regards for Mr. Phelps, who has established his reputation not only as a very capable and painstaking representative of the United States government, but as an exceedingly agreeable and popular gentleman personally.

An East Nashville, Tenn., negro, who sells poultry for a living, recently found himself without any stock in trade and minus the money to buy more. He had an old gray eagle, though, which he had received from his former master at the close of the war, and this he determined to kill and sell as turkey, despite the fact that it was known to be about forty years of age. He killed the bird of freedom, sold it for a turkey, and was arrested by the irate purchaser, who had cooked and vainly tried to eat the national bird.

A learned professor of the Paris Academy des Sciences has been making experiments which have resulted in convincing him that the rabbit is of all living things the most capable of withstanding a very low temperature. Inclosed all night in a block of ice, a rabbit was found next day getting on very comfortably and evidently not aware of anything very peculiar in his circumstances. In this regard the rabbit leaves far behind our faithful friend the dog, though, according to the learned professor, sheep, goats and pigs take good second, third and fourth places.

The Fort Sheridan Indians are going to Europe with Buffalo Bill to grace his Wild West show. It is believed that a year under the gallant colonel's tutelage will remove all thought of rebellion from the Indians' minds. Certainly by studying the circus method for a twelvemonth they ought to be convinced that there are far easier and surer ways of doing the pale-face than going to war with him. There may be divine retribution working in this. Possibly Col. Cody is training up a generation of savage showmen that will one day combine and regain a goodly share of tho fair possessions of which the white men have deprived them.

A special meeting of the Stillwater council was held for the purpose of increasing auctioneers' licenses from $100 to $500. This is in view of the fact that every spring, when the men come down out of the woods, the town is flooded with fakirs who auction off bogus jewelry.

The Duluth Herald company, publishers of the Evening Herald, have made an assignment to D. H. Stevenson. The paper owes between $20,000 and $30,000, of which $14,000 is secured by mortgage on the plant to Miron Bunnell, the former proprietor. The plant and Associated Press franchise are to be sold under this mortgage.

There is trouble between the St. Cloud contractors and their stonemasons and bricklayers. The men recently organized and now demand 42 cents per hour and nine hours' work for the bricklayers and 35 cents and nine hours for the masons. This the contractors say they cannot grant at the rates they have taken contracts, and a general strike is imminent.

The funeral of William C. Jackson took place at Mankato. Mr. Jackson was the first white child born in Minnesota. He was forty-three years of age, born in St. Paul and moved to Mankato in 1856 and has ever since been a resident of this city. He died from consumption, from which he has been a sufferer for about a year. He was unmarried.

Mrs. McCarthy was arrested at Little Falls for abuse of her ten-year-old stepdaughter and fined $25 and costs, and, in default of payment, was committed to the county jail. Mr. Lucia, a witness, was badgered by Attorney Smith, of the defense, and knocked down the legal light with a left-hander. He was arrested and fined $5, which was paid by contributions from citizens.

Fred Pamperin, the candidate who got left in drawing lots on a tie for alderman in the First ward at Rochester with La Du, his Republican, opponent, had himsel sworn in as alderman, and will commence legal proceedings to contest La Du's right to the seat in the council. His grounds for action are the returns show one more vote for alderman than were cast, and he claims La Du got the benefit of the extra vote.

Sheriff Whitman came to Lake Benton, with Sam Pumpelly, a young man charged with abetting illegal voting at the recent village election. The contest for and against license was hot and the result very uncertain. License carried by two majority. Some illegal votes were cast, one of these by a boy nineteen years old, who, it is charged, was made drunk and induced to vote by Pumpelly. A warrant was sworn out before Justice A. C. Cox and the young man arrested at Tyler.

B. Stevens has been apppointed postmaster at Wheatland, Cass county.

A public reception was given at the opera house at Dickinson, in honor of Senator A. C. McGillwray and Representative J. A. Farrah.

Mizie Iurnich, an Austrian, aged 30, was adjudged insane by the county judge at Devils Lake and taken to Jamestown by the sheriff. His mania was that it was his duty to make all men Catholics. He was neglecting his stock and starving himself.

A fire occurred at Oakes on South Second street. McCarthy Bros.' stock of dry goods, valued at $3,000, consumed, insured for $2,000. The citizens, by great efforts, saved the adjoining buildings, although Berg's furniture store was severely scorched.

State Treasurer Booker sold $106.000 4 per cent 30 year bonds of North Dakota, at a premium of $6,169. The purchaser is the Fidelity trust company of Kansas city, and it is supposed that the investment is made for John I. Blair & Co., of New York. There were various other New York and Western bidders, all offering a premium. The sale is a satisfactory one to the state authorities.

An adjourned term of the district court was held at Fargo. There was considerable business to come before the court at this term of a civil nature, besides a number of criminal cases. Among these are the Remington, charged with the murder of J. T. Flett, at Arthur, S, D., Gelhart and Perchart, shooting scrape at Casselton; a larceny case from Mapleton and an embezzlement case from Grandin.

Rev. J. N. Fradenburgh, A. M., P. H. D., was elected president of the new Methodist Episcopal university at Wahpeton. He is well known for pulpit work throughout the state of Pennsylvania, a member of the American onental society, the society of Biblical archaeology, of London, and associate of Victoria institute of philosophical society of Great Britain. He is the author of five well-known books, "witnesses From the Bible Illustrated From the Monuments," 1885; "Beauty Crowned, or the Story of Easter," 1887; "Living Religious," 1888; "The Hitteles of the Bible," 1889; "Fire From Strange Altars," 1891.

E. G. Simpson, of Watertown, a young man about twenty years of age, went violently insane and had to be bound to prevent him doing violence to himself. No cause is known.

The county commissioners met at Mitchell and decided to furnish the farmers with seed wheat, the same to be paid for next fall. Though the needs of this kind are comparatively small as it is thought the plan will be the means of increasing the acreage some.

It is said that the new land laws allow persons who have filed timber culture entries to prove up at the end of four years by paying $1.25 per acre. It is necessary also to live upon a prememption for fourteen months before being able to make the final proofs.

Many of the druggists throughout the state are ignoring the clause in the prohibition law requiring that they on the first of each month, or within ten days thereafter, shall return the book of affidavits, as obtained from the county auditor's office, to the county court.

Government surveyors on reservation lands are preparing to complete the work in the spring. In an interview a leading surveyor, F. W. Pettigrew of Fort Pierre, says that all the land surveys will be completed June 1. This will be a great benefit as a large share of the settlers on the reservation are unable to locate lands.

The Commercial club of Yankton has decided to make an effort to unite all the principal cities of South Dakota in a project to have South Dakota represented at the world's fair in Chicago in 1893. The last legislature voted to make an appropriation to provide for a state exhibition at the fair.

John W. Troy, a prominent citizen of Pierre, started from Bismarck to Pierre over three weeks ago, hoping to reach Pierre the first of March. When at Brainerd, Minn., on the 5th, he telegraphed his wife that he was coming direct to Pierre. Nothing has been heard of him since, and foul play is feared. His wife and three children are at Pierre.

At a meeting of citizens of Warner resolutions were passed authorizing an injunction to be served upon the county commissioners prevent them from insuring $175,000 worth of warrants for the purchase of seed wheat. Other townships in the southern portion of the county have signified their willingness to fight the county commissioners on this point. The injunction will be served to-morrow.

They have disposed of stocks on hand and sugars ordered will be shipped in bond. Dubuque being a port of entry, the sugars received will be held until midnight, March 31, when the cars will be unsealed by the surveyor of customs and be shipped at once to their customers in the country,

THE OPERATOR BLUNDERED.

Predicament of a Wife Who Helped a Bridegroom.

The eager desire of a young married man to find a suitable suite of apartments, coupled with the mischievous perversity of a telegraph operator caused consternation and anxiety in a peaceful household, not long since. The mistress of the peaceful household, being an old schoolmate and friend of the married man, had kindly undertaken to aid him in finding him a flat, he being a partial stranger in the city. After one forenoon's fruitless search the two friends parted with the understanding that as soon as the young man could find it convenient to make another trip the lady would willingly accompany him. A few evenings afterward the gentleman sent a telegraphic dis-dispatch to his old schoolmate worded as follows; "Will come up and worry you again to-morrow." The sender expected that the dispatch would be delivered about breakfast time. Instead of that, however, the peaceful family was aroused a 4 o'clock A. M., and imagine the feelings of the shivering husband when he opened a dispatch addressed to his wife and read: "Will come up and marry you to-morrow afternoon, Tom." Of course subsequent explanations straightened things out.—New York Times.

The Dog Got There.

It is well known that most animals, quadrupeds, are natural swimmers, but I know of an exception which is as well authenticated as it is peculiar. A gentleman of our neighborhood had a foxhound which was mortally afraid of deep water and could swim but a few strokes. His head would invariably go down and his hind quarters up, when he would have to be rescued. A friend who well knew the dogs' failing, made a bet with the owner that the unfortunate beast could not swim across a good-sized stream which they had to cross. When the stake was put up the proprietor of the phenomenon calmly attached a good-size stone to the canine's tail, and with equalibrium thus restored in this novel manner he successfully swam the stream with head and shoulders triumphantly poised, winning the wager for his ingenious master.—Forest and Stream.

Mapping the World.

Almost the whole of Europe has been covered by exact surveys. Even in the Balkan states, where the easy-going and unscientific Turk has done almost nothing to map the country that was long under his control, the work has been done for him by the enterprise of the Russians, Austrians and Germans, who naturally have taken a very great interest in mapping this mountainous and debatable quarter of Europe. The first country on the continent to undertake minute surveys was France, in 1750, and the work has steadily progressed in various countries until almost the whole of Europe has been mapped in beautiful and elaborate detail. We find, however, that in a large part of Scandinavia, Spain and eastern Russia map-makers have not yet the advantage of detailed surveys.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

A WARRIOR GONE.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the Great Confederate General, Dies at Washington.

His Death the Result of a Cold Caught Soon After Attending Gen. Sherman's Funeral.

WASHINGTON, March 21.—Gen. Joseph E. Johnston died to-night at his residence on Connecticut avenue.

The general had been suffering for the past three weeks with an affection of the heart, aggravated by a cold he caught soon after attending Gen. Sherman's funeral in New York. His physician has been trying to keep his strength up for some days, but his advanced age has given little hope for his recovery from the beginning of his illness.

At times for about two years Gen. Johnston has shown unmistakable signs of a general breaking down. His mind often became bewildered so that he could not tell where he was or how he came there.

About 6 o'clock this evening Dr. Lincoln found him perfectly comfortable, and apparently a little better. While his friends and attendants knew that he might pass away at any time, yet they had no warning that

THE END WAS SO NEAR.

Gov. McLane entered the room at a little after 11 o'clock, and as he approached the general's bedside he heard an almost inaudible sigh, and the general was dead.

Gen. Johnston's nearest living relative is a sister, Mrs. Mitchell, who lives in this city. The funeral services will be held in this city, although the day has not yet been fixed upon. The interment will be made in Greenmount cemetery in Baltimore.

Gen. Johnston was the last, save Gen. Beauregard, of the six full generals of the Confederacy. After the war he became successively president of a railroad company in Arkansas, of an express company in Virginia and an insurance agent in Georgia. He was elected to congress from the Richmond district in 1877 and next saw public life as commissioner of railroads, which office he held under President Cleveland's administration. He had lived in this city since he lost his office under the present administration.

Gen. Johnston was a man of slender build, of not more than medium height, and with a kindly, pleasant face. He was unobtrusive in manner, and invariably courteous to all persons with whom he was brought in contact.

BIOGRAPHICAL.

Sketch of Gen. Johnston's Life and His Service in the Confederate Army.

Joseph E. Johnston was born in Prince Edward county, Va., in February, 1807. He received a military education, graduating from West Point in 1829, served with distinction through the Seminole war in Florida and the war with Mexico in 1846-7, where he rose to the rank of captain.

In the early part of the year 1861 he was made quartermaster general, with the rank of brigadier general, but resigned his commission in April, 1861, to enter the rebel army as major general, taking immediate command of the rebel troops concentrated about Harper's Ferry. It was wiley Joe Johnston that amused Patterson during the months of June and July, closely eluding Pennsylvania's supposed great general, and by a brilliant rapid maneuver effecting a movement with his subordinate, Gen. Beauregard, in time to prevent the defeat of that general by crushing McDowell and gaining for the rebels the first great battle of the war—Bull Run. After effecting the junction with Beauregard at Bull Run, Johnston waived his rank, giving the glory to his subordinate. Johnston continued chief in command of the rebel armies in Northern Virginia until May 31, 1862, when he was severely wounded at the battle of Fair Oaks.

During his incapacity for duty, Gen. Lee was given command of the rebel armies about Richmond, and on reporting for duty in January, 1863, Johnston was assigned to the command of rebel armies in Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee, and on May 13, 1863, Grant, on his campaign in the rear of Vicksburg, found Johnston at Jackson, where he whipped him on the 14th with a single army corps and cut him off from co-operating with Pemberton. During the siege of Vicksburg Johnston continued to threaten the rear of the besiegers, but was carefully watched by Sherman, who, on the surrender of Pemberton, attacked Johnston at Jackson, but the wiley general eluded capture and escaped across Pearl river. In December, 1863, Johnston relieved Gen. Bragg, whom Grant had routed at Chattanooga, and found himself

CONFRONTING GEN. SHERMAN.

In the battles of Dalton, Resaca, Altoona Pass and Kenesaw Mountain, when Johnston was driven and forced to fall back by Sherman, he was never caught napping, and although forced across two deep rivers in his retreat his movements were masterly and executed with small loss of material and men. Gen. Johnston was never popular with Jeff Danis, who had superseded him at Richmond with Lee, and had at various times shown his dislike by unfriendly criticisms, and on July 18, 1864, took advantage of Johnston's reverses in the Atlantic campaign to summarily relieve him, placing Hood in command. The change of rebel commanders, it is safe to say, was in no wise detrimental to the Union cause.

This suspension of Johnston from command continued until in February, 1865, when Davis, seeing Hood slaughtered by Thomas in Tennessee, Early annihilated by Sheridan in the Shenandoah valley, and Lee hemmed in by Grant at Petersburg, with Sherman marching through the Carolinas to join Grant, yielded to the pressure and called Johnston to the command of the scattered commands in Georgia and the Carolinas. Gathering an effective army of some 35,000 men, Johnston gave battle to Sherman at Bentonville, N. C., only to be beaten and driven back to Chapel Hill, where, on April 26, he surrendered himself and army, being given the same terms granted to Lee at Appomattox.

When the ruins of the Confederacy were crumbling, and Davis and his cabinet were seeking safety in flight, Johnston had an opportunity of striking back at his old-time enemy, Jeff Davis, who, to cover his retreat, and that of his immediate frinds, ordered Johnston to make certain disposition of his troops, but Johnston quietly ignored the orders of the fugitive president, and proceeded with the surrender of his army.

Sherman, in his memoirs, tacitly admitted Johnston to be the ablest general who confronted him during the war, and while Lee at the North was popularly supposed to be the ablest of Southern generals, the Confederate soldiers point to Joseph E. Johnston.

GEN. JOHNSTON'S FUNERAL.

Tuesday the Day—The Pall Bearers—Messages of Condolence.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—The funeral of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston will be held at St. John's Episcopal church in this city Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, the rector, Dr. Douglass, conducting the ceremonies, after which the body will be removed to Baltimore for interment at the Greenmount cemetery the same day.

Only the simple burial service for the dead will be read at the grave. All the ceremonies will be simple and devoid of display, this being the expressed wish of the dead man and his relatives. The honorary pall bearers will be Senator John T. Morgan of Alabama, Senator John W. Daniel of Virginia, Hon. J. L. M. Curry, Gen. John G. Parker, U. S. A.; Gen. Charles W. Field, Gen. Harry Heth, Rear Admiral C. R. P. Rodgers, Rear Admiral W. G. Temple, Gen. H. G. Wright, Gen. Benjamin W. Bryce, Col. Archer Anderson of Baltimore, Col. Edwin G. Harris, Hon. J. C. Bancroft Davis, and Pay Director James Watmaugh, of the navy. The active pall bearers will be taken from members of the ex-Confederate association of this city.

There were a great many callers to-day at the residence of the late general, including Generals Schofield and Rosecrans and Admiral Rodgers. A large number of telegrams of condolence were received. P. T. Sherman, on behalf of the family of the late Gen. Sherman sent the following from New York: "The family of Gen. Sherman desire to tender to the relatives of Gen. Johnston assurances of their profound sorrow and sympathy."

Bishop C. T. Quintard, of the Episcopal church in Tennessee, an old comrade and friend of Gen. Johnston, from Memphis telegraphed: "Assure the immediate relatives of Gen. Johnston of my profound sympathy. He was one of my dearest friends. A prince among men has fallen."

The following dispatch is from St. Louis from a number of Gen. Johnston's old comrades in arms: "The death of Gen. Johnston causes extreme sorrow to his late comrades and many admirers here, and they beg to tender sincere and heartfelt sympathy."

A DUCAL TYRANT.

A Grand Daughter of Queen Victoria Becomes a Victim of Matrimonial Wretchedness.

LONDON, March 24.—Deep indignation is expressed among all classes of Englishmen in regard to the reports current as to the treatment of the Grand Duchess Elizabeth, granddaughter of Queen Victoria, by her husband, the Grand Duke Sergius of Russia, brother of the czar.

It is now well understood that the czar's motive for appointing his brother to be governor of Moscow was not, as officially stated, to give him a mark of esteem, but to remove the grand duchess from the foreign society of St. Petersburg, where her maltreatment by the imperial family has already caused an international scandal.

The reports as to the abuse to which the lady has been subjected are not mere gossip, but come from high and trustworthy sources, and nobody in England has any doubt of their truth. The grand duke is said to be really attached to his wife, but he treats her on the same principle that Russia treats a conquered province or state. Having annexed her by marriage, he has claimed that she must become Russian altogether, even to the abandonment of the religion in which she was born and educated. With this view coercion, characterized as brutal, has been tried upon her. When she desired to attend English services she found no carriage to take her, and the grand duke on such occasions has shown a displeasure in ways that a Russian or Tartar, whether high or low, very well understands. There is no allegation openly made of physical violence, but rumors to that effect are current.

The young princess, now but twenty-seven years old and only twenty when she was married, appealed for a divorce to her father, the grand duke Louis of Hesse, and to her grandmother, Queen Victoria. The queen, dreading scandal, appears to have advised her to comply with her husband's wishes as to religion. Officially, the queen was simply stated to have sent her blessing to her granddaughter, about to be converted to the Russian church. The grand duke Louis, however, took a different view of matters. He was indignant, and openly protested against his daughter being coerced as to her religious profession, and wanted to bring her home. Then ensued a correspondence between the father and the grandmother, the former urging the latter deprecating interference; but before anything could be done, the Russian imperial family, apprehensive of the disgrace that would attach to them should the grand duchess leave her husband, made the official announcement of her conversion, and then speedily followed the decree appointing Sergius governor of Moscow and removing him and his wife to that interior Russian city, far from the glimpses of England and Germany that may occasionally be caught at St. Petersburg.

It is not at all certain that the end is yet. The Grand Duke Louis is thoroughly aroused. It is he who has through the Times and other newspapers appealed from Queen Victoria to the English people in behalf of his daughter, and whatever the result may be he has certainly succeeded in exciting a strong public sentiment.

IT'S MANSLAUGHTER.

Young Hundley, the Huron Parricide Convicted of Manslaughter in the First Degree.

HURON, S. D., Special Telegram, March 24.—This morning the jury in the Hundley murder case returned a verdict of manslaughter in the first degree against Fred Hundley, who killed his father, Hon. Zack T. Hundley, here last June. The verdict is generally approved. The minimum penalty is four years in the penitentiary. It is thought that the sentence will not exceed eight years.

Fred is seventeen years old. He and his father got into trouble while putting down a carpet. At the time of his death Mr. Hundley was editor of the Herald Democrat, the leading Democratic paper of the state, chairman of the Democratic state committee and a leader of his party. His death created a great sensation.

A MURDERER ENTRAPPED.

A Rich Man's Son a Burglar as Well as a Murderer.

PITTSBURG, Pa., March 24.—The burglar Fitzsimmons, or Andrews, as he is better known, with a dozen other aliases, who killed Chief Detective Gilkinson and badly wounded two others last night at Peters' Run, was captured in Braddock, near here, at 9 o'clock to-night. It was shrewdly suspected that he would visit a house at Fourth and Ann streets, occupied by a Mrs. Clark. At 9 o'clock the patient watchers saw the rear door open, and in a moment Andrews was cornered in an out house. His painful wound, coupled with four revolvers staring him in the face, soon cowed the murderer, and he is now in jail with all the inmates of the house. A satchel full of jewelry has been found near Andrews' house, and on his person was a large amount of money.

A satchel found near the scene of last night's murder contained a lot of valuable jewelry stolen at Homestead. A copy of the will of Robert Fitzsimmons, dated at Brockville, Ont., Dec. 10, 1890, was also found in the valise. The will shows that the murderer's father was a wealthy man, having about $40,000 in money to divide among his heirs, besides a large amount of real estate. The murderer is named in the will as Frederick Carrolton Fitzsimmons, and is bequeathed $6,000 in money and a good share of real estate.

FOUGHT HARD.

Outlaws on the Chickasaw Reservation Overcome by Officers.

ARKANSAS CITY, Kan., March 28.—A party of Chickasaw reservation marshals had a desperate fight with outlaws yesterday.

The outlaws were cornered in a house and opened fire on the approaching officers. The fire was returned with fatal effect, killing Alexander Davis, one of the pursued. Two others, Bill Poe and John Chesler, were captured after a desperate resistance. The marshal also lost one of the party, Rev. Perkins, a preacher, who accompanied them, being shot and killed by the outlaws. The prisoners were brought in safely and lodged in jail.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Monday, March, 16.

SENATE.

Senator Davis offered a bill allowing the directors o the state agricultural society to lease any portion of the state fair grounds for a period not to exceed twenty years, for stock exhibitions, trotting or running meetings, etc. Senator Smith sent up three bills, one authorizing the publication of 3,000 copies of the report of the bureau of statistics, another regulating the business of foreign fire, life and casualty insurance companies in this state, and the third regulating the filing of articles of incorporation.

The two local bills, one reducing the membership of the St. Paul board of public works from four to three, and reducing the salary of each to $2,500, and the other abolishing the present board of education and establishing a new board of seven members to be appointed by the mayor, were reported back avorably from Senators Lieuau and Sanborn, of the Ramsey delegation, and passed under suspension of the rules.

The usury bill was passed by a vote of 33 to 16.

HOUSE.

H. F. 614, a bill to amend the general statutes of 1878, relating to money, bonds, bills and notes, which is a substitute bill for H. F. 437, was defeated.

Some slight opposition was manifested to the passage of H. F. 409 and 411, but Mr. Tucker took up the cudgels for the bills, and in a forcible speech overcame it, and the bills passed.

Before adjourning Mr. R. A. Walsh moved that the house adjourn until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning to enable the Hibernian members to properly celebrate St. Patrick's day, and as a token of respect to the memory of Ireland's patron saint. But the house would have none of it, and decided to meet this morning as usual.

Tuesday March. 17.

SENATE.

The first business that came before the senate yesterday morning was a motion made by Gen. Sanborn, to the effect that in accordance with an adopted joint resolution, the senate adjourn to the house to listen to addresses by the Hon. Benjamin Butterworth and Moses P. Handy, relative to an appropriation for the purpose of having Minnesota represented at the Chicago world's fair in 1893. The house, however, was not quite ready to receive the senators, and several petitions against the extension of the Minneapolis saloon patrol limits and the passage of the employers' liability bill were received before the motion of Gen. Sanborn was put into effect.

Mr. Leavitt presented a resolution, just before the senate took its noon recess, calling for the appointment of a joint committee, two on on the part of the senate and three on the part of the house, to investigate the advisability of having the legislature print the general laws of the present session, and then have the same sent to the various newspapers of the state for distribution. Senator Day gave notice of debate, after which a recess until 3 o'clock was taken.

HOUSE.

The bill introduced by Mr. Gildea regulates the manner in which mutual insurance companies shall be organized and does so at considerable length

Mr. Penney introduced a number of bills, three of which deal with the question of liquor licenses, the last one, H. F. 870, being intended to make an important change in the law, by declaring licenses saleable, or capable of being assigned like any other property.

Wednesday, March. 18.

SENATE

The senate, after passing a number o bills, resolved itself into committee of the whole, with Senator Allen in the chair, remaining in committee until the noon recess.

Mr. Stockwell's bill prohibiting foreign detectives from making arrests in this state was referred to Senators Davis, Tawney and Eaton for amendments.

Returning to the senate files on general orders, Senator March's bill regulating grain warehouses was taken up, Senator Hompe at once opposing it on the ground that it gave the present chief inspector the entire control of the wheat of the Northwest. After Senator March spoke in reply, on motion of Senator Geissel the committee decided to report progress.

S. F. 613, introduced by Senator Mayo, and seeking to prohibit the sale of mileage at a discount by railroads, was opposed by Senator Dean in an effective and polished argument, and on his motion indefinitely postponed by a vote of 18 to 11.

The committee then arose and made its report, after which the senate adjourned.

HOUSE.

Speaker Champlin, looking somewhat pale and reduced by his week's sickness, resumed his seat and called the house of representatives to order yesterday morning. Mr. Furlong, who has acted during the speaker's absence, and presided over the deliberations of the house in an exceedingly able manner, resumed his seat as a private member.

The majority of the bills introduced were of a local character or making unimportant amendments to the present laws. Mr. McAllister introduced a bill, H. F. 874, which is intended to relieve certain corporations from paying taxes upon their capital stock, for which the existing law provides.

Thursday, March. 19.

SENATE.

Senator Crandall created a flutter of excitement in the senate chamber yesterday morning when he introduced a resolution —the second one of the kind that he has presented this session—instructing the judiciary committee to prepare a bill for the redistricting of the state into new judicial districts, consolidating as many of the same as possible and reducing the number of judges to a number deemed advisable and report the bill to the senate inside of a week. Senator Hale gave notice of debate, but was induced to withdraw the same, after which Senator Crandall stated that no attorney in either house dared to present a measure seeking to consolidate the districts on the ground that they would incur the displeasure of the judges. He pointed out the fact, and called it notorious that Minnesota had more judges on her pay roll than the whole English government. He concluded by moving the adoption of his resolution, which was done by a unanimous vote.

After several petitions were presented the introduction of bills was taken up, and among the twenty or more offered was one by Senator Probstfield seeking to take the management and control of the agricultural college out of the hands of the regents of the university. The bill provides that the governor shall appoint an "agricultural college board" to consist of thirteen members, of which the governor shall be a member ex officio, which is to have entire control of the school of agriculture. It also provides that the departments of military tactics and mechanical arts now attached to the university shall be attached to the agricultural college.

HOUSE.

A message from the governor informed the house that the two bills, one abolishing the office of fire warden in St. Paul and the other authorizing the transfer of the St. Paul postoffice site to the United States government, had been signed.

The temperance committee reported back the bill regulating license fees, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, and the committee on agriculture made an adverse report on the bill regulating the practice of veterinary surgeons.

The house adjourned at noon until 10 o'clock this morning to enable the members to visit Stillwater penitentiary and inspect the new binding twine plant placed in the institution.

Friday March. 20.

SENATE.

A resolution by Senator Sanborn providing for the payment for file covers for the senate went over on notice of debate.

Senator Sanborn presented another resolution providing that the legislature should adjourn at noon of Friday, April 17. Senator Morse gave notice of debate.

The regular order was then suspended, at request of Senator March, and the Minneapolis charter was taken up.

Senator Donnelly opposed submission, and Senator Bell also spoke against it. The vote was then taken, the question being upon the minority report of the committee providing for the submission of the charter to a popular vote. The motion to adopt this report was defeated by a vote of 14 to 27.

HOUSE.

Mr. Gallagher, chairman of the committee on elections, submitted a resolution to reimburse the contestants in the election cases in the house for their expenses.

On the motion of Mr. Currier of Blue Earth the house decided to meet for the future at 9:30 every morning of the session.

Mr. McGuire moved for the appointment of a committee of five to investigate the agricultural college and its relations to the state university. His motion was adopted.

On the motion of Mr. Stone, who drew attention to the fact that this was the last day for the introduction of appropriation bills, the time was extended twenty-four hours.

Mr. Ringwald introduced a bill amending the law relating to weights and measures, the inspection of scales, etc.

Mr. Furlong introduced a bill amending the wolf bounty law, providing that the bounty shall be $5 for male wolves over three months old, $7 for females over three months old, and for wolves under that age $3. The person claiming the bounty shall exhibit the carcass to the chairman of the board of supervisors of the county wherein the wolf is killed.

Mr. McGrath introduced a bill to repeal chapter 54 of the General Laws of 1881 relating to mining and taxation of mining property and products. The bill provides that after the passage of this act all mines, mining property and products shall be taxed and assessed as provided by the General Laws of 1878, chapter 1.

Mr. J. R. Nelson's bill to regulate the length of the biennial sessions of the state legislature makes the length of the session "ninety calendar days" instead of "ninety legislative days" as at present, thus cutting down the length of the session by about ten days.

Mr. McAllister's bill to license plumbers was recommended to pass with some slight amendments.

The house then adjourned until 9:30 this morning.

Saturday, March 21.

SENATE.

Senator Tawney sent up a bill seeking to appropriate $350 for the purpose of purchasing overcoats for the regular members of the three militia companies of the state.

Senator Donnelly offered a bill fixing the minimum age of children employed in factories at thirteen years, and Senator Probstfield offered one making the fact of an accident caused by railroads prima facie evidence that such accident happened.

The passing of local bills was taken up, among those passed being Mr. Ames' house file repealing the law creating the office of the St. Paul fire warden, and the house file known as the Bell charter for the city of St. Paul. There was no trouble in regard to passing the latter, the Ramsey senators being unanimous for it. The bill received forty votes, and now only needs the governor's signature to become a law.

At 1:30 o'clock the senate adjourned until 3 o'clock Monday in order to allow the committee on ventilation to improve the chamber ventilation through its engineer.

HOUSE.

Several petitions were received favoring the bill to tax railroad property and the Currier bill, or a reasonable substitute therefor.

Mr. Price made a motion providing that in future all bills in general orders upon which progress is reported go to the foot of the list. This created some discussion, Messrs. Diment and Stevens opposing it and Mr. R. A. Walsh favoring the motion. After some talk the motion went over on notice of debate.

Mr. Keyes reported that the judiciary committee after investigation as requested by the house as to the duration of the session and the last day for the introduction of bills, had decided that the house would have to adjourn at 12 o'clock noon on April 20, and that Friday, March 27, would be the last day on which bills could be introduced.

The introduction of new bills occupied the greater part of the morning session, and again the list contained many bills of more than ordinary importance. Among the number were several of the regular appropriation bills, a synopsis of which is given.

House file 962 was introduced by Mr. T. Cole, chairman of the committee on insane, and is the general appropriation bill for the current expenses of the three insane hospitals of this state, located at St. Peter, Rochester and Fergus Falls. The bill provides for the following appropriations.

Mr. Stone of Ramsey county introduced an important bill, which is intended to secure the erection of a new capitol building, and providing for an appropriation, therefore.

Senator George.

Frank G. Carpenter in the Chicago Herald: Big-brained George is a very good fellow. He is a man of considerable brains and he is a great constitutional lawyer. It is not true that his trousers are cut with a circular saw, and his coats are really made in Washington instead of at home. His pantaloons are undoubtedly slightly baggy and the remark of Senator Vance as to them is not altogether out of the way. Vance says that he never takes a rear view of his old friend George without thinking about what one of his colored constituents said about an elephant. This old uncle had been to a circus and Senator Vance, upon his return, was asking him about the animals. He had his own opinion about them all, and at last asked the senator: "How about the elephant, Uncle Ned? Did you see the elephant?"

"Yes," replied the old uncle, "I doneseed the elepnant."

"And what kind of an elephant was it, Uncle Ned?"

"Wal, I never seed an elephant afore, but I 'low this was a mighty smart elephant, only it 'peared to me that he sutinly had a heap of slack leather in his pants."

And so it is in Senator George's clothes. There seems to be a lot of slack cloth in them, and his dress and his manner would never tell you that he had been a soldier in the Mexican war under Jefferson Davis and a brigadier general during the late unpleasantness; that he had been chief justice in the supreme court of Mississippi; that he had published some of the best law books in Georgia, and that he was now serving his second term with credit in the United States senate.

POTENT NEW DRINKS.

Oyster Cocktails and Frapped Cafe Royal Introduced With Success.

Have you tried an oyster cocktail or a cafe royal frapped?

Up in the great white marble palace at the corner of Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street the two new drinks are all the rage. The young barkeeper of the Manhattan club, who dispenses drinks over the Mexican onyx bar in the basement of the club house, is responsible for the two innovations.

The oyster cocktail will revivify a corpse and stimulate the jaded taste of a man of leisure. As an off hand drink, however, it does not fall in the same class with other cocktails, inasmuch as alcoholic liquors do not enter into its composition.

It is made as follows: The juice of half a lemon is strained into a large goblet, to which is added a dash of tobacco sauce, a teaspoonful of pepper sauce, a trace of vinegar, a pinch of salt, a suggestion of red pepper and a slightly larger quantity of white pepper. This entire array forms but the seasoning for the liquor of half a dozen freshly opened, succulent Blue Point oysters, which is next added to the contents of the glass, and completes the cocktail.

The idea of the newly devised drink is to combine the preliminary cocktail and the first course of a dinner. With this end in view half a dozen oysters are submerged in the liquid and allowed to stand for a brief period, after which they are drawn forth singly with an oyster fork and eaten.

The balance of the liquor that remains in the glass serves the purpose of washing down the the repast. It is a hot but very stimulating drink. The other courses of the dinner follow.

Upon completing a dinner thus begun the other novelty, frapped cafe royal, is in order. It consists of three-fourths of black coffee and one-fourth brandy, frapped in a cooler, and drunk while the mixture is yet in a semi-frozen state. It is very potent.

After a dinner begun with an oyster cocktail and polished with a cafe royal frapped, a man of sixty is fit to run a foot race with a boy of 16 from the corner of Fifth avenue and Thirty-fourth street to Central park and return.—New York Herald.

A PRETTY ROMANCE.

How a Plucky San Francisco Girl Became an Artist.

People who noticed in the Examiner window recently a splendid cast of the head of Sitting Bull will be interested to hear the pretty romance of the young artist whose work it was. It was modeled by Miss Alice Rideout, a young lady of less than 18 years of age, who has already shown such talent that she bids fair to take the front rank among the best of artists that the Pacafic slope can claim as its own.

Her first start in her chosen profession can be directly traced to a large English mastiff owned by her family, although her artistic aspirations date back to her early childhood. One day while accompanied by the mastiff she passed the open door of a sculpture's studio. The animal rushed in and, with apparent deliberation, knocked over the pedestal upon which was placed for exhibition the artist's latest work.

An arm and leg were shattered, and the piece lay a seeming wreck on the floor. The attendant was wild. The girl endeavored to make excuses for the dog, but nothing would answer. Offers were made to pay for the damage, but to no avail. The man, dreading that upon the artist's return he would lose his position was inconsolable. The girl begged to be allowed to repair the piece, and after repeated entreaties the man consented, with the remark that while he did not believe it could be fixed, he was very certain she could not injure it.

He mixed the clay for her and watched with interest the unpracticed fingers doing the work that the accomplished artist had so lately finished and taken so much pride in. An hour passed with most gratifying results; the arm was restored and was perfect; the attendant was happy. Another hour the leg approached completion, when lo, the artist appeared on the scene. He took in the situation at a glance, and, unnoticed by the occupants of the room, watched the work.

Finished, explanations are in order and given. The artist is charmed, declares the work of restoration had added new charms to the piece, and having heard from the girl the great ambition of her life, went with her to her home and insisted that her parents should allow her an opportunity to learn the art for which she had evidently so much inherent talent.—San Francisco Examiner.

A Famous Account.

Here is a bill that was presented for work done when the capitol was in Milledgeville, says the Atlanta Constitution. For many years the original paper was preserved in the executive department, and to this day it is a traditional joke at the capitol:

"The state of Georgy, to e J. M. Harper.

"To two wooden buckits, $2,
"One wood do $1.
"One wooden do $1.
"Balance due $1. Pleas remit."

The account is correct.

Two buckets were sent at $1 each. One bracket "wood do"—was satisfactory.

The other "wooden do"—would it do, and credit for that was duly given, leaving a balance of $1 due.

Gov. Northen is a veteran school teacher, and rather prides himself on being "hard to stump" on catch problems.

But that account "stumped" him, and he had to acknowledge it after puzzling over it for some time.

He took a fancy to it too, and got off the joke on the next man that called.

PINNED TO A TABLE.

A Traveller Relates an Incident of Old Time Etiquette.

The custom has not yet entirely been abolished in some out-of-the-way hotels of electing some one guest at dinner to carve for the others at table.

Forty years ago the practice was the rule rather than a rarity. It was considered then in the light of a compliment, and not as an imposition, as it would most certainly be regarded today. At that time men prided themselves on their ability to dissect a joint or a fowl, and accepted the task of carving for twenty people most graciously.

A prominent hardware merchant in the city, who in early life traveled for the house of which he is now the senior member, bears testimony to the truth of the above stated condition of things, and relates one of his early experiences in connection with it as follows:

"I was travelling from Buffalo to Detroit by steamer, a favorite method of making that trip in the early days. At dinner time the captain asked a prominent brush manufacturer of Troy, N. Y., to carve for the passengers.

"The gentleman thanked the captain for the honor and proceeded to carve a wild turkey, which was by no means a rarity in the western part of the country 35 or 40 years ago.

"He carved exceedingly well, and was very just in the service of individual portions. He helped himself last, and placed on his plate the tidbit of the turkey, which morsel was at that time considered the carver's honorarium.

"As he was about to take his seat—men stood to carve wild turkeys then—a drunken and quarrelsome gambler, who had caused us great annoyance with his oaths and importunities to play ever since we had left Buffalo, reached over from his seat and said:—'Excuse me, sir, but you have on your plate a portion of the turkey of which I am very fond.'

"As he made the remark, the blackleg attempted to remove the tidbit with his fork. The Trojan had not yet surrendered the carving utensils. As the gambler's hand approached the morsel the carver made a sudden jab at it with the heavy fork. The prongs of the latter passed through the flesh and pinned the gambler's hand to the table.

"It was rather an unpleasant sight for a dinner table," continued the speaker. "We all expected that the injured man would resort to his dagger or pistol, but he did not. He slunk away to his stateroom, where the wound was dressed; nor did he venture among the other passengers during the remainder of the entire trip."

Did not the passengers consider the act excessively brutal?" the gentleman was asked by his auditor.

"Not in the slightest," was the reply. "On the contrary, everyone applauded him for his courage and quickness of action. It was justified by the rude surroundings and the ideas governing the table etiquette of the time and place."—N. Y. Herald.

A Fortune Paid For Board.

Sixty thousand dollars for board and lodging is pretty steep, but that's what Frank Parmelee, the omnibus man, has paid the Grand Pacific Hotel. Mr. Parmelee is the oldest boarder in the house. He was the Grand Pacific's first guest. He helped destroy the first meal placed on the table. He hasn't missed a meal in seventeen years, except when he was out of the city, for he has not been sick a day in all that time. He is certain to have his appetite with him at all times. Mr. Parmelee is a perpetual advertisement of the excellence of the Grand Pacific table. He is seventy-four years old, but he is as active and energetic as a boy. Perhaps the cuisine of the Grand Pacific is responsible for Mr. Parmelee's health and vigor, and perhaps the credit should be given to the wonderful digestive apparatus which he has concealed about his person. Mr. Parmelee eats two meals each day in the big dining-room and one meal in bed some time during the night. For fifty years Mr. Parmelee has never failed to awaken in the middle of the night and refresh himself with a square meal consisting of such wholesome food as lobster salad, cold sausage and mince pie. Because of his consistent diet Mr. Parmelee is of a happy and froliesome disposition.—Chicago Herald.

An Indian Brave's Joke.

Two young women were alone one day, when a young Indian brave whom they knew came to see the man of the house. The man was away, and the Indian sat down to wait for him. During this interval the girls being of a lively turn began asking him questions about his former mode of life; among other things they asked him to give a war-whoop and show them how he scalped people, but he gave no answer. Some time after, when they were talking of other subjects and had forgotten all about him, he sprang up suddenly, gave a war-whoop that made the house ring, then, snatching a big knife that lay on the table with one hand, he took the top-knot of one of the girls in the other, and ran the back of the knife around her scalp. They were each scalped in this manner and were nearly frightened out of their wits; but he sat down and began to laugh, and told them he had only done what they had asked him to do. They soon recovered from the shock and laughed heartily at the Indian's joke.—From a Yankton letter to the Springfield Republican.

THE NEWS.

Official Paper of the City.

Jas. Meehan, Jr. Editor and Prop.

It is more than probable everything will not be serene in the republican camp in '92. Already candidates bob up for the presidency. Senator Sherman is the last and it must be confessed a very strong candidate. It is intimated Blaine will not appear upon the scene he having withdrawn in favor of Harrison, but Blaine's astute cunning can only be comprehended by the American people when the time for action shall have come. Senator Sherman's chances are enhanced by the great love the people have for the family increased of late by the veneration justly due the warrior which swells the heart of every true American. All the big policitians statesmen in republican ranks who have aspirations for the presidency outside those mentioned have been cared for McKinley for governor does away with the Ohio Napoleon for the presidency. Blaine no doubt has more admirers to day among the people than any other republican, but the people of the United States have judging from late elections, been transformed from common voters led by a few into an independent class whose votes cannot be counted upon. No longer the party lash cracks over the backs of the plebians. Reform is what is wanted and while the republican party has done much to pilot along the craft of state for the past thirty years, their legislation was intended to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer. The great battle for party supremacy will be waged as in '88 upon the tariff issue. Reciprocity cannot soothe the highly irritated feeling of the people; this balm will not be from gilead but a compound of sophistry and political trickery—which cannot be inculcated into the people's minds to the end that it may work to the advantage of the Republican party. The battle cannot be made upon protection; it is very evident the masses are against it. The repubicans cannot go beyond reciprocity in the freetrade line. Hence we see nothing but defeat staring that grand old party full in the face. However some superhuman power may arise to reward it for past good intentions when the party was composed of leaders who worked for the good of the people. Political tricksters are fast disappearing from its ranks and when the ranks of the republican party are lead by honest men with true republican principals based upon the love and respect of people the chances for success will be enhanced. Than may still appear a sign in the skies to inspire the hosts to Congress.

Where, pray, is that county division scheme that "died a bornin'"—a few weeks ago.

The vaunted power of the alliance in the state legislature, has dwindled into insignificance. When the body of the alliance legislators followed Donnelly, with all his radicalism, it's power was felt. It is today a party without a leader, split from center to circumferance upon questions too broad for it's comprehension.

Aiding Monopoly

The alliance members who by their state platform are opposed to monoply and those of the democrats and republicans who have a spark of reform still lingering in their make up should unceremoniously kill the resolution introduced by Senator Leavitt asking bids for the printing of the general laws of this session. At first reading this resolution looks like retrenchment but the second looks reveals the foun of hideous monopoly felt only by the publishers of country papers.

Cheese it.

The proposition made by Alphouse Paradis to locate in a cheese factory in the village is something worthy the consideration of the people here and in the surrounding country. Mr. Paradis must receive sufficient encouragement or his efforts will be in vain. A cheese factory properly equipped and managed would furnish to our farmers a good market for their milk. The Lambert factory has been run to good advantage the past year under the management of Mr. Paradis. Why could he not work to better advantage here with R. R. facilities and a more settled country. It would be well to look to his proposition and if based upon business principles give him the aid necessary. Cheese is a great article; and in the words of Wisconsin's Governor it left long under the sun will produce life.

Proposals for Bids.

Sealed bids will be received by the undersigned until April the 13th, 1891, at 12 o'clock M. for doing the village printing of the Village of Red Lake Falls, Minnesota.

The Village Council reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Football's Advantages.

Football is not a contest of mere skill and strength; it is not the physical against the physical; it is intellect and will against will and intellect. The feelings are those of cavalry in a charge, or of the old time knight in a tourney.

What good player ever realized in a game that there is such a thing as flesh and blood? In practice you sometimes feel as if there is not anything else, but in a game one is conscious of no such substance. It is the spirit that goes through a game, the body doubtless sometimes attending.

Oh, you mothers, who are so careful of your darlings, why do you prepare them for a swimming match by keeping them away from the water? Send them out on the "scrub side" and let them learn life's lessons. They will derive many benefits, as well as pleasures, from the game. How much more it enables one to enjoy study!

"Nothing great was ever accomplished without enthusiasm," says Emerson in his "Self Reliance." In football the boy will learn that nothing even tolerable can be accomplished without it.

When you see an effeminate man you feel that if you could play opposite to him in the rush line you could give him a few ideas of solidity and manliness. You see a hot tempered man; you could bring his enemy under his control in a season. Indeed, the kicking, tackling and running are the insignificant things that you learn in football. What is important is the complete mastery of yourself that the game teaches you. The discipline makes all the personal spites, grudges and passion that a beginner experiences subject to the interests of his team and those whom he represents.—Harper's Young People.

Literary Need of the Hour.

There is "aching void," so to speak, in the literary market today, and that is creative minds. Give me a young man or woman—sex is neither a hinderance nor an advantage—who has, first and foremost, a correct idea of the literary tendencies of the times, and, secondly, a creative mind, and he or she need never write a line for print to insure a quick and large success—I mean financial success. The fact is that there never was a time when good literary ideas were so valuable and so scarce as at present. The cry of today with the modern magazine is for "features" and "ideas," and the person who can supply this need in a bright, original manner is the literary want of the hour.

Literary competition is sharp, very sharp in fact, and originality tells. The editor, the publisher, absorbed in his daily duties, has little chance for thought, and here is where the outsider can step in, and with profit. Editors and publishers are always ready to entertain a fresh idea, a striking novelty—of course always barring the sensational; they are seeking, in fact, for the man or woman of creative mind. Here is truly not only the literary need of the hour, but of the moment. The need is there; the question is, Where are the people to meet it?—Edward W. Bok's Letter.

A Deaf and Dumb Rooster.

A gentleman living on the outskirts of Buffalo, near Black Rock, owns a curiosity the like of which Barnum never dreamed of. It is a deaf and dumb rooster—a full grown, brilliantly plumed, brown Leghorn chanticleer—that has lost his voice, can neither crow nor cluck, nor make any other audible sound with his vocal apparatus, does not wake up the neighborhood at 5 o'clock in the morning with an everlasting cock-a-doodle-doo; does not give an alarm of hawks every time a black cloud crosses the sun, but is still as much the lord of the chicken park as ever.

He has not always been thus. Up to the time he was eight months old he was as noisy as any young rooster need be. Then he got his head caught in a barbed wire fence in such away as to mangle his neck and probably tear out the vocal chords. Losing the power to make sounds he evidently forgot how to hear them. At least now, at the age of 3 years, he gives no evidence of hearing. But he makes his eyes answer for ears and voice, too. If any one wanted proof that he was really deaf and dumb those eyes would be convincing.

There is nothing he does not see. When the first glow of sunrise appears he begins the duties of the day by rousing all the rest of the fowls in the hennery in his original way. He walks around to each one and kicks it off its perch. There is no resisting such an invitation to get up. It is much more effective than crowing. When he gets a challenge to fight he does not stop to announce what he can do. He goes and does it. And his battles are all victories.

The most remarkable thing about this intelligent bird, however, is the fact that, though deaf, he can distinguish between an admonition to "shoo" and a request to come to dinner. How he does it is a mystery, but it is believed that he tells by the motion of the lips and general attitude of the person who addresses him.

A course of instruction in a deaf and dumb institute is all the rooster needs to learn to talk with his spurs.—Buffalo Express.

Thoroughbred Horses in Battle.

"When I went to the war in 1861," said Senator Wade Hampton, "I took with me three thoroughbred stallions that were worth a prince's ransom. One was as black as night, one was a dark chestnut, and the other was a chestnut sorrel. You are perhaps aware that my father was not only a noted importer of running horses, but a famous breeder of the thoroughbred as well.

"I rode the black stallion at the first Bull Run battle, where I commanded the Hampton legion, comprised of infantry, cavalry and artillery. At the famous cavalry fight at Brandy station with Pleasonton in 1863 I rode the chestnut. He was a hard horse to control in a charge, and he nearly carried me into the enemy's lines on that day twice. I rode the chestnut sorrel at the great cavalry fight in the rear of Mead's army on the third day at Gettysburg, and came near meeting the same fate as that I escaped from at Brandy station a few weeks previous.

"My experience with thoroughbreds is in time of war that they are safer horses to get away from the enemy with than when you are going toward him, especially when on a gallop. But when it comes to endurance one thoroughbred will kill three cold blooded horses in a campaign. They will go further with less food, go faster, and show more courage in the face of danger. I have ridden the stallions I mention into federal batteries, and they never once flinched. All of them were wounded three or four times, but they pulled through."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

The Bacteriological institute, of Vienna, has been conducting experiments on dirt taken from finger nails, and seventy-eight examinations have been made. The process was to put the dirt in "cultivating mixtures," such as are used for supplying germs with food on which to develop. The crop that grew from the germs in the dirt was a varied one, and included thirty-six kinds of micrococci, eighteen of bacilli and many others.

C. P. DeMers the people's popular Poplar River representative did business in the city yesterday. His talk upon county matters was interesting. He says popular demand among the farmers should hasten the county division bill.

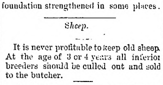
The apprehinsions of some people that Kretzschmar hall was unsafe led W. A. Schreiter to have it inspected. This done it was pronounced safe by the inspectors. A few precautions were taken and the foundation strengthened in some places.

Sheep.

It is never profitable to keep old sheep. At the age of 3 or 4 years all inferior breeders should be culled out and sold to the butcher.

By aiming to get the best mutton you will be certain to get the best wool, which will always sell, no matter what breed it belongs to.

Keep them free from parasites; a dip made of tobacco stems is good, so too are some of the patent preparations.



SCOTCH COLLIE.

A pair of toe clippers, such as are kept at all hardware stores, are a necessity for the farmer who keeps sheep, says The Northwestern Agriculturist. The feet grow too fast when kept on level ground and sod and must be cut back or lameness results. In its natural condition the sheep likes rough and rocky lands, where its feet are worn away by climbing among the stones, but when conditions are changed the feet must be cut back, and no implement is so good as these clippers which are also useful in trimming the hoofs of calves and colts. Sheep with overgrown hoofs never do well. In fact, no animal will do its best which is uncomfortable for any cause, and a sheep or a calf or a colt with overgrown hoofs is as uncomfortable as a boy with tight boots on at a Sunday school pic-nic.

No other animals can compare with sheep for enhancing the fertility of the land on which they are kept, and if for no other reason than this a small flock should be owned by every farmer. Then, in addition to this, fresh mutton of the best quality may be had at pleasure, which for farmers distant from towns is quite a treat.

It is claimed for the state of Missouri that she has three of the largest springs in the world. One in Dent county is so large that it was proposed to supply the whole city of St. Louis with its water by running an aqueduct from its neighborhood to the city reservoir.

The Hindoos are said to know a drug which has in Indian history often played the part of a state agent, and has been used to produce imbecility in persons of high rank whose mental integrity was considered dangerous to the despot in power.

Humor in a Beanery.

In one of those all night restaurants where the succulent fruit of the beanstalk is deftly served by muscular Ganymedes to a public with an equal muscular digestion humor of a grim, remorseless order occasionally asserts itself. It was the hour when the brawny cup bearers were busily engaged in bringing out the relays of heavy crockery to meet the rush of the midnight attack, with broad triangles of "hickory" pie or the round ring shot crullers. Above the roar of battle there suddenly rang out the clarion tones of a muscular servitor as he glanced about for a stray spoon. Seeing none at hand he turned to the steaming sanctuary at the rear, where the esculatory gods were at work, and in thunderous tones broke forth with, "Hey, Jimmie, bring out der silver ware!"—New York Times.

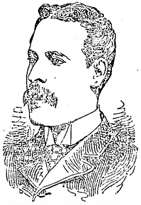
HE SHOOTS AWRY.

The Erratic Flight of Some of Cupid's Arrows.

THE RESULTS ARE SENSATIONAL.

There Was "a Woman in the Case" of the Notorious English Card Scandal—Remarkable Conduct of Florence Birch. Standing Bear's Austrian Bride.

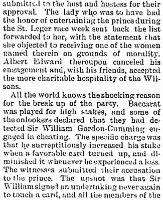
Love, it is said, makes the world go round. It will also make a man's head swim if he considers the possibilities of the passion when turned into the channels of jealousy, hatred or infatuation.



SIR WILLIAM GORDON-CUMMING.

If some reports are to be believed, Cupid, under the guise of Lothario, is responsible for the card scandal which rendered disastrous the entertainment at Tranby Croft, by Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wilson, of the Prince of Wales and his friends. Whenever the heir to the throne of Great Britain accepts an invitation he is privileged to name the guests he would like to meet. As a matter of form the list of these persons is submitted to the host and hostess for their approval. The lady who was to have had the honor of entertaining the prince during the St. Leger race week sent back the list forwarded to her, with the statement that she objected to receiving one of the women named therein on grounds of morality. Albert Edward thereupon canceled his engagement and, with his friends, accepted the more charitable hospitality of the Wilsons.

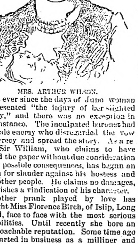
All the world knows the shocking reason for the break up of the party. Baccarat was played for high stakes, and some of the onlookers declared that they had detected Sir William Gordon-Cumming engaged in cheating. The specific charge was that he surreptitiously increased his stake when a favorable card turned up, and diminished it whenever he experienced a loss. The witnesses submitted their accusation to the prince. The upshot was that Sir William signed an undertaking never again to touch a card, and all the members of the party promised to remain silent regarding the scandalous affair.



MRS. ARTHUR WILSON.

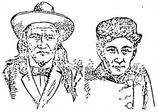
But ever since the days of Juno woman has resented "the injury of her slighted beauty," and there was no exception in this instance. The inculpated baronet had a female enemy who disregarded the vow of secrecy and spread the story. As a result Sir William, who claims to have signed the paper without due consideration of the possible consequences, has begun an action for slander against his hostess and four other people. He claims no damages, but wishes a vindication of his character.

Another prank played by love has brought Miss Florence Birch, of Islip, Long Island, face to face with the most serious possibilities. Until recently she bore an irreproachable reputation. Some time ago she started in business as a milliner and stocked a little shop with goods. Soon afterward she and another young woman of the village began to receive scurrilous letters reflecting upon their characters. Then there was a fire in Miss Birch's store, the origin of which could not be explained. The citizens thought that their fair townswoman was the object of some mysterious persecution, and they organized for the purpose of hunting down her tormentor. They hired a detective, who took a cynical rather than a sentimental view of the affair, and who put in his time watching Miss Birch's movements. He traced her to New York, found that she was enamored of a youth employed in a Broadway store, and finally confronted the girl with such a mass of information about her private life that she signed a written confession acknowledging that she wrote the scurrilous letters and also set fire to her goods, the main object in view being to secure the insurance money and establish herself at another place where her lover had his home. Upon this showing Miss Birch was arrested, but when brought before a justice she was confronted neither with the detective nor the confession, and was set free after making a statement that the person guilty of arson was not herself, but the man with whom she was infatuated. Hearing that a warrant was out for his arrest, the alleged lover promptly visited Islip, pleaded not guilty and gave bail. He refused to call on Miss Birch, although it was hinted that if he did so and made arrangements to marry her the prosecution would be dropped. Now the detective has reappeared, and claims that his absence from the trial was due to lack of notification. Miss Birch has again been arrested, and whatever the final outcome of the business may be, it seems probable that she has lost her lover, her trade as a milliner and considerable of the good repute which she formerly enjoyed. It is claimed, however, on the girl's behalf, that she has for some time suffered from recurrent hysterical mania, and is really not responsible either for her words or deeds.



MISS FLORENCE BIRCH.

Still another strange freak to be charged up to Cupid's account has to do with the union of two persons differing widely in race, habits and antecedents. Standing Bear is a Sioux warrior of the Ogallala tribe. He went to Europe a year or two ago with Buffalo Bill's Wild West exhibition. At Vienna one of the visitors to the show was Mrs. Louisa Ahne, whose husband had recently died, and who is the mother of two bright little children. Mrs. Ahne fell in love with Standing Bear at first sight; and perhaps she is not altogether to blame, for he is a magnificent specimen of Indian manhood, being six feet three inches tall and weighing 170 pounds. The widow did not hesitate to announce that her affections went out to the big brave. She told him so through an interpreter, and when, soon afterward, Standing Bear met with an accident she took him to her home and nursed him back to health. Before the end of his four weeks' illness the warrior capitulated, and when he started to rejoin the show he did so as an engaged man. At the close of the tour he returned to Vienna, and the couple were married at St. Stephen's church. Then they went to the village of Randstock, where they lived for five months with the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Reineck. At the end of that time all the party decided to leave for America. Standing Bear had $200, and the Reinecks sold their little farm for $450. They took passage at Hamburg, and in due season reached New York city, where Standing Bear was the object of much attention, not only on account of his romantic marriage, but also because he dressed elegantly, and even went to the extremes of fashion by wearing a silk hat and patent leather shoes. After a visit to relatives of the bride at Chicago the party will proceed to Pine Ridge agency, and there make their permanent home.



STANDING BEAR—MRS. STANDING BEAR.

FLAX FIBER AND SEED.

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS TO THE FARMERS OF THE NORTHWEST.

An Experienced Man in Handling Flax Tells What He Knows About the Industry, in a Way That All Can Understand. Read the Article and Preserve It.

Many if not all of our western farmers can grow flax for fiber as well as for seed by adopting the methods generally in use in other flax growing countries.

The following valuable hints about the culture of flax for fiber and seed, is copied from the Great Northern Railway Bulletin, a monthly publication full of good things concerning the Northwest, as condensed from a letter on the subject written by W. D. Hall, secretary of the Minneapolis board of trade:

"Sow one and one-half bushels of Belgian seed per acre and when the straw begins to turn yellow and the foliage within six inches of the ground is drooping, pull or cut close to the ground at once. At this stage the seed in the bolls is changing to a dark green or brownish tinge. Tie the straw in small bundles and stand on end to winnow. When quite hard and dry put in stack. There is a larger and better yield of fiber when the straw is kept until the year following its growth. If fibre is required at once the seed can be rippled and the straw steeped in soft water, that is, rain water, or, if this is not attainable, in pits of water in which vegetable matter grows, and which has been exposed to the sun's rays for a period of five or six weeks. The straw should be protected from the earth at the sides of the retting pits; place the straw in layers until the pit is quite full; stones, or planks of wood with stones on top to keep the straw entirely under the water, are laid upon the top layer of flax or straw. If the temperature of the water is 80 deg. Fahrenheit or upwards, about six days will be sufficient to ret the straw. From the fifth day examine a few straws, at different parts of the pit several times daily, and when the fiber pulls readily and entirely off the woody core it is time to remove from the pits. Stand the sheaves on end to dry; pull the band or tying on each sheaf close to the top and spread out the root ends so as to expose to the sun and wind. When perfectly dry stack for a few weeks. This improves and mellows or brings 'nature,' or a soft silky feeling to the fiber. It is now ready for the machine.

"Practice and time are necessary to become proficient in this branch of husbandry. Until you have learned by experience to handle the flax straw so as to realize the best results, I would advise you not to invest money or credit in an machinery, but do what you can by hand and with your own labor during the winter months. I will soon have samples of machines that every farmer can make for himself at a cost not to exceed $2 and with which he may himself, during the winter months, work out the fiber of from one to six acres of flax straw. that will bring from $100 to $500. Experience will soon enable you to produce as good fiber as is produced in Ireland or any other country and I can promise you a cash market in Minneapolis for all the fiber you can produce."

The following statement will show you what one man has done and does every year: Mr. E. Bosse, of Green Bay, Wis., in a recent communication to the National Department of Agriculture, relates the following interesting experience: "The six acres of flax grown on my farm was [illegible] and referred to in The Gazette, of Green Bay, Feb. 3, was sown May 1, 1889, with one and one-half bushels per acre of Belgian seed (which I consider the very best for this country.) I pulled it by hand a little before ripe; let it dry standing on the ground for eight days; then bound it with rye straw, and sheltered. I thrashed it by hand and spread it on land already harvested, and let it ret by dews and rains; then stacked it in the barn again, out bound this time with its own straw. I scutched it by the old system (breaker and knives, still the best in use when the work is done by skilled scutchers.) The soil is a black loam mixed with black sand about ten inches deep, with red clay for subsoil. The result was as follows:

Sowed 9 bushels Belgian seed, at $1.50 per bushel		$13 50
Pulling by hand		32 50
Binding and sheltering		5 00
Thrashing by hand		20 65
Retting on the ground		19 40
Scutching		150 83
Shipping		10 00
Freight to Boston, about		30 00
Total expense		$251 97
Produce:
60 bushels seed, valued at $1	$60 00
600 pounds tow, 2 cents per pound	12 00
3,718 pounds fiber, at 11 cents per pound, as offered by manufacturer, Ross, Turner & Co., Boston	408 98	480 98
Net profit		$229 01

I think we can estimate this as an average crop, with careful preparation of the ground and well conducted operations in retting and scutching.

The reason for sowing thick is to have the straw longer and finer, as it is only valuable for fiber from the root to where it branches out. The ordinary flax grown here will produce a good quality of fiber if pulled or cut close to the ground at the right time, and properly treated. Try one or more acres next year and see what you can do."

Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for * $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50
IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.
DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.
A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $30 harness. It has a 3 or 3½ hand laced, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching leather and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness leather as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

THE FOREIGN MARKET.

WHAT THE FARMER SELLS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Statistics of Foreign Trade in Farm Products—Where the Bushel of Wheat and Barrel of Pork Go To—England Is the Farmer's Best Foreign Market—Great Importance of the Foreign Market to Our Farmers.

When a man undertakes to defend a false system he is constantly compelled to make untrue arguments. Our protection organs labor early and late to show the farmer that the foreign market is of very little value to him. While Blaine is trying to get the farmer "a market for another bushel of wheat and another barrel of pork," and the organs applaud his efforts, they even forget themselves still and go back to their old job of showing that the foreign market is no good.

But the facts about the farmer's foreign market are clearly set forth in the figures published by the Treasury Department. Those figures for the year ending Dec. 31, 1890, have recently been published: and they are well worth the attention of any farmer who wants to know the size of his foreign market and where his greatest foreign market is.

The figures of the department show that the total exports of agricultural products in 1890 amounted to $628,772,000, which was 74.33 per cent. of all our exports. On the other hand, exports of manufactures were $156,983,000, or only 18.56 per cent. of the total. These figures show that where the manufacturer exported $1 worth of goods the farmer exported $4 worth. The foreign market is therefore four times more valuable to the farmer than to the manufacturer.

The heaviest single item of agricultural exports was raw cotton, reaching $254,275,000, or about 40 per cent. of all agricultural exports, and about 30 per cent. of all exports of every kind. Exports of cotton in 1889 were still larger, being $266,649,000.

The next largest item in the total was provisions, $142,842,000. These were divided as follows: Beef products—Canned beef, $8,610,000; fresh, $13,837,000; salted or pickled, $6,039,000; tallow, $5,738,000. Hog products—Bacon, $37,855,000; hams, $8,495,000; pork, fresh and pickled, $4,704,000. Dairy products—Butter, $3,228,000; cheese, $8,130,000.

The exports of provisions for the past three years make an interesting comparison, showing, as they do, a gratifying increase. These are the figures;

1888	$ 91,249,000
1889	123,307,000
1890	142,842,000

The next heaviest exports are breadstuffs, $141,602,000. Here are the principal items: Corn, $37,603,000; wheat, $42,348,000; wheat flour, $52,709,000; oats, $4,141,000; rye, $1,025,000; cornmeal, $917,000; oatmeal, $579,000; barley, $463,000.

Besides the exports of provisions as above given, there was a considerable export of live animals, principally cattle. Total exports of animals were $35,665,000, of which the exports of cattle reached $33,297,000, against $25,673,000 in 1889. Exports of hogs were $970,000; horses, $808,000; mules, $358,000; sheep, $199,000.

There were also some exports of miscellaneous agricultural products. These were as follows: Bones, hoofs, horns, etc., $460,000; fruits, $2,845,000; hay, $577,000; hides and skins, $1,488,000; hops, $2,172,000; seeds, $2,945,000; leaf tobacco, $21,155,000; vegetables, $1,370,000.

Besides these exports of raw farm produce, there were some $40,000,000 of manufactured goods exported, of which our farmers furnished the raw materials. These were as follows: Cotton goods, $11,113,000; leather and manufactures of leather, $12,575,000; lard oil, $646,000; cottonseed oil, $5,400,000; oilcake, $7,762,000; manufactured tobacco, $4,018,000.

The above figures afford some idea of the vast importance of the farmer's foreign market. In the face of such figures the protectionists have the effrontery to try to persuade the farmer that he cannot compete in the markets of the world with the pauper labor of countries less prosperous than ours, and they even go to the length of saying that if it were not for McKinley's humbug duties on farm produce our markets would be flooded with the cheap products of other countries!

These figures prove the ability of our farmers to hold their own in the world's market. Yet McKinley made it a reproach to the Democratic minority on the Ways and Means Committee a year ago that they stood forth in defense of that market for our farmers. "The 'world's market,' to which the advocates of tariff for revenue only invite the farmers of this country," he said, "is today crowded with the products of the cheapest human labor the earth affords. All over the old world there is a rush of their surplus to that market, and it is to such a contest as this that free trade would allure American agriculture."

And still our farmers go into that market and beat "the cheapest human labor" on its own ground; and they are in no mood to withdraw from that market, as McKinley seems to advocate, if his words mean anything. The farmers know too well that if they should cease to sell in the foreign market they should fail to find sale for all their products at home, and thus depress prices to an absolutely ruinous figure. But the farmers are not fools; they know that the more of our farm products is taken by Europe and the more of manufactured goods that is sent to us in exchange, the better off they are. The freedom of that exchange, so beneficial to our farmers, is obstructed in the interests of the manufacturers solely under the false cry of "protection to American labor."

Another important fact shown by the Treasury figures is that England is far and away the farmers' greatest foreign market.

Against all the silly protectionist talk about England, "the grasping Briton," and the like, let the farmer consider the following figures: Total exports of cattle, $33,297,000, of which England took $31,364,000; canned beef, $8,610,000, to England, $6,356,000; fresh beef, $13,837,000, to England, $13,654,000; salted beef, $6,125,000, to England, $3,952,000; tallow, $5,738,000, to England, $2,643,000; bacon, $37,855,000, to England, $30,966,000; hams, $8,495,000, to England, $6,857,000; lard, $36,062,000, to England, $11,139,000; butter, $3,228,000, to England, $1,355,000; cheese, $8,130,000, to England, $7,080,000. Our exports of breadstuffs were also principally taken by England. The leading items were: Corn, $37,603,000, to England, $19,474,000; wheat, $43,348,000, to England, $28,810,000; flour, $52,709,000, to England, $32,356,000. Exports of raw cotton amounted to $254,000,000, of which England took $148,000,000. Hops to the value of $2,172,000 were exported, of which all except about $65,000 went to England. Of $21,155,000 of leaf tobacco England took $6,191,000.

That is the state of our export trade now. How will it be if our mad McKinleyism has the effect of driving England into opening up new sources of supply? Many facts point to such an outcome of our McKinleyism. What will the farmer then think of McKinley's "farmers' tariff?"

CASTELAR ON PROTECTION.

The Spanish Patriot Arraigns Protection and Paints the Achievements of America in Eloquent Words.

The most progressive man in Spain to-day is Castelar, who is known throughout the world as a patriot, a statesman, an orator, a writer of ability, and as the leader of the republican movement in that country.

Spain is now agitating the question of "revising" her tariff upward, in imitation of the McKinley method, and provoked thereto by McKinley's Chinese antics. In view of these facts it is of interest to note a recent letter from Castelar, which was printed in the New York Herald. This letter shows Castelar to be a broad-minded citizen of the world, devoted to the good of the human race, and hence looking with pity upon the folly of the nations in waging commercial warfare upon each other in the form of protective tariffs.

Castelar does not lay the blame of originating protective tariffs upon America. He finds, rather, that America is simply following the bad example set by Europe. He does blame America, however, for adopting a system so at war with her traditions of freedom, and so damaging to her mission as the standard-bearer of liberty among the nations of the world. Among the continental nations of Europe her influence for liberty and enlightened statesmanship is largely nullified by protection, and her example is used to strengthen the old hatreds and jealousies which have proven so disastrous to those nations. The old spirit of international distrust and hate which has so often wrought ruin in Europe is still alive in the form of retaliatory tariff laws, and the example of America is unhappily thrown upon the wrong side.

Castelar eloquently says: "Archæological contradictions must disappear, and the cause of human progress imperatively requires nations to urge on universal exchange, free trade, just as cosmic heat compels sidereal motion. Having in every sense of the word outgrown the age when competition could be fatal to it, as well as the period of economic contradictions, the new world fights against its own providential destiny and betrays its office by aggravating, as it is now doing, its protectionist tariff, converted by measures which are simply odious into desolating prohibition."

How pitiable appear the attempts of the protectionists to undermine America's confidence in herself, in the light of Castelar's eloquent portrayal of America's great achievements.

"Nations, like individuals, in proportion as they mount toward the highest summits of illustrious renown, assume an increased responsibility. The nation within whose frontiers reign peace, liberty, democracy, republicanism, progress and labor must not, beyond those frontiers, represent reaction, race enmity and the retrogradation of humanity. The people who have chained the tempest and subjected the lightning, who have fitted our vessels with the steam engines which enable them to override all waves and to brave all winds, who have given to speech the speed of lightning, who have created the power of transmitting the human voice over the whole surface of the earth by means of the miraculous telephone, who by the aid of the magic strands of the telegraphic cable hidden in the depths of the ocean have joined the most distant lands, who have given the human race the benefit of the electric light, are compelled to forward the cause of universal progress by the adoption of free labor and free exchange.

McKinleyism Gone Mad.

The copyright law recently enacted by Congress contains one piece of protectionism much more crazy than anything in the McKinley tariff law. The latter measure allows the importation of English books not more than twenty years old, upon payment of a duty of 25 per cent.; but the copyright act takes away the privilege of importation altogether, except that any person may import one or two copies of a book for his own use. Importation for purposes of sale is absolutely prohibited in the case of all books printed in the English language less than twenty years old, and copyrighted in the United States.

Even so extreme a protectionist as Senator John Sherman opposed this piece Chinese protectionism. He offered an amendment permitting the importation of books upon the payment of the duty just as is the case with all other articles; and this amendment was passed by the Senate. The McKinleyites of the House, however, refused to accept the Sherman amendment, and the Senate had to back down, Senator Sherman voting against the whole bill by reason of the failure of his very sensible amendment.

And thus it goes forth to a wondering world that the only things which our McKinleyites absolutely shut out from the channels of trade in this country are obscene books and pictures, drugs to produce abortion, and—tell it not in Gath!—all English books not more than twenty years old! Now let the Chinese become civilized and shut out American books. Let the Hottentots catch the inspiration of our example and prohibit the flood of pauper-made Bibles!

Protection Wages Again.

Reductions of the wages of protected Pennsylvania labor still go on. Here are a few of the latest:

Allentown—Crane Iron Company, 10 per cent. reduction.

Pottstown—Glasgow Iron Company, puddlers wages reduced from $3.75 a ton to $3.50; also a reduction of 7 per cent. in the plate mill. Potts Bros. Iron Company made similar reductions.

Pittsburg—It is almost certain that the coke operators will reduce wages 20 per cent. instead of 10 per cent., as previously announced.

Harrisburg—Wages of puddlers in all the mills about the city to be reduced 25 per cent. March 16.

And such is protection to American labor!

For American Wear.

The high tariff keeps out of the country much of the wool which our people need to make their clothes, and hence it need cause no surprise to hear a leading Massachusetts woolen manufacturer say that a large part of the clothing worn by our people is made of shoddy and cotton.

While wool is taxed heavily, rags come in free; even woolen rags, however, pay ten cents a pound. A correspondent of the Boston Wool Reporter writes to that journal from London, and gives the exports from that city to various American cities for one week in February. From London to Boston there were 290,0[illegible] pounds of wool and 320 tons (716,800 pounds) of rags, and 1,000 bales of rags were in transit. To Philadelphia there were no exports "except 150 bales of cow hair in transit." To Baltimore there were 24 tons (53,760 pounds) of rags. From Liverpool to Philadelphia 134 bales of wool, 121 bales of goat hair and 116 bales of cow hair were exported.

Why not give us free wool and less shoddy?

ACKNOWLEDGING THE CORN.

A Manufacturer and a Rabid Protection Organ Admit that Our Goods Are Sold Cheaper Abroad than at Home.

The protectionists are forever getting themselves into a hole. They denied last year with indignant protestations that any of our manufacturers sell their goods cheaper abroad than in the home market; but now comes one of these very manufacturers and states over his own signature that such is the fact. This particular manufacturer is not a believer in the humbug called protection, and he has nothing to lose in making the statement that American wares are bought by the foreigner at lower prices than by the American buyer.

The manufacturer in question is Mr. A. B. Farquhar of York, Pa., who has a very large establishment for making agricultural implements and machinery. He ought to know whereof he speaks.

In a recent letter, Mr. Farquhar says: "Of the agricultural implements used in South America, Mexico, Australia, and South Africa, we now manufacture a very large proportion in the United States. In some sections American implements and machinery are used almost exclusively; fully three-fourths of the plows used in South America and South Africa are made in this country. Our implements for export must be sold at very low prices—that is, at a small profit to the manufacturer, since we must compete with England and Germany. The prices obtained for our agricultural implements sold abroad average from 5 per cent. to 15 per cent. less than what we get in this country. As I have several times had occasion to observe, the manufacturer who is able to export his goods can have no use for protection except to enable him to extort more money from home purchasers than he is able to get from those abroad."

What is still more remarkable, one of the very high tariff papers which were loudest and most brutal in denouncing the charge that manufacturers sell cheaper abroad than at home, has recently confessed that the thing is sometimes done. This is the Chicago Inter Ocean, which said several weeks ago in discussing the cartridge trust (protected by a 45 per cent. duty):

"Just look at it. Four concerns, protected by a stiff tariff against foreign competition, combine and crush out and buy out all competitors in this country, and then compel every American consumer to pay them 25 per cent. more for goods than a Canuck has to pay for the same goods, or a greaser in Mexico! This is protection with a vengeance."

It verily is!

Refusing to See a Trust.

In their zeal to defend the manufacturers the protectionist orators frequently rush forward with statements which are quickly disproved. Senator Hiscock, of New York, said in the Senate, last September, in speaking of agricultural implements:

"In respect to the manufacture and sale of these kind of goods, there is not now and never has been a combination among American manufacturers to hold up the price above that of free and open competition."

But the recent decision of Judge Smith at Elmira, N. Y., shows that there has been a very firm combination of the manufacturers of harrows, and it is said that one of the manufacturers in this Harrow Trust does business in the city in which Senator Hiscock lives.

The harrow makers have their 45 per cent. protective duty; and they formed a combination to get the greatest possible advantage from it. In their determination to get absolute control of the market they compelled one manufacturer to join the trust who wanted to remain independent. After joining it he became dissatisfied with the trust's methods and drew out. The trust brought suit to compel him to live up to the agreement made with it; but Judge Smith threw out the case, refusing to enforce the agreement upon the ground that it was against the public interest.

The case is interesting, showing that there is often "a nigger in the woodpile" when people, whose fire is burning low, are protesting the contrary in the most vehement language.

Getting Rid of the Sugar Tax.

The McKinley law seems to be doomed to teach the people that the tariff is a tax, even where it removes a duty. Raw sugar becomes free April 1, and already refined sugar (No. 4) has been sold in New York in wholesale lots for April delivery at less than 3½ cents per pound. The McKinleyites took off the sugar tax in order to prevent the reduction of the tariff on manufactures and in this wa to save protection; but free sugar is going to teach the people very clearly that the tariff is a tax, and that it is a good thing to get rid of such a tax.

THE New York Commercial Bulletin has recently printed the following item about the carpet trade: "Carpet men say that body Brussels, velvets, and moquettes have been moving out rather sluggishly of late. This is probably due to the tariff-bred advances established a few weeks ago." The protection journals, however, keep on protesting that the McKinley law has not caused an advance in prices of any of the necessaries of life. Let them quit fibbing, or else give up using carpets as needless luxuries.

IT is said that the Louisiana sugar planters are preparing to produce an enormous crop of sugar this year in order to pocket as big a slice of the McKinley sugar bounty as possible. Sugar-raising being looked upon by the McKinleyites as a public necessity, they vote the people's taxes away to the sugar-growers to the tune of some $7,000,000 a year. But is sugar-growing any more a public necessity than corn-growing or wheat-growing?

BAKING POWDERS ONCE MORE.

"The Effects of Ammonia" According to the Scientific American.

Many combinations of chemicals have been proposed and tried for baking powders, but the general consensus of housekeepers, as well as of scientific authorities, has settled upon a mixture of sodium bicarbonate (baking soda) with potassium bitartrate (cream of tartar).

Were the above mixture of chemicals allowed to stand, it would soon deteriorate. To prevent this it is mixed with an inert substance which isolates to some extent the particles of the mixture, so as to confer lasting powers upon it. This substance is usually flour or powdered starch, and is termed "filling." Some filling is necessary. About 10 per cent is the least that can be used by the most careful manufacturer, and all over 18 per cent should be considered an adulterant, harmless, indeed, but nevertheless an imposition on the consumer.

Twenty-one baking powders are cited in the United States department of agriculture report on foods and food adulterants, Washington, 1889, as exceeding this amount. The amount of starch varies from 24.57 to 52.29 per cent, which goes to show how much starch is bought and paid for at the price of baking powder. All but two of these contain ammonia or alum, or both, and are in the list of powders given below.

A more important point, however, is to know what baking powders are adulterated with alum or ammonia, as the continued use of such powders, according to many authorities, injures the health.

The use of alum in baking powder has been prohibited in England, France and Germany, and a law has recently been passed in Minnesota requiring manufacturers using alum to publish on the label, "This baking powder contains alum," and the Canadian government report says (page 27): "The residue left in the bread after use of an alum powder are sulphate of ammonia, sulphate of soda, and alumina. The last named is an earthy substance quite insoluble and therefore indigestible." (Page 31.) "Alum is entirely objectionable as a substitute for cream of tartar, and ought not to be allowed a place in any well appointed bakery."

The insidious effects of ammonia as an adulterant in baking powders are not so well known, but Bartholow sums up the evidence against ammonia as follows: "The long-continued use of ammonia impairs digestion by neutralizing the gastric juice. Increased waste of tissue is also one result of its administration, manifested by pallor, emaciation and feebleness." And the Pacific Medical Journal, commenting on the cause of dyspepsia, says (page 687): "This question regarding the effect of ammonia upon the human economy is one upon which authorities do not differ, and the individual experience of every physician is in accord with the assertion of authorities. The agent (ammonia) is a drug, not a food; an excrement, not a nutriment. The amount received by the system through these means, while not great at any particular time, and not sufficient to prove injurious, becomes both great and deleterious by being continuous. Physicians owe it to their patients and to the people generally to inform themselves regarding this matter, and without fear or favor unqualifiedly to condemn injurious preparations; and the various boards of health throughout the state, in dealing with the question of food adulterations, would do the people a great service to look well to the brands of baking powders containing ammonia and other injurious ingredients."

In the face of such testimony, quantities of ammonia are used, one company, it is estimated, using every year in the manufacture of their baking powder two hundred and fifty thousand (250,000) pounds. It is a common right of the people to know what food compounds contain. There is, however, no law to that effect at present, and for the protection of the public we have compiled a list of baking powders containing ammonia and alum from five official reports, viz.: United States department of agriculture, Bulletin No. 13; inland revenue department, Canada, Bulletin No. 10; Ohio dairy and food commission, New Jersey dairy commission and the Massachusetts state board of health. It is a list worth preserving.

AMMONIA AND ALUM BAKING POWDERS.

(Compiled from official reports.) Powders marked with a star seem to have a general sale, as they are mentioned in at least two of the official reports.

In the United States report, the results of analyses by Prof. H. A. Weber, made for the Ohio dairy and food commission, and by Prof. H. Bedinger Cornwall, of Princeton college, N. J., for the dairy commission of New Jersey, are cited, as well as those by Dr. H. W. Wiley, chemist of the United States department of agriculture. This gives a peculiar value to the report, which of course contains a great deal which cannot be summarized here.—[Scientific American.

Edison a Vegetarian.

Thomas A. Edison, according to a friend of his, is a vegetarian, eschewing flesh, fowl and fish. He enjoys fruit of all kind, grain of every variety, and likewise vegetables, especially those that ripen in the sunshine. He is very careful about his diet, holding that it has a powerful influence upon the mind and its actions as well as upon the health and vigor of the body. He has studied the matter under the beams of the solar orb, under the flash of electricity, under the laws of science and in the light of reason. It seems that he is unaware of anything like self-denial in the practice of vegetarianism, and that he finds plenty of delicious, invigorating and exhilarating esculents outside of flesh, fowl and fish.—New York Sun.

'TWAS NOT A BEER GARDEN.

"Thunder Weather," Said a Man in Blue, and Out He Went.

They had graduated from the University of Pennsylvania only a month before and were seeing Europe with well-lined purses, says the Philadelphia Press. London and Paris had been seen, and now, on their arrival at Berlin, they decided to sally forth immediately dinner should be finished to behold those much-spoken-of German beer gardens. They did not stop to ask from the interpreter where the best were to be found, but felt sure they would meet with one before many streets should be passed.

So on they went for a few squares until they came upon a brilliantly lighted place, filled with trees and plants, nooks and corners. Officers were moving about with gayly dressed ladies, music playing, dear little round tables here and there. It was charming—just what they had expected.

"Shall we go in and have a glass of beer?"

"By all means."

Large gates stood wide. Servants in rows bowed them in. The interior was more fascinating than the glimpse through the trees had promised. Several men in uniform stared at them. They leisurely seated themselves at a small round table, and one tapped with his cane. One of the men who had been standing at the door, after a hasty consultation with the others, approached them. He wore many decorations. "What a swell waiter," said one.

"Two beers," answered a student, holding up two fingers to make himself better understood.

"Thunder weather!" exclaimed the man in uniform; and in two seconds' time they found themselves landed heavily on the sidewalk, and there left with numberless German words which they had not learned at the university.

They afterward found that the brilliantly lighted garden was a private one, and that they had assisted for a brief space at a fete given to the emperor.

The farmer of the future will be a student. He will be a business man. He will have scientific knowledge. He will know why he must use certain kinds of fertilizers for certain grains. He will know why he uses certain food to produce fat and other to produce milk. Hence he must have education; at least, sufficient mental training to comprehend these truths.

"German Syrup"

Croup. We have selected two or three lines from letters freshly received from parents who have given German Syrup to their children in the emergencies of Croup. You will credit these, because they come from good, substantial people, happy in finding what so many families lack—a medicine containing no evil drug, which mother can administer with confidence to the little ones in their most critical hours, safe and sure that it will carry them through.

ED. L. WILLITS, of Alma, Neb. I give it to my children when troubled with Croup and never saw any preparation act like it. It is simply miraculous.

MRS. JAS. W. KIRK, Daughters' College, Harrodsburg, Ky. I have depended upon it in attacks of Croup with my little daughter, and find it an invaluable remedy.

Fully one-half of our customers are mothers who use Boschee's German Syrup among their children. A medicine to be successful with the little folks must be a treatment for the sudden and terrible foes of childhood, whooping cough, croup, diphtheria and the dangerous inflammations of delicate throats and lungs.

It isn't done by others—that's why the guarantee of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription should command attention. It's a guarantee that means something. If the medicine doesn't give satisfaction, in every case for which it's recommended, the money is promptly refunded. Remarkable terms—but it's a remarkable medicine. All the functional irregularities and weaknesses peculiar to womankind are cured by it. For leucorrhea, periodical pains, weak back, prolapsus and other displacements, bearing-down sensations, and all "female complaints," it's an unfailing remedy. It is a powerful, restorative tonic and nervine, imparting strength and vigor to the whole system.

Try it, if you're an ailing woman. If it doesn't help you, you have your money back.

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results.

A NIGHT WITH A TIGER.

I have heard that the human hair has sometimes been changed to white or grey, by sudden and excessive terror; and this reminds me of the night of fear which I once passed in company with a monstrous tiger—he at liberty, and I unarmed and alone with him. Even now my blood thrills to think of it; and if my words do justice to the subject and my feelings, I shall curdle yours very shortly.

At that time, my generous, lamented uncle was the chief owner of a large menagerie, which was then in its town-quarters; and adjoining stood his residence, from which a private side-door opened into the temple of entertainments.

One midnight, after all was quiet, both in my uncle's house and the menagerie, I conceived the purpose which was the source of all my danger and affright. I took a lantern, passed secretly through the side-door, and stood alone—the only human being—inside that dark menagerie.

My purpose was double, or rather triple; and I may say it was manifold, in so doing. I wished to see how the wild animals would look and act at that lonely hour, with no other human eye upon them save mine. I also wished to find a bunch of keys, in charge of the head-keeper, Bill Ramsay, whom I knew to be off for the night, drinking elsewhere; and to select from the bunch the key to the cage where was kept a pet goat, which my uncle had promised me, at a very early hour in the morning, in the stage-coach, to my father's, in the country.

I wished to take the goat now, and into the house, because I feared that Ramsay would not be back in time; or, if so, might be drunk, fasten the door inside, and not wake up and let me in and let out the goat, when I should shout. I brought the lantern to aid me, in the hunt for the keys; also to be enabled to see the animals as well as they could see me; and likewise to keep me from stumbling into awkward proximity to some of them, and thus be made into hashed meat, depriving my father of a dutiful son and me of a beautiful goat.

What other wishes I had at the time, I don't recollect; but I do remember how I advanced between the rows of cages, cutting the darkness right and left with my lantern sword of light; and how the strong smell of amonia, which prevaded the atmosphere, raised the question in my mind, whether that was a cause of the wild luxuriance of the jungle.

Suddenly, I was startled from my philosophical reverie; for having reached the far-end of the menagerie, most remote from the street, I was appalled to behold a huge cage, wide open in front of me and upon its floor, crouching unchained and glaring at me a royal Bengal tiger.

I am naturally light-hearted, which is one reason why I have been able to bound over numerous misfortunes to preserve my health and become rich at last but I assure you at that moment I did not feel inclined for joking! My eyes were all before me, when I saw that tiger; and staring directly into his, I seemed to melt suddenly down to the floor before him, as if I had been an ice-cream, and he a burning July sun. I fell, lantern in hand, upon my knees, and then more prostrate, as if the lower my head went the less notice his royal ferocity would take of me. So indelibly was that present time impressed on my mind, to the exclusion of any other memory about the errors of the past that I can now truly tell you how I felt.

I felt, in the first place, for my lantern. If the light should go out, I should be ushered into eternity without seeing my way clear; and like Homer's Ajax who had probably been scared in the dark when he was young, I wanted all the light possible. So clutching the lantern, I looked the tiger in the face, and formed a very unfavorable opinion of his physiognomic denotements. He had language large, but it was like the language of the birch, easy to understand and hard to get used to. There was unspeakable eloquence lodged around the corners of that large mouth, even in repose; and how persuasive it might be, when open, it was not difficult to imagine. The cruelly receding character of the forehead implied a lack of benevolence shocking to contemplate; while the muscular development of the fore-paws, and the spread of the claws, signified a grasping nature and ability, in grim harmony with the general aspect of the beast; whose hide, horribly beautiful, was the chief redeeming feature of the picture, and seemed to glow, like molten gold, under the light of my lantern.

By degrees, seeing that his Bengal Excellency made no undue haste to spring upon me, I recovered from my partial paralysis, sufficiently to compose my trembling limbs with less discomfort upon the hard floor, and to reorganize my scattered powers of reasoning; and I asked myself as to the policy of extinguishing the light. But the thought was discarded as soon as formed; for I remembered that this herculean cat could see as well in the dark as in the light, and that singularly enough, a flame is often a terror to these fiery wild animals.

Having, therefore, decided upon the one point, of allowing the lantern to burn till my light and it should be perhaps extinguished together, I took a cursory view of the situation in other respects.

As the tiger did not yet move towards me, suppose I should move from him? I had a very strong inclination to do this, but counter-considerations prevented. A bit of poetry entered my head, in the shape of an old adage:—

"To fly the boar when he doth not pursue,
Will but incense the boar to follow you."

Were I to stir, the possibility of my getting along well enough without him, might inflame his enterprise, and excite a rival activity on his part; and what kind of a chance would I have, a poor mouse, under the eye of that gigantic feline; I felt that, in such a scrambling game of all fours, my hands would be speedily played out.

I was the more convinced of this unpleasant probability, from the fact that the side-door, through which I had entered, and by which I might otherwise have hoped to escape, had shut to with a spring, and was self-fastening. Without a key it could only be opened from the other side—a circumstance I did not learn till I had entered; and though had I found the bunch of keys, I might have opened it, or otherwise could have summoned assistance by pounding on the door, still this was no relief to me, distant as I was from it, and almost certain, that, before I could reach and have it opened, I should be within the embrace of the pursuing tiger.

Alas! this was a most disheartening reflection and thoughts of a barbarous death thickened upon my sickening soul. I had seen a cat's strategy, in playing with a mouse; mangling it, retiring awhile pretending sleep, waiting till its hope revived, and pouncing again upon it. Was this to be my fate?

"No," thought I; "I am no mouse. Let me be warned by what I have seen. I am a divine soul, imbued with the essence of immortality; and what is more to the present purpose, gifted with a certain amount of prescience, by which I may yet accomplish my deliverance, if I look sharp and lie still. When he moves, it will be a good time for me also to be in a hurry."

It is impossible to convey to you how, as thus I lay prostrate, surveying the savage bulk of that Asiatic dsepot. I longed, but dare not sigh, for Bill Ramsay. It seemed as if I had been in that place of awful jeopardy for as much as two hours; if so, it was two o'clock in the morning; and it might be that Ramsay would abbreviate his sojourn at the tavern and return to his duty as night-guard over the welfare of that establishment.

It might be! But how frail the hope on which so much depended! He was more likely to be too late to do me any good. It seemed highly possible that on his arival he would find the mutilated remains of his employes youthful nephew, ignominiously distributed about the premises. The spectacle might effect a permanent reform in his habits. He might take buttons from my clothes, as relics of the sad catastrophe, and show them in future years and sell or give some of them away, as an awful warning of the effects of drinking. But all this would do me no good He might even shoot the tiger—but he could not put my parts together again: I should be dead and gone; and all for a goat.

How I hated drinking and smoking then; for, had it not been for those propensities in Bill Ramsay he would have been discharging his duty, by sleeping faithfully at his post, and thus have been on hand to neutralize or prevent this frightful emergency,

The more I reflect upon the probability of his speedy return the more I felt convinced of its improbability; and the consciousness that I was thus endangered in the heart of a large town, within and yet beyond the reach of help was so aggravating that at one time I actually felt desperate and was on the point of making a sudden dash for the nearest cage and climbing to the top or stowing myself away in some possible corner—which might easily have been done, had not the tiger been there—a serious drawback. I had no doubt that he was a more excellent climber than I.

But, remaining where I had fallen, though ever so quiet, I might tempt the tiger's appetite in time; and as I peered up at his rapacious face, through the chinks of my fingers, and thought how naturally he might be hungry in the night-time, when the tyrants of the wilderness are accustomed to prowl and prey, wondered he was so tardy with such a luncheon spread before him. To be sure, there was no doubt he had had his supper; but I very much feared that a tiger's voracity was not to be measured by the regulation diet of a menagerie. And if his hunger were appeased, who could set bounds to his perpetual fondness for killing and rending, for the mere sport of the thing.

The wholesale remorselessness of that massive visage; the intensified craftiness of those big sulphureous eyes; the bulging wickedness of the hairy cheeks; the slumbering malice harboured about the placid but deceitful jaws; the bunchy sinuosity of the extended legs; and the venomous vigour lurking in that vast pair of velvet paws, were objects of a most objectionable criticism on my part.

Having lingered in my recumbent position for, as I should judge, about three hours, fatigued and lame with my unchanged attitude, and nearly exhausted with momentary apprehensions of some sudden change in the tiger's—for he seemed only waiting for me to stir to spring upon me—I now became imbued with a fresh fear to disconcert me. If Ramsay should come, what would be the immediate consequences?

I trembled for the result when he should be heard at the door, putting in his key, opening, entering, and perhaps drunk and staggering. I should not dare to shout, to tell him who and where I was, and that the tiger was at liberty; and if Ramsay should be the worse for liquor, he might not understand my exclamation, be himself helpless, and in any event might make so much noise as to startle the tiger at once into active operations, which might end only with the immolation of both of us. Then, too, the sanguinary monster might escape into the street, and, pursuing his work of slaughter: but my reflections were not carried far in that direction. I confess that my principal fear was about myself—and the tiger.

There is no accounting for the irregularity of one's train of thought, and mixed emotions when his mind is greatly excited. Appalled as I was, there was yet room enough in my soul for anger; and I was angry. My anger was not with the tiger for being loose, but with Bill Ramsay for allowing him to get so; for how, except through the very reprehensible remissness of Ramsay, could the tiger have thus released himself from confinement within his bars and acquired free range of the premises? Had the keeper left his door unlocked? Could the tiger have burst the door himself, and afterward torn the front bars out? for there were none to this cage. Or, might it be that this was not the tiger's cage, but one into which, leaving his own he had escaped?

This last conjecture I thought must be the true one. This cage must be an unfinished one; and the tiger, liking a change of quarters, had thus manifested his approval, both of the change and the range afforded. This made me exasperated with Bill Ramsay; and the possibility that he might be the first and only victim did not much grieve me—though I had some respect for him, as he always treated me well when I visited my uncle.

It was at this stage of my thoughts when the long-anticipated time of the crisis arrived.

I heard the voice of Bill Ramsay outside, in the street. He was singing asong. If drunk, he was partly so.

I heard his key in the door; and tremblingly alive to the occasion, I divided my attention. Threw my eyes on the tiger and my ears toward Bill Ramsay, determined to remain motionless, and let him, as he approached, take the first spring?

I heard the door shut and locked. The tiger remained quiet. I heard Ramsay walking up to me. Still the tiger did not stir.

"Craft," thought I. "Or, is the tiger deaf, or asleep with his eyes open?"

"Hullo, here!" now cried Ramsay, standing over me in astonishment, and touching me with his foot. "What are you doing here Raymond?"

I looked up and told him to hush, mark that tiger, and open that cage for us both to get into as soon as possible.

"What are you afraid of a stuffed tiger?" shouted he, laughing so heartily that I heard a lion growl at him, some monkeys chattering, and my pet goat began to ba-a

"Stuffed?" said I; and I got up at once and found it so; for, as Ramsay explained, this Royal Bengal Tiger had been dead three months; but having been so large and beautiful, my uncle had him stuffed by a Frenchman, and sent home on the preceding evening.

This, then, accounted for my miraculous escape and no thanks to the tiger nor my prudence in keeping quiet so long.

I have only to add that I got my goat, and went home with him in the early morning stage. But, speaking of intense fright turning the hair grey in a short space of time; I looked in the glass, and, to my surprise—I found one perceptible change in it; it seemed as if it curled more beautifully than before. But this I attributed to the new hair oil I was using.

THE BANDIT MONKEY.

He Robs Little Boys Who are on Their Way Home From Market.

Monkeys in the East Indies are very bold and mischievous. An English resident at Ahmedabad, in Guzerat, about three hundred miles north of Bombay, gives a droll instance of this.

While taking a morning stroll he saw a small boy of 12 carrying a basket of the edible vegetables called "brinjals" to his parents' house for breakfast. In passing the house of the local policeman, this urchin was impudently attacked by a huge blue-faced ape, which suddenly emmerged from the trees, rushed on the boy, and seized two of the brinjals.

The youngster's cries and screams brought out the constable with his stick. The monkey was too quick for him, and, leaping on the roof of his cottage, began to eat his ill-gotton fruit with contemptuous gestures of scorn and defiance.

Monkeys are a great pest in India, because they are privilegd and protected around Hindoo temples, one species—the Radjakado—with a black beard, especially being regarded as a descendant of Hanuman, the fabulous monkey-god, an incarnation of Siva, whose exploits are related in the famous mythological romance of the "Ramayana," where he commands an army of monkeys assisting the hero, Rama, to march through the forests of Southern India, to defeat the king of giants, to recover the captured wife of Rama and to conquer the Island of Lanka or Ceylon.

A Live Commissioner.

Uncle Silas Brown is very much gratified over his election to the office of School Commissioner in the town of S——. He asserted that when he assumed the duties of his position he intended to go into it for all it was worth, and make his influence felt. So no one was surprised at the first meeting of the new board to find him in a pugnacious mood.

"I've heern lots o' complaints about the lack of eddication about these parts," he said, rising to his feet. "Now there ain't no excuse for this here state of affairs. There's plenty of eddication in the world. More'n enough to go around, and our kids have got ter have it. So I move, Mr. Chairman, that this committee find out jest how many boys 'n' gals there are in town, 'n' then get enough eddication to supply 'em all, whatever it costs. I'd like to know whar we'd be ef we hadn't got our full share of it. Give the kids a chancet."

It is a pleasure to announce that Uncle Silas's remarks were received with applause, and that the "kids" got quite as much education as most of them could stand.—Harper's Magazine.

Distinguisned Astronomers.

Four generations of the Cassini family have filled positions of honor as directors of the observatory at Paris.

First on the list was Giovanni Domenico Cassini; he was a learned man, and was known as an astronomer, astrologist, and Professor of Astronomy at Bolonga University. He died at the ripe age of eighty-seven in 1712.

Jacques Cassini followed his father in professional cares, and was greatly esteemed for learning and wisdom; his death occured in 1756.

Cesar Francois Cassini, and later his son Jacques, in turn walked in the steps of their forefathers, the elder yielding up his cares and his life at the age of seventy, and the fourth and last when long past fourscore.

Cigars Must be Kept Moist.

Cigars must be kept in a more or less moist atmosphere, else they will dry out and crumble apart. Some years ago a genius who knew that fact invented a box so arranged that the atmosphere within it could be fed with moisture from a wet slab of compressed sponge or blotting paper. To-day the best cigar stores in the city are built like these moistened boxes. Material for holding water is kept in frames, like panels, in the walls, and the air within the store-rooms is kept incessantly moist.—New York Sun.

Purify
Your Blood

At the coming of spring the blood should be purified, as impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect the health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint of impurity, drives out scrofulous humors and germs of disease, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

"Every spring for years I have made it a practice to take from three to five bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, because I know it purifies the blood and thoroughly cleanses the system of all impurities." W. H. LAWRENCE, Editor Agricultural Epitomist, Indianapolis, Ind.

A cough or cold is a spy which has stealthily come inside the lines of health and is there to discover some vulnerable point in the fortification of the constitution which is guarding your well-being. That point discovered the spy reports it to the enemy on the outside. The enemy is the changeable winter climate. If the cold gets in, look out for an attack at the weak point. To avoid this, shoot the spy, kill the cold, using SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda as the weapon. It is an expert cold slayer, and fortifies the system against Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases (specially in Children). Especially helpful for children to prevent their taking cold. Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

CREOLE AND PURITAN

By T. C. DE LEON.

Author of "Four Years in Rebel Capitals," "Juny," "Cross Purposes."

DEDICATED TO HON. HENRY WATTERSON,
In Memory of Schoolboy Days, Still Unforgotten, as Our Shadows Lengthen
Toward the Sunset.

Copyright, 1890, by J. B. Lippincott Company, and published by arrangement with them.

Twisting round, Latour beheld the sheik, scarce three hundred paces off, almost even with him, his magnificent mare bounding along at racing speed. Plainly, he had shaken off the rest in that great burst of speed; but the sheik's mare would not be left, spite of the wide detour she made.

One glance toward the approaching cavalry—no nearer seemingly in the brief interval—and his hand instinctively stretched for his pistol. A dead shot, even at speed, he could easily drop the Arab out of saddle. But that would be declaration of war, and he was the pasha's officer; the Arabs so far having done no hostile act. Without time to question her, he had assumed Edith's capture; but he was certain no violence had been shown her.

Through his brain all this flashed like lightning; then over it all rose the gladiator spirit, somewhere hidden in us all, creeping up in his blood. One more backward glance showed the Arabs pulling up, a thousand yards behind, hopeless of reaching him before the escort. Only the tall old chief could hope this, and—now even with Said—he bore down on his quarry in circling swoop.

Again Latour, almost reluctantly, called upon his horse. A brief burst of speed, with laboring flanks and straining muscles. Then he drew rein again, the escort not six hundred yards away.

But the soldier's eyes were not on them. They blazed steadily upon the sheik, with the brutal light of battle, and through the set teeth came the muttered words:

"Only one man—an old one, too!"

Closer sweeps the mare in circling swoop! Still in his steady stride the stately horse bears on his double burden.

Closer still, faint cries of Arabs cheering their chief's triumph; and Ahmed drops his leveled carbine, useless at that distance.

So close now the snap of the fluttering bournous is plain to Edith's ear, his dark face plain to both, as the sheik leans over his mare's neck and digs sharp stirrups into her sides.

To Ahmed's straining eyes the mare and horse seem in collision.

But Latour's eyes gleam into the Arab's, his left hand firm upon the rein, his right poising the heavy pistol.

Ten yards—five yards! The gleaming spear head close to Latour's breast; the sinewy left arm stretched to grasp his prey!

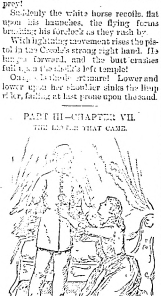
Suddenly the white horse recoils, flat upon his haunches, the flying forms brushing his forelock as they rush by.

With lightning movement rises the pistol in the Creole's strong right hand. He lunges forward, and the butt crashes full upon the sheik's left temple!

On sped the desert mare! Lower and lower upon her shoulder sinks the limp rider, falling at last prone upon the sand.

PART III—CHAPTER VII.

THE LETTER THAT CAME.



With a low cry the woman sank upon her knees.

The cavalry had deployed in open skirmish line, their speed unchecked, and ere the foremost Arab had raced up to the fallen sheik and helped him rise, Said's stride had borne his riders through its lines.

The rally sounded; Ahmed was by his commander's side, crying devoutly:

"Allah kerim!" ("God is great!")—adding in French. "Madame is safe—perfectly, I hope!"

But Lady Martindale, even as she answered that she was, pressed her hand quickly to her side.

"How thoughtless I am!" Latour exclaimed, and he spoke in Arabic to his orderly, who vaulted from saddle and knelt on one knee by Said.

Edith placed her foot upon the Syrian's knee and stepped to the sand, but its heat blistered her feet, and, dizzy, she reeled and pressed her hand again on her side.

Latour sprang from his saddle and supported her as he cried:

"To think that I forgot your head was bare!"

Hastily untwisting the veil from his helmet he fashioned it into a light turban, while the orderly, unrolling the cantle blanket, improvised a side saddle by twisting it about the pommel.

"I fear we are making a soldier of you too fast," Latour said. "But there is no shade nearer than the Tombs, and this is the best hat we can offer."

He lifted her to the saddle, with a faint smile for thanks, as Ahmed poured some cognac from a very Parisian flask, diluting it with water from the orderly's canteen. Hot as the mixture was Edith drank the stimulant eagerly. Then she turned to Latour, saying low, in English:

"I owe you more than life! But it is very sweet to owe everything to you! How did you know?"

"I did not know, only guessed," he answered simply. "Those Arabs last night, Harris' riderless horse— Oh! captain," he interrupted himself, "send two men to scout the Shoubra road and notify Lord Martindale."

"And Harris," Edith asked in French; "is he safe?"

Ahmed answered that he had sent him to Cairo behind a trooper, exhausted, but not hurt.

"Poor fellow! he fought desperately for me," she added. "He knocked down the Arab who seized my bridle, and another, before they struck him from his horse with a lance butt! Oh, how much my rashness has risked for you all!"

They were galloping toward the Tombs, one of the officers on either hand of the lady.

"It was a bold play for ransom, Ahmed," Latour said, "to capture Lady Martindale in the very shadow of the citadel. We shall have to teach these Bedouins a lesson."

"Well, you began at the head," Ahmed laughed. "It was a grand stoke, colonel! How the black old sheitan tumbled! But it was lucky I was out of range. I might have killed him; then—pouf! more war, and banishment for me, to Fazougli!"

Latour smiled at his junior's indorsement of his own view; but he spoke no more until the Tombs were reached, and blankets spread for the lady, on the very spot where she had stood the previous night. And soon after Lord Martindale rode up to the spot. He was badly wilted; and he rode ungracefully, though safely, with short stirrups and a stooping seat.

"So you found her, really!" he said, dismounting, to Latour and the young Turk. "Thanks! Awfully good of you to take the trouble! Deuced hot ride she must have had, though! As for Harris, you know, I'll discharge the booby."

"The 'booby' acted like—a man!" Lady Martindale said coldly, overhearing only the last words, and Latour, awaking to sudden anxiety as to their condition, strode off to the horses, leaving husband and wife alone.

Lord Martindale did not greet his spouse with much effusion. An American would have rushed upon her, and a resounding kiss would have smacked on the desert air. A Frenchman would have clasped her to his breast, held her off at arm's length and scattered tu and toi profusely about the ruined Tombs. Lord Martindale loved Edith with an idolatrous worship, but her ever imperious habit, with strange whims more apparent of later months, had forced him to the defensive. And now he only said, as he pulled his damp whiskers:

"Glad you are safe, my lady, really! Deuced strange freak though, and rather indelicate, I must say!"

A hot flush mounted to the woman's face. Her eyes quickly assured her that Latour was out of earshot; and the gleam in them grew cold as the ring in her voice that answered:

"It becomes the delicacy of the seventeenth Lord Martindale to greet his wife with a reproach, after leaving it to strangers to rescue her from deadly peril."

"Deadly stuff!" responded his lordship, with more candor than courtesy. "You've upset the garrison and made a nasty mess, you know. But where 'peril' comes in, I can't see, really!"

"Of course not; you rarely do see!" the woman rejoined slowly. "But it was natural that there should be peril, and equally natural that you—should avoid it!"

The Englishman's red face grew scarlet at the unjust taunt; but he controlled himself by a strong effort as he answered:

"Edith! You know you do not mean"—

"Precisely what I say," she interrupted quickly, but coldly. "I was captured by Arabs, torn from my horse, insulted! God only knows what the end might not have been, but for the—man who rescued me!"

Over his lordship's face incredulity, anxiety, joy, rapidly chased each other. He made as if he would speak; but wonder, replacing anger, kept back the words.

"However, my Lord Martindale," the woman went on quietly, but with a sneer in the low voice, "you have to thank him for more than that. Had he not come the Arabs would have made you—pay ransom!"

The man caught quick breath and stared at her a second before the cruel force of the insult struck him. Then the red surge swept over his face again, dropping suddenly out of it and leaving him ghastly pale. But he raised his head with quiet dignity, and only said:

"Enough of this, Lady Martindale."

"I am charmed that you agree with me—for once," she answered in a voice that might have spoken society commonplace in Vanity Fair. "Indeed, there has been not only enough, but too much of this—as I have urged when suggesting a separation. When I urged this before you called it a whim. But it is to your interest to listen now. You have said that my indelicacy compromises you here. You had best be careful that more than that does not compromise you before—your peers! Col. Latour!"—she raised her voice, calling quietly and cheerfully, "Lord Martindale thinks we should not detain you longer, and I am quite rested now."

The Englishman spoke no word. He lifted his wife courteously, even tenderly, to the improvised saddle. To Latour's query about his side of the quest, the peer replied:

"Struck the Shoubra road and could see no living thing; headed north again, when a tall Arab rode toward me from this direction, you know. The beggar was making signals. Couldn't speak any language, you see; but his pantomine would have shamed Drury Lane, really. Why, he actually asked if I was looking for a lady and a groom; and before I could answer told me they had ridden to the Shoubra palace. So off I galloped one way and he the other."

"Clever rascals, these Beduoins," Latour said with a smile. "That was the same fellow I saw at the Tombs; but he took me for a native."

"Sharp dodge, though," his lordship said. "And I gave the beggar a liberal bachschisch, too."

"What a pity!"

The words were naturally spoken; but Lady Martindale gave one quick flash of her eyes into her husband's that bowled him out of the conversation until they reached the hotel entrance. Then Latour said to the lady:

"How wonderfully you have borne the heat, fatigue and danger! And you have eaten nothing since"——

He interrupted himself to throw his arm suddenly around her. Lady Martindale, with perversity truly feminine, had reeled in her saddle as he spoke; and he caught her just as she slid from it in a dead faint.

"I can carry her," Lord Martindale said, bluntly, springing from his horse. He took her in his arms as though she were an infant, but with the tenderness of a mother's touch and with a great love softening his face. But the Briton's horror of a scene in public rose even then, and he passed rapidly through the few sleepy donkey boys, alone visible at that hour.

Reaching Lady Martindale's apartments, they were found open, but Pearson, her maid, absent; and Latour—who followed, pale but very calm—rang fiercely for her.

"It is nothing, my lord—only a faint from over excitement," Latour said, feeling for the missing pulse anxiously. "You had best cut the laces of her habit. Have you any ammonia?"

"Some in this; chloroform, too," he answered, lugging a heavy traveling case onto the marble slab. But it was locked; and the heavy hasp resisted his strength. A pair of scissors were forced under it; the lock yielded with a loud snap. Unbalanced by the recoil, it slid from the table with a heavy thud, sending toilet bottles rolling over the rug. The force of the fall burst a locked portfolio flap, also; and letters, cards and photographs scattered about the floor.

But the ammonia was found, and gradually the blood began to show under the pallid olive of her skin. Then the heavy eyelids grew tremulous and a shivering sigh parted the purplish lips; but the slim white hand the soldier's chafed gave no returning warmth.

"Has she been subject to these turns?" he asked Lord Martindale, who was hastily unscrewing stoppers and sniffing at the bottles.

"Scarcely; once before—at Paris, after one of our opera suppers with Gen. Everett. Here's the chloroform."

He poured the fluid liberally upon a handkerchief, and was about to place it to her lips as Sir Roger Arnyffe pushed aside the portiere and hastily entered the room, most apropos.

The surgeon quickly tested pulse and temperature. Then more anxiously he tried the heart, saying abruptly:

"Have you used that d——d stuff? No! Then throw that handkerchief out of the window. Hand me that ammonia. Cut her stays and get her to bed; we must get her heart action regular again."

Latour waited in the outer room until Sir Roger came out and said:

"She is over it now; quite herself and breathing easily. She sends you word to go to breakfast, as your last words she heard reminded her that none of you had had any."

The Creole marched over to his own quarters and promptly swallowed a heavy draught of cognac. Fasting since yesterday's dinner anxiety and exercise made even his iron nerves shaky enough to need the unusual stimulant. Then a hasty tub, a few brief orders for the day, and he threw himself upon his divan.

The furnace heat of Egyptian high noon poured down without, but within the windows, closed at dawn retained the coolness of the night air. Only faint sounds crept in from street or court below, mingling soothingly with the bubbling of Latour's water pipe. Soon its tube slipped from his fingers, and he slept heavily and dreamlessly.

It was near sunset when he awoke from long, refreshing sleep. Then he dined hastily and walked to the hotel.

"Her ladyship is much better," Lord Martindale replied to his anxious query. "Sir Roger said it was nervous exhaustion—heat and excitement, you know. Deuced glad you came, though. The consul general is very urgent for me to come and give him details of the capture; and I must keep the thing out of the papers, really."

"I have nothing to do, and will stay here gladly," Latour answered quietly. But his heart beat faster, and his lips almost formed the words that rushed to them as the other turned away:

"Poor devil! He loves her, too!"

"Shan't be gone long," Lord Martindale said at the door. Then he turned suddenly, adding, "By Jove! I almost forgot this, really!" He drew a letter from his pocket and handed it to Latour face upward. "The seal must have broken with the fall. Devilish forgetful in Lady Martindale, though. Unpardonable, really! It was in that portfolio I burst!"

Latour took the letter carelessly. But as his eye caught the well known signet the color left his face, and the other's chance words of that noon echoed in his brain and numbed his heart.

In hard, effortful voice he began.

"I meant to ask if, while in Paris, you saw much of—— But I will not detain you now."

Though stunned by a sudden doubt of her his chivalrous sense dominated him. He refused to arraign, even in his own mind, the helpless, suffering woman there, who had yielded so much for love of him.

Lord Martindale stared, then left the room without reply. Latour stood perfectly still, looking closely at the seal. Then he turned the letter over and read the address, "For Col. Adrien Latour-Bey, Army of the Khedive, Cairo, Egypt," and, in the corner, "Courtesy of Lady Martindale."

There could be no error. The letter was for him; directed in the clear, firm writing of Dale Everett!

A gasping breath escaped his lips. Through his mind flashed the fact that she had been two weeks in Egypt—ten days of them constantly with him. Over his face doubt, wonderment and pain chased one another and in his ears sounded clear her words at Sultan Bergook's tomb, "No; he never mentioned your name!"

And ever as their echo came her husband's words at noon, "After one of our opera suppers with Gen. Everett."

Then he turned the letter over. The seal—their class ring at West Point—was not broken, as the other man had said. It was perfect, every line of the signet clear, even the edges of the wax unsplintered.

But the letter was opened! Some sharpest instrument had passed beneath the seal! And again the man's eyes—contempt struggling with wonderment in them—sought the doorway of the next room. Yet again his nobler nature, his lifelong trust that "good blood cannot lie," besides his tenderness for the woman who loved him so sinfully but so well, pleaded for her.

"Pshaw! I am a weak boy!" he muttered. "The letter itself will explain this and its detention by her. Some cant, I warrant, to explain his cowardly wrong to the girl he swore he loved!"

With half smile still in his eyes he slipped the letter from the envelope and began to read. It was long and closely written, but from first line to last it held him spellbound. Eagerly he read those pages to the very last word. Then he began and read them more slowly; this time but one expression on his face, the reflection of a joy tender, deep and calm. And long after they ceased reading that light still shone on the page from eyes that rested on the long loved signature in deepest reverie.

So deep was it that he did not hear the heavy breathing of the English serving maid in the other room, still less the low voice that called her name twice. Living over the long dead past, full resurrected now, he did not note the light rustling of a woman's garments, the fluff of the curtain softly pushed aside, the slender, white clad form that showed beneath it, swept by glorious masses of long, loosened hair.

For one brief instant Edith Martindale gazed on the motionless form before her, with the soft, warm flush creeping beneath her pallid skin, and eyes filled with tender light. Suddenly that light died in them, replaced by the dull, cold gleam of horror; the olive face grew ghastly white, and a gasping sob shivered from her heaving bosom to her lips.

Then the man started up. His eyes met hers. In their cold, hard glitter—not flashing in anger, not even lightened with scorn, but calm and relentless—the woman read her doom!

Adrien Latour rose to his feet quietly, on his face the same evil look it had worn under the orange trees of the old Spanish garden. But now it seared not only her who felt it through the awful stillness, but it blistered equally his own soul—black, unjust, hideous in his sight!

For seconds the two stood thus, wordless, motionless—he with the past of generations shamed upon his face, hers with the ghost of a dead hope making its olive ashen.

Then she stretched forth those gleaming, rounded arms, with pitiful, despairing obsecration, her voice a wail for that hope her own hands had slain.

"Adrien, all my sin—God knows!—was through my mad love!"

There was no passion in the man's voice; it went to her soul, inexorable, freezing.

"As a boy I loved a true woman; how well I never knew before. Fool that I was! I lost her and shamed myself! A word from you had saved us then. Knowing that you ruined three lives; and one other you"——

With a low cry the woman sank upon her knees.

"Man! have you no pity? God may forgive me, if you will!"

The same dull voice answered her cry:

"I am not your judge. As you have sinned, what have I not done? But never, in this world, will I look upon your face again!"

He had passed from the room; the woman still kneeling, with the dead hope frozen in her face.

PART III—CHAPTER VIII.

EXPIATION.

Latour-Bey strode rapidly to his quarters. Scarce a half hour before he had left that gateway; but he had lived years in that interim. He penned a hasty telegram to the minister of war that he would report at Alexandria by the next morning's train; then a brief note to the governor of Cairo requesting conge. Summoning his orderly, he gave directions for packing some clothing and a few designated papers; then sat down and wrote full instructions for the Turkish colonel next in rank and for Capt. Ahmed Mustafa.

All this Latour did with the methodical quiet of his regular life before it had been broken in upon by the Martindales. Indeed, the memory of the past ten days seemed literally blotted out from his life, or as an episode of the far past, with no bearing upon the present.

Finishing his writing he lighted his chibouque, unfolded Dale Everett's letter, and carefully read once more every word of its well remembered pages. Dated at Paris, six weeks before, the letter began:

"Constantly of late, here and at London, Lady Martindale and I have talked of you, and of those dear old days, before war separated us, and some later cause, never since explicable to me, finally divided us. Ignorant as I am why you forced the duel on me, I have

Now It Is Passed.

The Dull Lenten Season and the Festivities of Easter Have Come and Gone.

Easter at St. Mary's Church and at the Presbyterian Church —"Atonement"

At the Opera House Monday evening A Grand Success— The Dance.

Easter sun never dawned more gaily nor warmed the earth more fervently than on the last Easter Sunday. Services at St. Mary's were well attended. The choir rendered Lambillote's Paschal Mass. This brilliant production was done credit to by the choir. The solos were especially pleasing. The choir has not undergone any change in the past year except in organist, Phil. A. Kaufer now acting as such. Mrs. W. A. Schreiter and Mrs. John Holzknecht are the sopranos, Phil. A. Kaufer, tenor; L. A. Kaufer, baritone; J. N. Nimesgern, bass; J. .P Harren, alto. The solos by L. A. Kaufer were very fine. He has a rich baritone that was very suitable for the difficult solos. Mrs. Schreiter and Mrs. Holzknecht are two of Red Lake Falls' leading sopranos and their rendition of the different music did great credit to them. Rev. Ig. Balluff delivered an eloquent oration on the effect of the Resurrection on the body as well as the soul and society in general.

At the Presbyterian church the Easter services were held in the evening and were mainly assumed by the children. The front of the church was beautified by flowers which were placed in a huge bank that lent freshness and exquisite delicacy to the scene. The Sunday school classes had been drilled in their different parts, and right well did they succed. The children were ably assisted by Mrs. J. D. Marshall, Mrs. Chas. Crowell, the Misses Zaiser, Mr. Rodgers and A. D. Wishard. Following is the program; Song by school, "Easter Bells"; "Glad Easter is Here" by Aggie Rodgers. Song by four boys and three girls—Aggie Rodgers, Rachel Taylor, Mollie Lonson, Scott Hall, Samuel Hunt, Albert Lonson, Alfred Schaffer. Reading, Mrs. Crowell. Song "For Me" by four boys. Reading Miss Reichel. Song by male quartette "Christ Arose". Recitation by Emma Zaiser "I seem to hear my Mother's Voice" Recitation Resurection Song by Henry Davis, Song by school "Easter Bells are Ringing". Recitation by Bessie Hunt "These Flowers I Lay at His Dear Feet". Duett "Lilies of the Field". Mrs. Marshall and Emma Zaiser, assisted by Mr Rodgers and Mr. Wishard. Recitation by six boys. Song by quartette—"Ring the Joy Bells." Recitation by Louisa Lonson—"Little Children." Recitation, "Pilgrim's List," by Henry Davis. Recitation by Lydia Fletcher, "No Death." Song by quartette—"O What a Morning That Will be."

"ATONEMENT".

The Easter celebration ended Monday evening with the production by our local dramatic troupe of the drama "Atonement" (Les Miserables). The play is one of the finest dramatic conglomerations ever compiled, and one needs but know its foundation stone is the masterpiece of France's favorite novelist to realize that no better selection could have been made by the troupe. "Atonement!" The very title impresses a sense of solemn grandeur on any refined and appreciative mind. Not a hitch was manifest in the three hours consumed in the presentation. Messrs. Theo. Garceau on the zyther and Helmuth Zaiser accompanist on the guitar opened the entertainment. What is there that can suggest a sweeter combination of soft melody than the strains that issued from these two instruments. The overture was greeted with applause, and then the curtain rose on the play. The stage was divided, of necessity into two compartments in the first scene. The left one third was occupied by the "bishop's cot" while the remainder was a busy bustling scene of peasants, dressed in the gay costumes of southern France, gracefully gliding over the stage to the strains of a sweet waltz from the zyther and guitar. The make up of the peasants was very striking, and this opening scene was considered the best of any ever seen here before. The costumes were beautiful, gaudy peasant dress, and the make up of the faces suggested more than amateur taste, the ladies with their rosy checks and lips while the gentlemen's vied it not in beauty, at least in color. The ladies were Mrs. W. A. Schreiter, Mrs. John A. Duffy, Mrs. W. R. Dargan, Miss Tillie Kaufer and Miss Mollie Duffy. Their appearance suggested rhapturous beauty, flushed by the bloom of youth. The audience went wild over them. The gentlemen were Messrs. L. A. Kaufer, Fred Zeh and Erve McCaffrey. The Bishop at this juncture appeared upon the scene, in the person of Mr. Ed. Garceau. The representation was very realistic. He had a long gray beard and gray hair, priest's cassock and hat, and no one could suggest an improvement. Mr. Joe Dargan took the part of Vicomte Cyprien D'Arbel, and, dressed from head to foot in a stylish horseman's garb, made a very good impression on the audience. He had a good conception of the character. Miss Sue Boyle, as "Fantine, the Provence Rose," made a hit, and walked away with a good share of the honors of the evening. Her voice, so plaintive and sweet, seemed to vibrate and gain melody from the true woman's heart within. As the Fantine of the prologue, with love and expectancy in every glance, with innocence and trustfulness never better portrayed, and, well, with her personal charms toned and heightened for the character, she was simply irresistible. As Fantine in the first Epoch, in the death scene, the true artist cropped out, and the audience was deeply effected. Miss Lizzie Boyle as "Magloire" and "Madame Renard" was very amusing and created much laughter in the house. Both these characters were taken to perfection, and pronounced by the audience as among the best conceived and executed. Mr. Will Crawford as "Jean Valjean" merited great praise. As the Mayor his acting was good, but the make up deteriorated from the effect. The character was very heavy, but for a young man of his years, he did it well. Judas Renard was there, personated by Mr. Fred Zeh. This was Fred's first attempt at gaining distinction as an actor. He was at once a comedian and a villain. Judas Renard was none the less, vicious and shrewish for his betrayal. The aucritics set Judas Renard down as a success. The part was one of the heaviest in the play, much of the development of the plot hinging on it. He deserves the success he achieved as "Judas Renard." "Javert" the Inspector was assumed by Phil. A. Kaufer. The critics pronounced it one of the well taken characters of the play. His make up was good. The character of Javert is difficult of execution but was not misplaced. "Sister Sulpice" was Mrs. W. T. Spillane. If personal attraction were the only ingredients of success, it would be hers—but to this was added a perfect conception of the roll and such acting as only Mrs. Spillane is capable of. She is a prime favorite with the troupe and her success was equally agreeable to all. "Eponine" the poor neglected, yet deserving maiden, by Mrs. W. P. Dargan was another of the hits of the evening. "Eponine" was pronounced superb, Mrs. Dargan, in voice and looks conveyed impressively the empassioned abandon of her soul, and the death scene was applauded to the echo. All will be pleased to see her on the boards again in this or any other character. She is a new member of the troupe and an invaluable acquisition. She engrafted herself into the heart of the audience at once by her nonchalent grace and genius. Mr. W. T. Spillane was perfectly at home in his comedy part of "Gobeion, commonly called Daddy". His appearance on the stage and his least utterance was the signal for an outburst of mirth from the audience, His identification was not only a matter of difficulty to the officers of the court, but to the audience as well. "Goberon, commonly called daddy" was a success. Wilfrid Lemieux impersonated "Gavroche", the street arab. Wilfrid's appearance was greeted with applause and he retired with the unanimous approbation of all present. L. A. Kaufer as the judge, Ed. Garceau as the attorney for the defence and Richard Nagle as the prosecuting attorney made a strong trio. To Erve McCaffrey fell the task of depicting the contending emotions and final triumph of Marius' affection for Cosette. His appearance was very suitable for this and the Marius of the play found a creditable reflection in him. Little Agnes Garceau as "Little Cosette" and Trouchy Holzknecht as "Little Eponine" were by no means the least features of the play. Miss Mollie Duffy acted "Cosette" to the satisfaction of everybody. Miss Mollie's graceful bearing, a pleasure to the eye, and part of her individuality as well as her other personal charms, all blended into the character of "Cosette" so admirably that, with a slight effort on her part, it became very realistic. Richard Nagle as "Raol," and James Mead the student, were very effective in the success of the play. Ed Garceau as "Brevet" was also well taken. Lauritz Jensen was one of the best of the troupe. His part of "Cochapaille" was nothing before he took hold of it and wove a copy of the original from his fancy. He is a good actor and received great credit for his work. Prof. Cooper, Prof. Freund and F. Poessel furnished music during several acts that would have gratified the ears of a Mozart. One would have to travel far to hear a better clarionette player. The instrumental music behind the curtain was by Miss Minnie Zaiser. Taking the production of "Atonement" as a whole it was a glorious success, and but little amateurishness was manifest. True, it is a play worthy the efforts of the best actors, but the competent critics of the town pronounce the rendition as superb, the entertainment, with music included, as a presentation that would do credit to any standard company, and this play as the best ever produced by any troupe here.

THE SCENERY.

The scenery deserves special mention. There were two full new sets of scenes. one a street prospective, and the other a mountainous scene. It would have been difficult to make a distinction in favor of either. The mountain scene was perhaps the most striking. Down rugged gorges splashed and pattered a foaming mountain torrent. At the right a stray rivulet turned the wheels of an old mill that nestled on the hill side, cosey and brown. At the left was the outskirts of the village of Grasse, where the church loomed up conspicious on a high elevation and other houses peeped from among the trees. The wings represented groves in the forest lining the mountain. Perhaps the prettiest part of the whole painting were the distant mountain peeks, snow capped, shining in the light reflected by two bright burners, the appearance was immense. This, together with the gaily dressed peasants, made the opening scene one of striking beauty. The street scene was a more finished production. Rev. Balluff had many congratulations on this work. The prospective ran back for hundreds of feet it seemed, massive structures lining the sides. The light and shadows were admirably adminstered, and at the right upper entrance reached the climax of perfection where the light, bursting in on the street, bathed the corner in rich radiance. The finish of the painting is very fine, and the decorations such as the festoons and chandaliers and awnings and window fixtures were a fine feature.

The dance after the play was a grand success. About forty couples occupied the floor. The music by Prof. Cooper, Prof. Friend and F. Poessel was very good and the dancers were all highly pleased. We now have an orchestra that can't be beaten in Northern Minnesota.

Lambert Lights.

We do not get spring so early as people thought.

The members of the Lambert church are talking of rebuilding the Catholic church.

Poor petitioners they got badly left but they are used to that, so I hope it will not hurt their feelings very much.

Miss Josa Pernavolt of Terrebonne is a guest of her sister, Mrs. Hance. She will visit for a few days.

Mr. F. Lajasey is at Lambert making a tobacco cutter for the Lajambe Bros.

Well Mr. F., you can neither catch them on the fly nor on the nest, can you?

A crowd of Lambert folks went to Crookston this week and say they had a nice trip.

Conrad Lajambe says he is ready for spring work.

Mr. Quesnell of McIntosh was to Mass in Lambert Sunday.

Mr. Howells now prepares his matter for the press on a typewriter. He says the click of the instrument sets his thoughts in motion. Wonder if it will ever put his thoughts on to a plot for any of his novels.

It is announced that Justin McCarthy has already found the task of leading the Irish party too much for him. His health has broken down. He leaves England shortly for the continent, this time to recruit, not to negotiate.

Vermont's state missionary society has employed two of Evangelist Moody's pretty girl graduates to do missionary work in Vermont and they have begun their labors at Eden. They appear to have the right notion of beginning at the beginning.

The stories that another Indian war is impending must not be given too much credit. The Indians may be dissatisfied and disposed to go on the war path now that the grass is soon to get green, but the recent experiences on the war path are not likely to be lost on the wiser bucks and squaws.

A white man in Georgia, charged with criminal assault upon a mulatto girl, has been found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. This is the first instance of the kind on record and is an encouraging sign that justice is beginning to be impartially administered in the South regardless of race.

Cremation is taking a great boom in Boston. The furnaces, however, must needs be heated something hotter than the "sacred fire" of Ibon or the salad oil of Howells. The effort to take beans by using Ella Wheeler Wilcox's "Poems of Passion" is, however, an experiment they might easily try.

The "Mafia" was originally a vigilance committee organized to "secure a better administration of justice." It is imported from Sicily, but only after it was made there on the exact model of a native American Bald Knob society of "Regulators." It is the White-Cap league with a more musical name and in the last stage of its progress.

A Pittsburg man, according to a dazzling dispatch, has just discovered that a curious piece of stone he has had in his possession for twenty years contains diamonds worth $1,400,000. If this Pittsburg man is constructed on the ordinary plan it is probable that, once the first glow of the discovery dies away, he will never be able to forgive himself for recklessly losing twenty years' interest on $1,400,000.

Consumption and the mortality resulting from it have decreased steadily in England from 1872 to 1876, the greatest decrease being in the years from 1873 to 1877, when the effects of the new sanitary law became first apparent. There is greater decrease in agricultural than in factory districts. More women die than men. In the whole world consumption has decreased with the better comprehension of sanitary laws in general, and especially the laws that regulate this disease.

Edmond Blanch, manager of the Casino at Monte Carlo, has turned over to the police of Paris a batch of telegrams from prominent Parisian journalists, including a member of the Chamber of Deputies, which reveal a huge blackmailing scheme which has been carried on for years. The telegrams demand money else horrible tales of suicides at Monte Carlo will be published. The good people of this country have probably had their dear hearts wrung over many a sickening story of suicide at Monte Carlo which was concocted in the mind of some blackmailing Parisian journalist.

The oldest white man, probably, in the United States whose age can be cleary authenticated, is Eli Gray, who resides at Roxbury, Delaware county, N. Y. The records in the town clerk's office at Weston, Fairfield county, Conn., attest the fact that Mr. Gray was born in that town on Dec. 16, 1785, and while yet a youth removed to New York State. Jay Gould's father was the first male child born in the town of Roxbury. Mr. Gray says he remembers the date of the occurrence, Oct. 3, 1792, and he was intimate with the family until past middle age. Mr. Gray's mother, as is also shown by the town records of Weston, lived to be 120 years old. Mr. Gray lives in a little hut near Roxbury and, though failing mentally and physically, can still give many reminiscences of olden times.

A WOMAN THE CAUSE

A Philadelphia Man Returns Home Suddenly and Makes an Unpleasant Discovery.

He Finds His Wife in the Arms of Another, Whom He Promptly Treats to Buckshot.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 31.—Early this morning John Hayes, aged twenty-seven years, shot and seriously wounded Andrew McFarland, about the same age, who boarded with him, and whom he caught in a compromising position with his young wife.

Hayes is a locomotive fireman. He returned home unexpectedly from work this morning and found his wife in McFarland's room. The enraged husband grabbed up McFarland's gun, which stood in a corner, and placing the weapon almost against the latter's shoulder pulled the trigger. The large shot with which the gun was loaded tore a frightful hole in McFarland's shoulder.

Mrs. Hayes ran screaming into the street in her night clothes. The husband went at once to a station and surrendered himself. McFarland was taken to a hospital, where his arm was amputated at the shoulder. The physicians have some hope of saving his life. Hayes is in prison. Mrs. Hayes and a lady boarder are in custody as witnesses.

Hayes says the discovery of his wife's unfaithfulness was a terrible surprise to him as he had no reason to suspect her.

COCCO'S STILETTO.

A Jersey Dago Plunges His Knife Into the Bosom of His Sister-in-Law.

Cambria, N. J., March 31.—Investigations to-day revealed the full particulars of the tragedy enacted last night at Cedar Brook, in this county. Dominico Filippo Cocco, an Italian, aged twenty-nine years, during a quarrel with his sister-in-law, Giovinia Dionore, seventeen years old, plunged a stilleto into her breast, causing almost instant death.

Cocco separated from his wife some months ago, and last night he inquired around Cedar Brook for his father-in-law's residence, and finally located the house, which he reached at about dusk. He did not enter the house, but called for his wife to come outside. This she declined to do, being afraid of him, but her sister went out and engaged in conversation with the husband, the father meanwhile standing in the doorway. Finally Cocco became enraged at something said by the father, and, drawing a stilette, he attempted to reach the old man, declaring he would kill him, but the daughter threw herself before him, crying out: "You can only get at my father after you have killed me."

He thereupon plunged the weapon into the girl's breast and ran away. He spent the night in the woods, and, eluding the searching parties, that were upon his trail, came to this city, where he was arrested upon alighting from the train.

SHAMEFUL SCENES.

Chinamen Not Permitted to Bury Their Dead in Peace.

Pittsburg, Pa. March 31.—The Chinamen of Pittsburg, contrary to the general belief in regard to their burials, do not send their dead to China, but own a lot in Uniondale cemetery in which they are buried. This afternoon one of their number, Jeu Seu, was buried with every rite and observance attending Chinese obsequies. Jeu Seu was a high Mason, and a long procession of Celestials followed the remains to the grave.

Here a most disgraceful scene ensued, brought about by some 200 Caucasians who tramped over graves, tearing down shrubbery and jostled the timid mourners in order to gratify their curiosity. The Chinese placed chop-sticks and perfumed paper beside the grave, only to have them snatched out of their hands. There were also placed small coins in paper and scattered on and in the grave, but boys and men snatched them up and fought fiercely for possession of the curious mementos.

Cat calls and jeers and howls from the vulgar crowd added to a scene that Pittsburg heartily condemns, the excuse being that the riotous crowd was only made up of the idle, vulgar and lawless.

SHOUTED "HELLO."

And Then Gave It to a Scoundrel Without the "O."

Steubenville, O., March 31.—Amos Weems was shot and instantly killed in this city to-night by Horace Caldwell. They were both young men and had been on a drunken debauch. Caldwell took Weems to his home to sleep, and, while the husband was sleeping off his intoxication, Weems attempted to assault Caldwell's wife. He did not succeed in his designs, Mrs. Caldwell resisting vigorously. Weems then left the house.

To-day the wife told her husband of the attempt made upon her by Weems. Caldwell armed himself with a revolver and went in search of Weems. Meeting him at the Pan Handle railroad crossing, Caldwell shouted "hello," and opened fire upon Weems. Four shots were fired, two of them taking effect, one in Weems' lungs and the other in his side. Weems died in five minutes. Caldwell was locked up.

Not Just the Place to Live.

Kansas City, March 31.—Another big land slide is threatened at the bluffs near Eighteenth and Terrace streets. On account of recent rains the earth has cracked along Terrace street for a distance of several hundred feet, and an entire block of houses which stood thereon and which now hang trembling over the railroad yards, 100 feet below, have been deserted. Tons of earth and rock fell to-night and the crevasse continues to widen. The big slide is expected in a few hours.

Had a Jag of Dynamite.

Brussels, March 31.—The police of Serrange have arrested three anarchists who were caught conveying dynamite in a cart after dark. Precautionary measures have been redoubled in the mining districts.

Was the Wound Self-Inflicted.

Philadelphia, March 31.—Dominico Felliphi Coco, the alleged murderer of his sister-in-law, Juniatta Donone, on Saturday night at Cedar Brook, Camden county, N. J., was arrested and identified by Coroner Jeiries. This afternoon Coco admitted to Prosecutor Jenkins that he stabbed the girl, but claimed that it was done in self-defense, and exhibited a wound on the hand which he said had been inflicted by the dead girl with an ax. The county physician is of the opinion that the wound was self-inflicted. Coco was committed to jail charged with murder. A post mortem will be held on the girl to-morrow.

PERILS TO SHIPPING.

A Spanish Steamer Ashore—The Wreck of the Dictator.

Norfolk, Va., March 31.—A telegram from Hatteras life saving station says a Spanish steamer bound from Galveston, Tex., is ashore five miles south of that station. The vessel is lying easy close to the beach, the captain and crew are on board and there is no present necessity for their leaving the ship. The engineer says the ship is light and is in no immediate danger. There is a strong probability that both vessel and cargo will be saved. The name of the vessel is said to be the Court Queen, but this is evidently a mistake. It is not now known whether or not this is the cotton steamer reported ashore at Ocracoke inlet.

Lieut. Walker, of the United States Life Saving service, arrived at the beach this morning, and is making a rigid investigation into the loss of life in connection with the wreck of the bark Dictator Friday. There is a disposition here now to censure the Seatick station life saving crew for not attempting to launch the life boat, as it was shown that even a smaller boat could make the trip in safety. Two of the men after they got ashore wanted to take the boat back for their comrades, but were not allowed to do so. Only two bodies of those lost on the Dictator have so far been recovered. The body of the first mate is thought to be lashed to the wreck, and the body of the captain's wife is thought to be under the wreck. A patrol has been established on the beach to look out for the bodies as they come to the shore. Capt. Lorgensen and the other survivors arrived at Norfolk to-day.

Savannah, Ga., March 29.—Saturday night at 5:30 a hole was blown in the port boiler of the steamer Farmer, which was on her way to this port from Brunswick. She was between Darien and Doboy when the accident occurred. The noise of the escaping steam caused a panic among the negro deck hands, several of whom rushed overboard, and some of them were drowned. Two other persons, a negro and a white passenger, were rescued by a boat.

REV. DR. CROSBY.

The Celebrated Divine Passes Away—His Last Words.

New York, March 31.—Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby died at 5:30 p. m. to-day at his residence. His end was peaceful. As the bells were ringing for vesper service for Easter day, he asked by sign for a paper and wrote a few lines to his loved ones, to the absent son and daughter in Egypt and the three members of his family at home. The first words of this, his last writing, were: "I know I have to go."

Howard Crosby was born in New York city Feb. 27, 1826. He was of Revolutionary family, his grandfather, Ebenezer Crosby, being surgeon of Gen. Washington's guards. His father was William Bedlow Crosby, the philanthropist. He graduated at the University of New York in 1844. He was called to the professorship of Greek in Rutgers college in 1859, a position he gave up in 1863 to take up the pastorship of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian church, with which he was associated at the time of his demise.

In 1872 he became chancellor of the university, and at the time of his death he was a member of the council of his alma mater. Dr. Crosby was chosen moderator of the general assembly of the Presbyterian church in 1873, and in 1877 he was a delegate to the first Presbyterian general council at Edinburgh. In 1877 he took a leading part in establishing the society for the prevention of vice. He wrote a number of scholarly books on Biblical subjects. Dr. Crosby's interest in public affairs was shown a year since by the active part he took in the interest of the people's municipal league movement which aimed at the purification of local politics. He was a high license advocate, his son, Ernest Crosby, now holding a federal office in Cairo, Egypt, having been the champion of the high license legislation at Albany.

EIGHTEEN MOURNING MAIDENS.

They Sigh in Vain for a Base Deceiver Who Is Now in Kentucky.

Huntington, W. Va., March 31.—Oliver Deacon is very much in demand up in the Tom's creek neighborhood. He was without doubt the most numerously engaged man in all this region. There are eighteen girls who have stated since his escape that they were engaged to be married to Deacon, and that the wedding day fixed in each case was April 20. The most distressing part of the whole affair is that the greater portion of the eighteen maidens spoken of are likely to have living reminders of Deacon. A letter from Deacon, written from Catlettsburg, Ky., says he believes himself safe, as "they don't hang gentlemen in Kentucky."

COOLED DOWN.

The Italians No Longer Agitated Over the New Orleans Episode.

London, March 3 .—The Times correspondent at Rome says that the excitement caused by the lynching at New Orleans has completely subsided. The people generally appreciate the difficulties under which the American government labors, and it is not likely that any pressure will be brought to bear upon the latter. It is convinced that the government will readily make the compensation to adjust matters.

Public opinion goes to show that no sympathy with the lynched Mafia is manifest. Many Italians say that it would be well if other members of the Mafia were treated in the same way. There never has been the slightest pretext for an appeal to force in connection with the affair.

Prior Discovery.

Rochester, N.Y., March 31.—Over a year ago Dr. O. M. Myers of this city discovered the influence of the microbe which was announced recently by Dr. Gentry of Chicago. Myers was quoted in a Rochester newspaper at the time of his discovery, and his description of the microbe organism corresponds with that of Dr. Gentry.

Philadelphia, March 31.—Four coaches, comprising the rear portion of the Eastern express on the Pennsylvania railroad, jumped the track at Devon Station, about fifteen miles west of this city, this morning and toppled over. Miss Goddard of St. Louis had several ribs broken, and C. V. Kipp, New York; Mrs. Frank Hardin, New York; D. H. Roberts, New York, and George T. Cram, St. Louis, received slight flesh wounds. The injured were transferred to the forward portion of the train and continued their journey.

What Ought We to Do?

Grasse, March 31.—Queen Victoria expressly desires that a denial be published of the report that she had, asked that a church bell which she heard ringing before 8 o'clock in the morning be stopped.

A Stand Pipe Collapse.

Defiance, Ohio, March 31.—The stand pipe of the waterworks in this city fell today. Engineer John Dillon's house was wrecked by water and his wife perhaps seriously injured. Dillon, his brother and a child were in the engine house and narrowly escaped death by drowning, as the house is on the river below the base of the pipe. One engine is ruined and the other disabled. The town is without water. The works cost $181,000. The stand pipe was of boiler iron, seven inches thick at the base and one-quarter at the top. The pipe collapsed at the base and was full of water at the time.

A QUEER GHOST.

In Squire Butterworth's faded, old fashoned parlor sat his daughter Nellie, in "maiden meditation, fancy free"—that is she thought herself so; but the follwing day her oldest friend and playmate Malcolm Macdonald was to sail for a foreign land. He was a sailor, a bonny, blue eyed lad, and loved her with all the strength of his great honest heart. He had offered that heart to her the day before and asked her to marry him and go away with him. But she would not. Now she almost wished she had, and she rose—she would get pencil and paper and write to him, but the door-bell rang a long loud peal, and she waited. The door was flung open and in came three merry girls Margaret, Lue and Blanche, came in so hurriedly that Nellie stood speechless and riveted her eyes upon them. They, seemed nervous, half laughing, yet evidently scared.

"Oh! Nell," Lue says with a little gasp, going up to her and laying her hand on her arm," "I have seen a ghost."

"A what?" says Nell.

"A ghost! a downright, veritable ghost! Now, don't look incredulous. I was never so frightened in my life—was I, girls?"

"No, never!" cry Blanch and Margaret, with such suspicious eagerness that Nellie laughs outright; then says:

"But tell me all about it;" and then such a chattering as there is until Mrs. Butterworth turns them out into the orchard back of the farm-house, where they all gather round Nell and make her tell them all the stories she knows of Malcolm's life at sea.

There they stay till the warm July day has come to a close, and the sound of Farmer Butterworth bringing the cows from pasture tells them it is time to go home. They start for the gate and Blanch says:

"Remember, now, 8;30, at Dew Rock, if you want to see Lue's ghost," and as Nell answers, "All right," the three saunter slowly down the village street.

Suddenly Margaret speaks, and there is a note of anxiety in her voice.

"Will it be just fair, girls? Nell ought to know her own heart."

"It isn't a question of fairness, it is 'love and war' just now, so we may as well keep our promise to Malcolm," returned Blanche.

At 8:40 o'clock that night four small, dark figures crept softly into a little old hut, hidden from sight by a huge rock, whose great shadow casts a deep gloom over the place, and waited. After a few minutes three of them moved softly around the room leaving the fourth alone, and soon Nell found herself alone in the middle of the room.

Everything was so still she could almost hear her own heart beat, when she heard a sound of footseps coming—near—nearer. With a little thrill of terror she turned swiftly and faced the door.

It open slowly. Nell seemed to feel cold chills creeping up and down her back. Instinctively she glanced toward the one window the little hut contained, and with a little shriek sprang toward it; but the ghost was before her, a tall, dark figure in a long black domino and a slouch hat, pulled low over his face, Very unghostlike he was, but Nell did not think of that.

In deep thrilling tones he cried:

"Do not attempt to leave the room! You are Nellie Butterworth."

"Yes." The word was whispered, but he heard it.

"You are engaged?"

"No." Decidedly.

"Want to be?" moving nearer to her.

The absurdity of the question struck Nell even while she drew back, and she burst into a merry laugh.

There was silence for a moment, then the ghost spoke again.

She stepped forward quickly. Her lover! What was it?

"He wished me to say he cannot go with that undecided answer. If it be 'yes' he will return; if it be 'no' he will remain in Australia till he dies. What shall I say to him for you?" and the ghost stepped a little nearer.

Nell's eyes were shining; an amused expression crossed her face, and she replied—just a little catch in her voice:

"You might tell him—" then she stopped. "Why didn't he come himself? Oh, Malcolm," in a tone of tender reproach, as the ghost threw aside his black coat and slouch hat and stood in his sailor's suit of navy blue—her own fond, faithful lover.

"May we come now?" cried three merry voices.

Nell turned in mock anger as she said:

"Did you do this purposely?" But in spite of the tone in which she said it there was a glad look in her eyes, and when everything had been explained and she stood alone with Malcolm, she whispered:

"Ghosts are rather nice sometimes, aren't they?"—Ex.

It Speaks for Itself.

When a mother seeks to precipitate herself and three children, one an infant, into the river as the only escape from the sufferings of hunger and want, as a mother did last night, the thought will come that the charitable organizations of the city where this occurs cannot be all they should be.

If there are any proper objects for municipal charity a starving mother and children crying for food should be foremost among them. Something is wrong when despair can drive to such desperate remedy as death in the wintry flow of the river. The thought of this little group of sufferers seeking to cast away life too wretched to be endured is a heart breaking one. Let mercy and charity reach a staying hand to such aching woe.—New York Evening World.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Monday, March. 23.

SENATE.

The senate held a single session of three and a half hours, during which time it killed Senator Donnelly's bill to repeal the newspaper libel law of 1887, and also Senator Tawney's mortgage taxation bill.

When the senate began business the special order was postponed for one hour in order that some routine business might be transacted.

Among the bills introduced was one by Senator S. D. Peterson which fixes the maximum charges by express companies for transporting farm produce at 30 cents per 100 pounds for the first fifty miles and 10 cents for each additional fifty miles.

Senator Lienau introduced two bills aimed at foreign life insurance companies. One of them provides that all such companies, before being permitted to do business in this state, must each deposit sureties to the amount of $200,000. The second one requires all such companies to pay a tax of 2 per cent upon their premiums.

Senator Morse introduced a bill providing for a penalty of 1 per cent on all delinquent taxes after June 1 of each year, and holds the county auditor responsible for the collection of the same.

HOUSE.

Mr. Gallagher, chairman of the elections committee, introduced a resolution to reimburse the contestants in the election cases before the house and the attorneys, which was held over until there was a larger attendance of members.

Mr. Waeck introduced a resolution directing the chief clerk to purchase fifty copies of the Globe almanac for each of the representatives at a cost of not more than 20 cents per copy. The resolution was referred to the committee on legislative expenses.

Mr. Bonde introduced a resolution instructing the chief clerk to investigate the cost per copy of the legislative manual and report to the house.

Mr. Darelius drew attention to his resolution to amend rule 51 so as to provide for the omission of the calling of the yeas and nays on local bills. He stated that by so omitting the roll call business would be expedited, and that the attorney general had stated that it would be legal and constitutional to do so.

Tuesday March. 24.

SENATE.

A number of petitions were presented asking for the passage of the Currier railroad bill.

Senator McMillan sent up a resolution authorizing the appointment of a committee of three senators to consider the question of capital removal.

Senator John Day Smith gave notice of debate, and a little later Senator Glader introduced a bill, which, in great detail, provides for the removal of the capitol to Kandiyohi county. The bill establishes the city of Minnetaza as the seat of government of the state, and provides for the sale of lots in the city, the proceeds to go to a capitol building fund. The bill also provides for a commission of three persons, who shall have charge of the erection of a new capitol building. These commissioners are to advertise for plans and specifications, and they, with the governor and state auditor are to select a plan. The total cost of the building must not exceed $650,000, and any contract made by the commissioners in excess of this amount shall be null and void. The bill provides further that the seat of government of the state shall be removed to the new location on the 1st of January, 1896.

HOUSE.

Under the order of introduction of new bills Mr. Keyes introduced a bill placing the state library under the supervision of the judges of the supreme court, and prohibits publishing firm and their employes from using the library or the books therein for the purpose of its publications without paying for the wear and tear of the books, the sum being named by the librarian at not less than $300 per annum.

Mr. Lynn introduced a bill which amends the laws relating to interest and usury by providing a fine of $500 for any person, persons or corporation who shall receive from a person making the loan a greater sum than allowed by law, or imprisonment for not more than one year. The person making the complaint is to receive the fine. This bill provides a punishment for usury.

Mr. J. R. Nelson proposes to amend the penal code relating to the use of false weights, punishing offenders for knowing misrepresentation as for a misdemeanor.

Dr. Hemstead introduced a bill to amend the law relating to the solemnization of marriages, extending the power to do so to court commissioners.

Wednesday, March. 25.

SENATE

The principal thing done by the senate yesterday was to defeat Senator Donnelly's bill submitting to a vote of the people a constitutional amendment relating to railroads and warehouses. The fight in favor of the bill was waged by Senator Donnelly after his usual methods. He argued and pleaded and threatened in turn. But his efforts were without avail, for when the final vote was taken the measure only received 19 votes in its favor, while there were 29 against it, with six absentees. Senator Tawney led the opposition to the bill, and he was ably seconded by Senators Mayo and Leavitt.

A bill introduced by Senator Dedon call for an appropriation of $50,000 to remodel the Minneapolis Exposition building and fit it for use as a capitol building, and provides that the state offices shall be removed to that building as soon as it is ready for occupancy.

Senator Guderian presented a measure which authorizes the city of Anoka to issue bonds for the purpose of building a steam or electric motor line between that city and Minneapolis.

HOUSE.

Mr. Kinney introduced a resolution requesting the speaker to appoint five delegates to the convention, and the resolution carried.

Mr. Feig moved to reconsider the vote on the resolution to reimburse the parties in the election contest cases, and asked that the original resolution be sent to the committee on claims. To this the house agreed and the resolution was so referred.

Mr. Penney's bill relating to executions under the law, and providing that they all take place in the state prison, was called up. This bill was defeated yesterday because of there not being enough votes in the house to carry it, and to-day there being a large house, it was carried without any trouble.

Thursday, March. 26.

SENATE.

Senator Sanborn presented a concurrent resolution providing that the legislature shall adjourn at noon on Monday, April 20, and that the last day for the introduction of bills shall be to-day, Friday, March 27. The resolution was adopted.

Senator Dedon exploded a bomb in the senate by the introduction of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the seat of Senator J. S. O'Brien is hereby declared vacant as per section 9 of article 4 of the constitution of the State of Minnesota, which provides that no senator can hold more than one office under the state government at the same time.

Senator Morse gave notice of debate.

Senator Leavitt called up his resolution providing for a joint committee to procure bids for printing the General Laws of the session and distributing them to the newspapers of the state.

Senator Day then moved to refer the resolution to the printing committee.

Under the order of executive communications a message was received from Gov. Merriam vetoing S. F. No. 54, Senator March's bill conferring certain limited banking privileges upon trust companies. As soon as the message was read Senator March moved to reconsider the vote by which it was passed. In a few remarks he said the measure did not intrench upon the rights of banks. That was the only objection he heard against the bill, and an explanation of the provisions of the bill had convinced his constituents that this objection was not valid.

HOUSE.

The business of the house consisted principally of the introduction of bills, it being the last day but one for the introduction of proposed new legislation. The afternoon was almost entirely taken up with this order of business, while the morning was consumed by a lively discussion over several temperance measures and the reading of the report of the special committee of the house appointed to investigate the management of the state prison.

Mr. Ringwald's resolution providing for supplying each member with five additional copies of the manual was lost by a vote of 38 to 33, and Mr. Feig moved for a reconsideration.

Friday March. 27.

SENATE.

At the opening of the morning session of the senate yesterday there were no petitions, letters or resolutions, and the introduction of bills was proceeded with. At the end of half an hour the senators had emptied their pockets and desks, and then, as it was the last day for the introduction of new bills, it was voted to return to that order at 5 o'clock in order that no one should be shut off from getting any of his measures before the senate.

A bill introduced by Senator Tawney raises the tax on the output of iron mines from 1 cent per ton to 3 cents per ton.

Senator Dean introduced a bill prohibiting pool rooms and the selling of pools.

Senator Daugherty introduced a bill prohibiting all persons from engaging in private banking in Minnesota.

A bill introduced by Senator Craig provides that railroad companies that are entitled to swamp lands must make their selections within a year. Otherwise the selections shall be made by the land commissioner.

A bill introduced by Senator Probstfield extends the time of redemption from mortgage sales of real estate from one to three years, on the condition that taxes and interest are paid.

HOUSE.

Yesterday was the last day in the house for the introduction of bills and the representatives did not fail to take advantage of it. For several hours there was a continuous stream of new bills which dealt with all manner of subjects and matter and legislated upon what has been callld the five elements—earth, fire, air, water and whisky. When the first grist of bills had been introduced and read there was a brief intermission and some other business was transacted, but the fit came on at intervals during the day, and before the hour of adjournment 125 bills had been introduced.

Any one who has traveled over country roads in winter will appreciate the provisions of a bill introduced by Mr. Daly, which provides that all double sleighs used in Washington county shall be of the width of sixty inches between the runners and providing a fine for violations of this law.

Mr. Hadland introduced a bill limiting the expense of the state board of corrections and charities, which shall not exceed the sum of $2,500 annually.

Mr. Thomas Cole introduced a bill which proposes to abolish the state board known as the board of managers of the state prison at Stillwater. The bill is exceedingly curt, not occupying more than seven lines.

Mr. Tripp introduced a bill requiring the observance of seven legal holidays in this state, including New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Decoration day, Fourth of July, general election day, Thanksgiving day and Christmas.

Mr. Tripp also introduced a bill providing for a monthly settlement between the city of Minneapolis and the county of Hennepin.

Saturday, March 28.

SENATE.

Senator John Day Smith resurrected the senatorial contest of two years ago next when he arose to make his report as chairman of the committee appointed to investigate how the testimony of ex-Senator Sabin, taken by bribery investigating committee two years ago, came to be omitted from the printed report. This report recited the testimony taken, which was obtained from Prof. Bowers, of Minneapolis, and drew no conclusions as to its omissions. It was then ordered that the testimony of Senator Sabin be printed and pasted into the copies already printed.

Senator March's grain and warehouse bill was the first measure brought up and it at once became the subject of a hot debate and was finally indefinitely postponed.

Senator Keller's livery bill, S. F. 367, was recommended to pass. Another measure was introduced by the same gentleman, providing for liens for livery stable keepers in certain cases, was referred back to the author, and then the senate adjourned until 10 o'clock Monday morning.

HOUSE.

The senate joint resolution, expunging the impeachment proceedings against E. St. Julien Cox, came up in the house. Mr. Turrell, of Redwood explained the resolution. Mr. Cox was the judge in his district at the time when he laid himself liable to the charge of impeachment—the judge was impeached for drunkenness. The judge had been sufficiently punished and these impeachment proceedings should be stricken from the records in justice to his family.

Mr. Lynn moved the adoption of the resolution, and it was so agreed.

Several bills of local interest were passed after which the house adjourned till 10 o'clock Monday.

A Boy Set Them Thinking.

Several gentlemen were standing in the lobby of a hotel the other evening when a rather small-sized messenger boy rushed in and handed one of them a telegram. The gentleman glanced at the clock as he signed the blank and said: "Well, I didn't know it was that late; where is time going to, anyway?" Quick as a flash came the reply from the little fellow, "Into eternity," and picking up his book he walked out. The oddity of the remark struck the men as funny, and they laughed loudly at the little preacher for a moment, and then the laugh died out on their lips and each one looked as though he was thinking of something like that which he had heard when he was a boy.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

Burglars tapped a till for $30 at Alexandria.

Dana Child, nephew of Senator E. A. Child, aged sixteen years, was killed while jumping from a moving train at Glencoe.

At Alexandria Dr. Bell's baby was standing in the window, when it fell on her hand, breaking all the bones.

Mrs. Julia Chase, one of Hastings' early citizens, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. R. E. C. Ball, aged eighty-seven years.

James Lynn, aged 73, died at Northfield. He has resided in the state over twenty-three years and leaves a wife and ten children.

Mike Blesener, a prominent young business man of Northfield, dropped dead recently. He was twenty-four years old and had had some trouble with his liver.

Mrs. Frankie E. Moore, milliner, assigned recently to Lester Griswold. The action was precipitate by the attachment of a Milwaukee firm. Liabilities about $1,200, assets small.

Sam Pumpelly, charged with procuring a minor to vote at the recent village election at Lake Benton and whose examination was postponed, was discharged upon examination.

J. H. Ackerman, telegraph operator of the Northern Pacific railroad at Staples, suddenly disappeared and his whereabouts is unknown. He was secretary of the I. O. O. F. Lodge at this place.

Mrs. James M. Jones, who lately moved with her husband from Geneva to Albert Lea, dropped dead from heart disease. She was one of the esteemed pioneers of the county.

The assignee of Fred Fleckenstein sold the entire stock of dry goods, gents' furnishing goods, and millinery goods at auction, to P. P. Kinsey of Faribault, for 39½ cents on the dollar of the invoice price, $9,579.27.

Mrs. Jones, wife of James F. Jones, vice president of the First National bank of Albert Lea, died very suddenly of heart disease. She had always had most excellent health. She was sixty-five years of age.

The Wabasha county teachers' institute convened at Lake City, under the auspices of Prof. J. F. McLeary and Mrs. Beatty. Sixty teachers have been enrolled. The prospects are good for a very successful institute.

At Red Wing in the district court case of the Nation Gas and Fuel Company vs. Tams Bixby and R. C. Elliott, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,414. The case grew out of the purchase of the gas plant at Pierre, S. D.

A very successful teachers' institute has just closed at Renville. Prof. Sanford Niles of Minneapolis and Mrs. Beede of St. Paul were conductors. There were ninety-eight teachers enrolled, and it is generally conceded to be the best institute in this county.

The cultivation of sugar beets for experimental purposes is to be undertaken systematically at Red Wing this season. The climatic conditions and the character of the soil here are believed to be especially suitable for the successful propagation of this crop.

As the hacks that connect Monticello with Big Lake Station were crossing the Mississippi river, the ice gave way. The forward hack, filled with passengers, was kept from sinking by the pieces of ice, and people and horses were rescued. Only one horse of the team drawing the second hack got into the water.

The celebrated cattle dehorning case, which has been on trial at Red Wing ended recently. The jury returned a verdict acquitting the defendant, thus establishing that cattle dehorning is not a cruel or inhuman operation. Prominent stock raisers in the county were witnesses both for and against.

Oscar Davenport, aged eighteen, and James Brown, aged fifteen, were arrested at Northfield for breaking into a confectionery store and stealing several pounds of candy. Their trial took place and Davenport was sent to Faribault to await the action of the grand jury in deault of $300 bonds. Brown was sent to the reform school.

The state teachers' institute for Blue Earth county closed at Lake Crystal. The institute was conducted by Prof. Rochelau of Moorhead, Mrs. Jaques of St. Cloud and Mrs. J. C. Stevens, county superintendent, The institute was well attended by the county teachers, and all speak in the highest terms of the work done.

Mrs. Henriette F. Ruble, widow of the late John Ruble, who was one of the celebrated Ruble brothers, died at her home near Albert Lea after a long illness of dropsy, aged about sixty-five years. She had been a resident of this country since 1856 and was perhaps the oldest settler in the county. The funeral was very largely attended.

Probably the hardest fought case that has ever been brought before the probate court of Mankato, is the one involving the estate of the late Henry Richardson of this county, which is now before the court. Richardson died intestate, leaving several thousand dollars and no known heirs. Claims were filed against the estate, and different people from nearly all parts of the globe, claiming to be the only heirs, are striving to prove their heirship and secure the property.

NORTH DAKOTA.

The house of Senator James Miller at Mandan burned. Loss, $2,000; insurance, $1,500.

A Northern Pacific news agent named Riddle, running between Dickinson and St. Paul, was arrested charged with having insulted a prominent lady of Dickinson on the street.

The state commission for the world's fair met at Fargo with National Commissioner Rucker and the lady managers and organized with Mr. Rucker as chairman. It was decided to go to Chicago and attend the meeting of the national commission, pick out room for the state display and gather all the information possible.

The Scottish rite bodies of Fargo closed a three days' session recently. A class of 10 members received degrees from the fourth to and including the 32d. Eel Zagul temple, mystic shrine, held a reunion winding up with a banquet. Visitors were present from nearly all Northwestern states.

Charles Hull, a heavy, thick-set fellow about 35, and Joe Colligan made their escape from the county jail at Dickinson. Hull was awaiting trial on the charge of horse stealing. Too much liberty was given the men out side of their cells. The men were captured next day, and returned to jail.

Sheriff Donnelly arrested Millard Shibley, the saloonkeeper in whose place the recent shooting fray occurred, on the charge of violating the prohibition law by selling liquor. His place was also searched and five cases of beer and a quantity of wine seized. This is only the beginning of the attempt to enforce the law, and it is understood that evidence has been secured against several others. The penalty for the second offense is imprisonment in the state penitentiary.

Judge McConnell, in the district court, at Fargo, made an order that there be an election called of the stockholders of the Argus Printing company to elect a new board of directors April 27, and ordered the secretary to publish a notice thereof for two weeks. In the case before Judge Thomas, of the United States court, the attorneys for the defense have been asked to be present to hear the decision on the motion for a receiver in the Argus case, and whether they should be required to give bonds for the costs already accrued.

Gov. Burke has approved all the bills passed by the legislature except three, which he has vetoed. One defining residence of voters, which conflicts with the constitution; one providing for warehouses on railroad right of way on payment of $1, and without appeal from the board of railroad commissioners, which was very similar to the Minnesota law decided unconstitutional; and one extending the time for the payment of taxes, the provisions of which were covered by a bill approved during the session. The appointment of the world's fair commission and adjutant general are expected to be made soon.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Hon. P. F. McClure has retired from the hardware business at Pierre.

It is reported that the Independents are to establish a newspaper in each county in the state.

Fire at Ft. Pierre destroyed several small buildings. Loss not heavy, partly covered by insurance.

Two school sections of Pierre were appraised, No. 16 at $35 per acre and 51 at $20 and $30.

Bowdle had a big blaze recently. Hoit's elevator went up in smoke together with its contents, 6,000 bushels of flax and 3,000 of wheat.

Harry Wybrant, who has been running the hotel Locke at Pierre, is said to have cleared something in the neighborhood of $20,000 during the winter.

The several firms heretofore comprising the Watertown Department store have consolidated into a joint stock company, with a capital stock of $50,000.

The eighth annual encampment of the State Grand Army of the Republic convened at Yankton with about 500 delegates in attendance.

In the oratorical contest at the Mitchell university, first honors were awarded to A. C. Shepherd, and second to Miss Nellie Barker.

The signal service station which has been located at Fort Sully for a number of years, is to be moved to Pierre, where headquarters will be established in the near future.

Great business activity is promised in the Black Hills the coming season. It is estimated that more than a million of new capital will be invested in ore reduction works.

The snow is nearly all gone at Vermillion. Much of the frost is out, and a large amount of the water being absorbed by the ground, leaving the ground in an excellent condition for crops.

Mrs. E. A Gilbert died from la grippe at Mitchell. She was the mother of J. E. Gilbert, of the First National bank. The remains will be shipped to Virginia. Mrs. Charles Adams died from complications of la grippe a few hours later.

Fred. Widmann, James Gormley, R. C. Wills, Phin Powers and Goodwin, liquor dealers of Mitchell were enjoined by the circuit court, restraining them from selling liquors contrary to law. The sheriff searched Widmann's place and seized a quantity of wet goods.

The best strike of ore yet made on the Messaba range occurred eight miles from La Prairie on section 21, township 56, range 24, owned by A. Richardson of Minneapolis. The Hematite ore will assay at least 60 per cent. Experienced miners admit that this strike is of the richest ore. It was discovered at seventy feet.

W. H. Paulhamus, late cashier for Hagerty & Co., bankers, Aberdeen, who failed last October, was arrested on the complaint of W. A. Moore, charged with receiving deposits after he knew the bank was insolvent. He waived examination and gave bonds for appearance at the next term of the circuit court.

The board of trustees of the university convened at Vermillion. The students and faculty laid their cases before them. No action has yet been taken. Rev. R. O. Brandt, chairman of the committee of the state board of regents for the university, is present.

Spring-seeding has commenced in the vicinity of Travare. The ground is in splendid condition, and has been much improved by the recent snow storm, which melted and soaked into the ground as fast as it fell. The weather is warm and dry and farmers are jubilant over their prospects.

The school lands in five townships of Clay county have been sold. One piece two miles east of Vermillion brought $30.50 per acre, and the average price for the five townships is about $18. The sale will not close before Saturday, and few pieces will be left unsold.

The ice in the river at Pierre is dangerous; it is cropping and promises to go out in a day or two. A few days ago 600 head of sheep were being transferred from Ft. Pierre and came near being drowned by breaking through the ice. All were secured but four or five. While a house was being hauled across the river the horses broke through, but were rescued and the house hauled across.

WISCONSIN.

Contracts to the amount of $175,591 have been let for public improvements in West Superior this season.

Dr. Emil Nussel, of Chippewa Falls, was pardoned out of state prison by Gov. Peck. Dr. Nussel was sentenced last May to four years' imprisonment for abortion.

The dry goods store of Charles T. Johnson & Co. at Stoughton, was destroyed by an incendiary fire. Loss about $20,000; insurance, $10,000.

The house passed a bill prohibiting the manufacture of cheese and butter out of substances other than milk, but also providing for the proper marking of oleomargarine.

The wholesale clothing house of B. Newbouer & Co. of Milwaukee is in the hands of the sheriff on a number of executions. The assets and liabilities cannot be ascertained as yet.

A young man named Robert Miller, employed by the Lake Shore road, was killed at Ashland, by being crushed between two cars, which he was repairing. The parents of Miller reside at Kaukauna.

The residence of Hon. Hugh Mills of Millston was totally destroyed by fire. Most of the contents were saved. Loss, $3,000, with $1,000 insurance in the Milwaukee Mechanics'.

The logging camps are now all deserted for the season. The cut on Black River and its tributaries will fall nearly 20,000,000 feet short of all last year, it being about 200,000,000 this season, but there is general satisfaction among the lumbermen as to the result.

Advance battalions of woodsmen are coming out of the pineries, and the general rush can be deferred but a few days. Three camps on Eau Claire river broke up. There will be no serious shortage of logs. Everything favors a good spring rise in the rivers.

Fred Staples, recently sentenced by the county judge at Grantsburg on the charge of manslaughter for killing David Seeley must stand trial on the charge of murder. It appears that the county court had no jurisdiction. A motion will be made for change of venue owing to the indignation meeting.

Mary McGuire, an unmarried lady, thirty-four years old, of the town of Wheaton, was adjudged insane. The girl's misfortune is said to date back to almost her early childhood, when she was terribly frightened by being left alone one fearfully stormy night, which impaired her reason then and from which she never recovered.

It is doubtful if anything ever more agitated the people of Chippewa Falls than the much talked of navigation bill pending in the Wisconsin legislature. Nearly every mail leaving the city carries one or two petitions, either favoring or opposing the bill, while fifty of our prominent citizens are at Madison giving it their personal attention. The great majority of our citizens favor the passage of the bill.

It has been reported at Black River Falls that the young girl who, it is alleged, was criminally assaulted by young Emerson—now in jail here—in the town of Knapp is in a critical condition, but that her age prevents her from securing any protection under the present laws except on the charge of assault and battery. There is a great deal of excitement among the friends of the girl, which bodes no good to the prisoner unless the law deals with him pretty severely.

William Keefe of St. Paul has brought suit against Brigham & Mussell of Bayfield to recover $23,000 alleged to have been lost by him by defendants preventing him from fulfilling a logging contract had with them. Two years ago Keefe entered into a logging contract with defendants, but unexpectedly supended operations in the middle of the season's work by Brigham & Mussell attaching his teams and impairing his credit. Keefe, in bringing his suit, garnisheed the C. C. Thompson Lumber Company of Chicago.

IOWA.

About $40,000 in purses will be trotted for at Knoxville August 11 to 14.

Ben O. Rhodes, formerly sheriff of Marshall county, is now in a California insane asylum.

The superintendent of public instruction has designated Friday, April 24, as Arbor day.

S. A. Sirrene, the recent bankrapt of Mason City, settled with his creditors on a basis of twenty cents on the dollar.

Fred Hanford, for many years a resident of Mason City and a wealthy cattle dealer, died recently.

Ellen Galleger, an old woman over 60 years of age, has been permanently enjoined from selling liquor at Independence.

The Burlington water company has brought suit against that city for money over due on water rent amounting to $6,000.

The Council Bluffs savings bank cashed $16,000 in drafts for a sharper named Morris which have since been found to be worthless.

Nels Hanson, a young man about 28 years old, committed suicide at Northwood by hanging. No reason was known for the deed.

Charles Cudney, of Bassett, has been found guilty of attempting to murder John D. Lucker and sentenced to three years in prison.

The employes of the electric street railway lines at Sioux City organized a union. They have all been notified that they must quit the union or the employ of the company. There are indications of a strike.

Peter McMahon, of Rockwell, who was found by the coroner's jury to have so cruelly beaten the orphan boy, Walter Heidore, as to cause his death, was arraigned for manslaughter. The feeling against McMahon is intense.

Notice of injunction suits for the April term of the district court were served upon all the liquor men at Creston, and the county attorney says the cases are brought in good faith. Five saloons are still running and as many more closed.

Fire at Mitchellville, a small place near Des Moines, destroyed the principal blocks. O. Richard, drugs, lost $10,500; J. S. Cook, merchandise valued at $3,000; the Index newspaper, loss probably $2,000. The other losses increase the total to nearly $20,000. Light insurance chiefly, in Des Moines companies.

Two saloonkeepers have a new scheme for evading the liquor law. During the holidays they had constructed a saloon building in sections, so that it could be taken apart and stored away. Recently the district court granted an injunction against the saloon, recently the proprietors took down their saloo and stored it away in a warehouse, so that when the sheriff of Webster county comes to serve the injunction he will find no saloon.

A Boon dispatch says: All the water courses in this section are high and the Des Moines river is full from bank to bank. The bridge at Milford, three miles from this city, went out this morning. The water is still rising at Ottumwa the high water in the Des Moines river carried away a forty-foot main street bridge. At points below there much damage has been done—notably at Eddyville, where an ice gorge flooded the village and inundated the town, driving the people to higher ground.

"JUST LIKE A WOMAN.

She Gives Pennies Where They're Not Wanted and Never Where They Are.

She first pulled a nickle out of her pocketbook, but she put it back and searched until she had gathered together five pennies. The conductor asked if she couldn't give him something besides pennies and she was instantly insulted.

He sighed, put the pennies in his pocket and rang up a fare.

"She always gives me pennies," he said when he was back on the platform again.

"I wish she'd do as much for me," said the stout man who had seen the whole affair, and to whom the remark was addressed;" but she won't.

"Know her?" asked the conductor.

I should say. Comes to my little meat market every day. Buys something that costs 67 cents and then carefully lays aside all her pennies and gives me three quarters, or $1. I have to give her pennies in change, of course, and I need pennies. Nearly everything in a meat-market is in odd cents, you know. I've suggested that I'd be glad to have pennies, but she always says, 'O, I wouldn't trouble you with them.'"

"Of course you want them and my company won't take them from me, so she unloads them upon me. Just like a woman. They seem to save up pennies for street-car fare, and then the conductor has to go over their shopping routes and dispose of the pennies to the man who will make change for them again next day."

"Of course it's just like a woman," acquiesced the stout man. "I think she's going to my market now. I'll take all the pennies you've got so that I can make change for her when she gets there."

The last seen of the two showed the conductor in the act of counting pennies into the hand of the stout man.—Chicago Tribune.

Old and New Prices for Glasses.

A well-known gentleman of this city recently gave a little object lesson in the effects of protection. The occasion was the informal entertainment of a few friends at dinner. The glasses on the table were unusually clear, large and fine. "Now," said the host "I will show you what to my mind, is an unanswerable argument in favor of protection." Addressing the servant he asked her to bring "one of those other glasses:" This was also a handsome glass, but some smaller than the first. "There," continued the gentlemen. "That is an imported glass. About seven years ago I bought a dozen and a half of those glasses in this city and paid $6 a dozen for them. A short time ago, as a number had been broken, I concluded to buy some more. But this time I wanted a larger glass. I went to the same dealer of whom I had purchased before and asked him if he remembered selling me some imported glasses several years ago at $6 a dozen. He said he did and I told him I wanted another dozen and a half as fine glasses as he could get, but larger than the others. He said the imported glasses were not made arger and I told him I did not care whether they were imported or not, so they were fine glasses. He thought he could order them, and in due time they came. Now look at that glass: it is larger, clearer and in every way a handsomer glass than the other. Hear it ring,, tapping it with a knife; "it rings like a bell. Besides, it has a better finish and a smoother edge on top than the other glass. The other is imported and this is American. now what do you suppose this glass cost?" After a little guessing the gentleman said: "I never was so astonished in my life as when the bill was sent me for these glasses. I had paid $6 a dozen for the imported glasses, and expected to pay more for these because they are finer and suited me better. They were billed to me at $1.50 a dozen. When I bought the others you could not have gotten such American glasses at any price. while now they cost just one-fourth as much as the imported goods. That is one of the reasons why I am a Protectonist." And the company voted it a good one.

The Luck of American Country Homes.

What American families have not yet achieved to any great extent, and the conditions of American life seem not to encourage, are real country homes, from which the dwellers shall go to town for the winter, and where their principal ties and their more serious expenditures shall remain. Until very lately the city house has been the rich American's real home. When men who have retired from business make their homes in the country; when people who now live in town for pleasure learn to spend three months in town and nine in the country, instead of vice-versa; when state roads and electric railroads make the country more accessible, and the expenditure in the country of money made in town makes the rural districts more interesting; when a life-time spent in money-getting in Wall street or "The Swamp" ceases to be considered "successful," there will be less difficulty than there is just now in providing that the city man's grandson may have such a share of real country life that his grandson, when it comes his turn to come to town may have something worth fetching.—Scribner's Magazine.

Official Paper of the City.

JAS. MEEHAN, JR. Editor nad Prop.

What the northern part of the state wants is more railroads—this is the only thing that will insure development.

The republicans of Polk County are called to meet in Crookston on the 15th inst., for the purpose of perfecting the county organization. Those who remain true to the principles of the grand old party bob up confident of success in '92. The alliance baby will no doubt be planted and we would not be surprised to see some of last fall's sore-heads conducting the obsequies. Let 'em r i p!

The interest bill has passed—money is shut out, Hompe's railroad bill has passed—the construction of railroads will cease. How are the people in the northern part of the state, this almost wholly undeveloped district, favored by either—even those who gloried most in last November's victory look with doubt upon the wisdom of the new measures.

Wanted.

Teachers and others whose literary tastes and attainments qualify them as leaders of Society, should call on or at once address the undersigned, at his office, 151 Germania Life Building, St. Paul, Minn, for information of the highest importance to themselves and the Communities in which they reside. LOUIS LUND.

To Republicans Of Polk County.

Notice is hereby given to all persons who believe in the principles of the Republican party that a Republican meeting will be held at the City Hall in the City of Crookston on Wednesday evening, April 15th 1891, at 7:30 P. M., for considering the best means of organizing the party and for the purpose of selecting a suitable person to represent such organization in the State Republican League. All Republicans of Polk County are invited to attend.

Strange Revolution In Women's Dress

Some predict that the great change in the fashioning of clothes which are to be worn by women this coming season is the most wonderful victory of the nineteenth century—If fashion leaders can be induced to adopt it, and appear just one in public so arrayed.

Men will hold their breath in wonder at the marvelous change it makes in lovely women. "Few of the fair sex can help being beautiful in these glove-fitting costumes," says a writer in a recent number of THE NEW YORK AND PARIS YOUNG LADIES' FASHION BAZAR. "This magazine is the only one in Europe or America which makes a specialty of giving those inclined to stoutness an unrivaled appearance of sculptured slimness, say Her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales. Madame Patti has ordered from the Paris house four magnificent costumes, the designs of which appear in the APRIL number of the Fashion Bazar and in this magazine only.

Mrs. Harrison is greatly fascinated with the exquisite gem, costume No. 4 in the APRIL number. It is expected she will give an order for an exact counterpart of it, the whole front of which will be incrusted with pin-head diamonds. This gown alone will be worth a king's ransom.

A correspondent of the Thief River Fall Press says he couldn't get into an hotel in this village. The fact of the matter is the hotel keepers here "caught on" as it were; the man had his satchel loaded with brick, intending thereby to put it up for board. He didn't get into any hotel here. He slept ina covered buggy that was standing in front of Findeisen's shop awaiting repairs. In some instances a hint is good as a kick but as this individual didn't have brains enough to comprehend it, each hotel keeper applied the kick. As the marshal was conducting him out of town, towards Tweet P. O next morning, he vowed to put the brick in that portion of his trousers where the territory is broadest. "I fool em jessum gude sumany mon by yumpin yaruslam.,

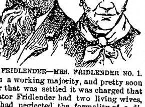
Wm. Wilkins had a tussle with his gray stallion Tuesday and it is unnecessary to say Bill came out second best. The horse becoming mad grabbed him by the waist bruising the flesh considerably; loosening his hold here, he sunk his teeth in the forearm in various places, the teeth penetrating to the bone. Luckily Wm. Zaiser who was passing by heard the shouts of Mr. Wilkins and proceeding to the barn as rapidly as possible, realized the dangerous situation, seized a plank and dealt the stallion three blows across the head before he would relinquish his hold. Mr. Wilkins had been dragged around the stable and the pain was so intense that he was almost exhausted; he was helped to the house. Dr. Watson called, the wound was dressed and Bill is again on deck, but will nurse his right arm for a month.

The Crookston people allege that Senator Lommen is tied to Donnelly's apron strings and almost in the same line intimate that they have Lommen corralled on the county division bill. They abuse him but still with loud trumpets announce their ownership of the people's representative. Verily, Mr. Lommen must feel under deep obligations to a people who abuse yet expect him to act contrary to the wishes of a large number of constituents in order to pay tribute to a city whose only resource has been reaped from those who can as ill afford it as they can the burthensome tax which caused the great revolution in the ballots of the Northwest. For every trip a farmer in the proposed new counties, makes to Crookston during the year he pays out at least five dollars; his time is worth something—this is a direc tax and one more effective that the alleged increase of tax caused by the organization of a new county. For introducing a bill to obliterate this tax on the people Senator Lommen is attacked by Crookston Times which intimates that the introducing of the bill, is a boomerang, that Senator Lommen dare not pass it—in other words they own the Senator and he is acting the part of the hypocrite just to satisfy Crookston. We ask what harm there is in allowing the people to vote upon the matter of county division! When Senator Lommen has received remonstrances equal to the petitions it will then be time to smother the bill now pending. It remains whether Crookston allegation of ownership of the senator will hold good and whether their title is of the warranty or quit claim order.

The principal work of the secetary of agriculture is to bring the American hog into prominance, Uncle Jerry Rusk should move to Crookston where the field for work is blood and the articles abundant.

The state senate of Michigan has had a circus. Such terms as "liar," "coward," "tyrannical czar" and "blank thief" have been recklessly flung at the presiding officer, Lieutenant Governor Streng, and his supporters, and even the most cautious of the old senators "feels compelled to admit that our personal relations are strained."

The kink of the matter is that the division is so close that only the decision of a contested election case gave the Democrats a working majority, and pretty soon after that was settled it was charged that Senator Fridlender had two living wives, and had neglected the formality of a divorce from the first one. And, moreover, she is a "squaw!" So they state it in the debate. In reality she is mixed French and Indian, and a daughter of old Chief Petoskey, who was famous in northern Michigan long ago. All that family were talented, and they say this woman was quite beautiful in her youth, but that was a long time ago. Her story runs thus: "Mr. Fridlender had been in Harbor Springs for a year before we were married. He came there from Beaver Island, I think. He was a Frenchman and spoke the French language. There were a good many dances in those days, and a good many feasts held by our people.



MR. FRIDLENDER—MRS. FRIDLENDER NO. 1.

"We used to go to them. Then, on Dec. 12, 1859, we were married by the priest of the Catholic church. Record of the marriage was made in the parish and also at the county seat. We lived together very happily. Then, after two years, he went away. That was in war time, and he went into the army."

Twenty-nine years passed before she saw him again. It was at the Michigan state house, and he was much better groomed, but she knew him instantly. His colleagues no longer deny the marriage, but say they can show that he received what he thought reliable information of her death before wedding his present wife, and the second marriage was so long ago that no indictment will hold, the statute limiting prosecutions for bigamy to six years. They therefore advise him to pay the Indian wife whatever reasonable sum he can, and go on as if nothing had happened. On the other hand his opponents maintain that his living with the second wife makes the bigamy continuous. If they can get him convicted, or even expelled, they can then seat the contestant, Mr. Morse, and the "tyrannical czar" will no longer have the casting vote.

Of course the old, old question comes up: A member having been proved ineligible, does that vitiate any law for which he had voted and which passed by but one majority? It is always decided one way—the vote was valid till the member was expelled. "On previous votes," says an Ohio authority, "expulsion or ineligibility has the same effect as if he had been struck by lightning—no more." Meanwhile Senator Fridlender awaits the "lightning."

Object of a Cow's Affection.

The Sun, of Parsons, Kan., is responsible for one of the most ingenious calf stories on record. It is to the effect that a cow belonging to Joseph Rowe, a Labette county farmer, recently gave birth to a calf, which lived only a few days. After it died the cow transferred its affections to the fourteen-year-old son of the farmer, for whom she manifested a strange fondness. She licks him just as she would a calf, and no one but the boy can do anything with the dumb creature. "The other day young Rowe had occasion to go to town, and as he remained away until after milking time, his sister put on a suit of his clothes and went into the barnyard, and succeeded in deceiving the cow until she (the cow) happened to see the boy coming up the road, when she kicked the pail over and made a bound in the direction of the youth, showing the most unmistakable evidences of delight."

RED LAKE FALLS,
Polk Co., Minn.
f521may

State of Minnesota } ss. In Probate Court,
County of Polk } Special Term Feb. 5, 1891.

In the Matter of the Estate of Peter Bischoff, Deceased:

On receiving and filing the petition of Joseph Bischoff of Red Lake Falls, of the county of Polk, Minnesota, representing, among other things, that Peter Bischoff, late of the county of Polk in the State of Minnesota, on the 3d day of April, A. D. 1888, at Dayton, N. D. died intestate, and being an inhabitant of this county, at the time of his death, leaving goods, chattels and estate within this county, and that the said petitioner is a brother of said deceased, and praying that administration of said estate be to said petitioner, Joseph Bischoff granted:

It is ordered, that said petition be heard before this court, on Tuesday the 17th day of March A. D. 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m. at the probate office, in Crookston in said county.

Ordered Further, that notice thereof be given to the heirs of said deceased, and to all persons interested, by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing, in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 5th day of February, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:50 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. Jackson, St. Paul, Address letters to Chas. E. Dixon, acting city passenger and ticket agent, St. Paul, F. H. Hanson, Gen. W. A. SCHREITER, President,

H. B. DAVIS, Recorder,

WE are making a specialty this season of what we call our PARAGON HARNESS. Made of the FINEST STOCK and the very BEST WORKMANSHIP. Such a harness cannot be bought for less than $25. at retail. But we are willing, in order to introduce it, to SELL ONE SET ONLY to one person as a sample for * $16.50.

$25.00 HARNESS FOR $16.50

IN GENUINE RUBBER $18.50.

DESCRIPTION OF HARNESS.

A fine Buggy Harness stitched twelve stitches to the inch, except traces which are stitched ten. Is made to represent a $50 harness. It has a 3 or 3 1-2 hand laced, leather pad saddle, with covered seat and jockeys; is made from fine stock. Bridle is of usual dimensions, has fine blinds, nice leather front and beautiful rosettes with glass centers, nice nickel bit. Check-rein, either overdraw with nose piece, or side check. Nice russet or black reins. The breast-collar, neck-strap, breeching and girt folds are made either of patent enamel or plain harness breeching leather, as preferred and the layers on the same are cut wide and straight, and being stitched so very fine and nicely creased, give to the harness a costly custom-made appearance. The hip and back straps are doubled and stitched, nicely creased and finished throughout. Boxloops of beautiful design as on custom-made work. Trimmings either Davis Rubber, Nickel Wire or Brass Wire, or a Fancy Style. We refer you to the publishers of this paper as to our responsibility. Remit by Express or Money Order. Money refunded if goods are not satisfactory.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

WOMAN'S OWN SPHERE.

Tailor Gowns for Spring--Things That Deter Women from Marrying --Coiling Her Hair--Nurses Marry Oftenest.

Tailor Gowns For Spring.

Light tweeds and Cheviots in tobacco brown and gray shades, with cross-bars and checks, are used for tailor gowns for the demi-season. Homespuns of rough surface in self-colors also remain in favor. More fanciful French stuffs have raised cord-like designs of diamonds and bars, and others have flower and leaf patterns of one color nearly covering the cream white ground.

Checked tweed gowns for morning or travelling are made with a deep coat and plain skirt simply finished with stitching. The coat has the usual darts and side forms, with also hip seams pointed in front, arched on the sides, and sloped thence to meet the continuous middle forms of the back. The fronts turn back in revers from a narrow vest of faced cloth fastened by small horn buttons. The revers are wide at the top—reaching almost to the armholes—and graduate to a point at the waist line, where they are trimmed with three buttons larger than those on the vest. Wide pocket flaps are set in the hip seams. The sleeves are bias. They are full at the top, and tapered to the wrist, to fasten by two buttons with button-holes; two rows of stitching are around the wrists, and several rows further up outline a cuff. The standing collar is covered in front with faced cloth next the vest. The skirt is bias to match the sleeves. It is cut of walking length, that is to clear the ground all around, unless the tailor is distinctly directed, as too often happens, to lengthen the back to lie four inches on the ground. The front of the skirt hangs straight without clinging closely. it is fitted smoothly around the top by short darts; all the fulness is gathered in the front in a space of four or five inches. The hem is finished by two rows of stitching. The foundation skirt is widely faced with tweed set on smoothly, without pleatings that add to the weight.

Smarter gowns of French woollens, Angora or homespun, have the coat bodice more dressily finished with a vest and revers of thickly repped silk, such as the Muscovite silk, decorated with cords of silver, steel, or gold in an intricate braiding pattern. A kind of ceinture of the silk is set in the hip seams to give apparent length, and is decorated in its pointed fronts with corner designs of the cording. The silk cuffs are in gauntlet shape, wider than the sleeves. Such a gown is very handsome in pearl-colored wool with deeper blue-gray repped silk trimmed with steel and oxodized silver cord.

A novelty this season is broadcloth on which are printed designs of flowers and leaves in natural colors, as tan, gray, or cream grounds strewn with forget-me-nots, violets, or other clusters like those seen in challies and India silks. This printed cloth is used for house dresses, as it is too showy for street gowns. It is usually combined with bengaline or other repped silk. A Paris gown for afternoons at home has a bodice of light tan silk, with sleeves and skirt of printed cloth with tan ground. The high bodice is smoothly fitted like a cuirass, and is laced behind. It extends low over the hips in eleven square tabs that are braided with gold in a straight design like galloon. A yoke-like pattern with tabbed edges is braided below the collar. The cloth sleeves are very full, with close silk cuffs. The straight skirt fans outward at the back in graceful French fashion. Housegowns for the spring, and even for the summer, are being made in Paris of light-colored faced cloths trimmed with flounces of black lace, and a girdle and collar of jet.—Harpers Bazar.

Things That Deter Women from Marrying.

There are three general causes which bring marriage into disfavor with women: philanthropy, higher education and selfanalysis. The first has been a powerful factor in its subtile influence against marriage. The mental atmosphere is permeated with the idea of responsibility for another's happiness. Woman now feels herself accountable for the welfare of humanity, and through the exercise of that responsibility has found occupation for mind and heart which has prevented absorption in her own affairs.

Higher education has affected marriage in as much as it has opened new avenues of employment for women, has fortified them for life as a whole and has led them to regard marriage as an incident. It has given girls a communistic feeling, which makes them prefer to teach where there are other teachers rather than live on a hilltop and read alone to their parents or to retire to a farm or a tenement and bake and brew for their husbands. The higher education has separated marriage and motherhood. Almost all women love children, and would gladly use their knowledge for the delight and profit of family, but they do not want the intervening marriage.

Analysis has advanced from being a method in text books to the study of one's self. The age is analytic. Once work was so constant that married women did not realize their loneliness or the want of appreciation which befell them. Now society and the middle class have leisure to examine their states of mental solitude and to see just where husbands are wanting.—North American Review.

Coiling Her Hair.

It is an amusing thing to see a girl coil her hair. She piles it high on her crown as she can build or hangs it low on her neck, the loose ends straying over her shoulders. She is a young person of character; she knows no indecision; this stand or that must be taken; the middle course she cannot endure. It is only the rare girl who makes herself pretty, for hair nowadays commonly looks as if it were weeks since it had seen a brush or comb. The very low knots are worse in this particular, for they fray out almost with the movement of the lips or the turning of the eyes. Nevertheless, for curly locks they are very pretty when a girl is young enough and picturesque enough to stand such framing of her face by the loose tendrils twisting in her neck and falling against her collar. At last there is a coiffure for the tip tilted nose. Three soft puffs, one above another on the top of the head, seem to suit it famously.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Air the Bedroom.

Will there ever be an end of the need of saying that the room which demands most careful attention is the sleeping apartments. Bedrooms should be light, sunny and spacious, and there should be constant change of air, a window, either in the bedroom itself or in an adjoining room, being partly opened at night. If a chimney passes through the room, a chimney in use, an opening into the chimney covered with one of the simple perforated covers that may be closed at need, makes the next best ventilator to that of the open fireplace of the old days. And now that flannel and cashmere nightgowns are so much used it will perhaps be easier to persuade people that all day underwear, yes, particularly and especially the woven wool next the person, should be removed and carefully hung to air during the night.—Exchange.

Nurses Marry Oftenest.

Miss Mabel Goddard, who has been studying the relations between industry and matrimony for the past ten years, states in pamphlet form that the proportion of marriages is greatest among trained nurses than any other class of women workers. It may be gratitude that moves the hearts of men, and undoubtedly admiration and affection have something to do with the result, but whatever the main cause the fact remains that quiet, docile, intelligent and competent nurses find themselves at the head of homes and families in a remarkably short time after graduation. Like the Vassar girls, these daughters of mercy marry well.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Women Voters in England.

Tremendous strides have been taken in recognition of the principle of woman suffrage during the present century. Women vote for parochial officers, women vote for municipal officers, women vote in the election of and sit as members of school boards; and by the local government act, carried by the present conservative government, women were given the suffrage in the election of county councillors. In none of these matters have I heard any allegation that women have been subjected to corrupt influences.—Charles Bradlaugh in Boston Transcript.

Fashion Hints.

Cat's-eyes and tiger-eyes are added to the imitation jewels with which dress trimmings are studded.

Jet cabochons an inch in diameter are set in open lace-like squares in new passementeries.

A fraise or ruche of white lace and jabots and cravats of lace are on the cloth costumes for spring made by Paris modistes.

Nail-heads imitating amethysts, emeralds, and topazes, for studding sleeves, collars, and plastorns, are called "jewels" in the shops, and are sold for twelve to fifteen cents a dozen.

Ceintures of gold or of net, Swiss belts with pendant fringes, and most realistic serpents of beads and silk cords are added to girdles of gold galloon, passementerie, and jet for finishing the waists of new gowns.

Flannelettes for tennis gowns are ribbed like Bedford cords, and come in narrow stripes of lilac, pale blue, or pink with white. More dressy white woolens, as sheer and soft as crepon, are also in the popular lengthwise ribs.

A military pompon of pleated lace is set erect in the middle of round hats and capotes. It is sometimes encircled by an asp of jet, with ruby or emerald eyes, or else it springs from a circle of large gilt or jet balls that are really mammoth beads.

Homely Hints.

Cauliflower au Gratin.—Arrange some pieces of previously boiled cauliflower on a dish; pour over them a little clarified butter; strew over Parmesan cheese, and season with pepper and salt and a little grated nutmeg; brown quickly in the oven.

Snow Cream.—Well beat the whites of three eggs and add to them a quart of cream; stir well together, add a glassful of raisin wine, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and the peel of half a lemon; whip all to a froth, remove the peel and serve in a glass dish, with sponge cake.

To Dress the Inside of a Sirloin.—Cut the inside from a sirloin of beef, and put it into a stewpan with one and one-half pints of good gravy, a tablespoonful of ketchup of any kind, a little mace, pepper and salt; stew it slowly about an hour, and serve with piquante of horse-radish sauce.

Bread Cakes.—Soak scraps of stale bread in sufficient milk to cover them. When quite soft, mash fine, stir in two well-beaten eggs, a teaspoonful of baking powder, and a teaspoonful of salt. Sift in enough flour to bind them for frying. Drop by spoonfuls into hot butter or drippings.

THE FARM AND FIELD.

INTERESTING MATTERS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

Farmyard Manure--Dairy Advantages--Defective Methods of Feeding.

Farmyard Manure.

It is evident that farm or animal manure must be the principal dependence for keeping up fertility of the soil. The use of commercial fertilizers and green crops, as aids, is often advantageous, but they should not be relied upon exclusively. It is an item of considerable importance to make, save, and apply all the manure possible; but at the same time it is also an item to do the work as economically as possible.

The soluble parts of the manure are much the more valuable, and for this reason it is important to use plenty of material as absorbents, so as to retain all of the liquid and readily soluble portions. For the same reason it is also important to see that the manure is properly protected from rain, as this causes a loss by leaching and evaporation, and if manure is thrown into hills to rot, it should be protected from leaching rains.

Another item in rotting before hauling out is that during fermentation manure throws off organic manner in in a gaseous form and unless considerable care is taken in handling there will be loss of nitrogen. Some use gypsum, spreading in layers as the manure is thrown on, in order to assist in retaining the nitrogen.

The most effectual plan of preventing loss is to haul the manure and scatter directly on the fields where it is needed. If the ground is plowed there will be a very small loss of plant food in any form. On steep hillsides where there is a strong liability to wash, there may be some loss; on land that is reasonably level there will be little if any loss, the valuable parts being taken up and retained by the soil. Of course well rotted manure contains a larger per cent of soluble matter, and will be of less benefit to the succeeding crops than when applied fresh. It requires time to thoroughly rot manure whether in piles in the yard, or in the field. There is more work and more risk of loss by piling and rotting before hauling out, and especially so if left without protection; but if properly handled it will decay in less time. The more thoroughly the manure is rotted and fined the more readily it can be incorporated with the soil. and the better the immediate results secured. Whichever plan is followed care must be taken to avoid waste, and at the same time lessen the cost of handling.

Dairy Advantages.

1. A farmer with a dairy does not have to wait from seed-time to harvest, as a grain raiser does, before he can realize any cash from his labor. A dairy rightly managed is a source of profit the year around. The income is a steady one because the production is steady and evenly distributed over the whole season. I remember one fall when potatoes brought 75 cents per bushel, and the next summer I threw my whole energy into potato production. The result was that I sold my whole crop of tubers for 12½ cents per bushel, less than they cost me for raising. In all my later experience in dairying I have never seen its products go to such extremes in price. Yes, sir, if you want an income you can depend on a rightly managed dairy every time.

2. There is really less labor to be performed on a semi-dairy farm than if grain production alone were the rule. The charm of agriculture life lies in diversified farming, and the diversification must, or should, include dairying.

3. Dairying in a measure returns to the soil some of the fertility it has extracted, while exclusive grain raising impoverishes without giving a recompense.

4. Dairying gives you a chance to manufacture your own product before you market it, which you can not do with wheat, corn, ect. By becoming your own manufacturer you save to yourself the manufacturer's profits, which is a round in the ladder toward bettering your financial condition.

5. Dairying is a reliable business, and one which gives a large proportion of gain for the capital invested, Even the poorest dairy cows yield far more than their beef worth in milk every season, while those that are of better blood and are more wisely fed yield double and treble that amount.

6. A family-supply dairy of but one cow possesses tenfold advantages over the milkman's cup. It is said that in France when one is vaccinated against small-box, the heifer from whose body the vaccine is to be extracted is led into the presence of the patient, and the virus transplanted from the body of the animal to the arm of the latter. I suppose that this is to assure the patient of the genuineness and healthfulness of the virus used, as gross fraud is perpetrated in such matters as well as in others. In the matter of using the milk and butter produced from your own cow, stabled on your own premises, and grazing in your own pasture lot, you have the assurance of healthfulness, cleanliness, and general good quality. The writer does not laud the advantages of dairying simple to hear herself talk, but from an honest conviction that milch husbandry is one of the most valuable requisites of farming. We have no desire to present its claims in a false light, but rather to spread its legitimate points before the eyes of all men. Don't ever be driven into dairying against your better convictions but if you conclude to embark in the business at all, give its management mental energy, and we know you will succeed.

Defective Methods of Feeding.

In the growth of an animal the needed amount of food with the varieties requisite has been the object of much study and experiment. But it is impossible ever to feed farm stock by any invariable rule. Some exceptions will never come in. General rules, however may be followed with fair success. The farmer who neglects to learn these principles of feeding will be a constant loser in a small degree, on every animal kept. It may be truthfully said of such a farmer, in many cases, that the more stock he handles, the greater his losses. Were a young man to think of taking charge of a steam engine or an electric motor without a fair knowledge of the workings of the apparatus composing these intricate agents of great power, he would be styled silly. Yet it is not unusual for a boy or any ignorant man to have almost exclusive charge of the feeding of several thousand dollars' worth of live stock. In fact such a person often owns and directs the feeding and care of a great many valuable animals. Lack of a little knowledge of symptoms and preventives in the source of great loss—in the aggregate amounting to heavy balances on the wrong side of the ledger.

Deep Plowing.

Deep plowing has always been considered as a bugbear by the average farmer, and much opprobruim has been cast upon it by the mistake made by its advocates who have been ignorant of the principles upon which the practice of plowing land depends. To merely turn the land to a depth of eight, nine, or ten inches is to court disaster by burying fertile surface soil under several inches of raw unfertilized subsoil. To eat and digest food are means of life, but to gorge an animal is to destroy life, and in like manner the feeding of plants is to be made the object in preparing the soil by the plow. The soil should be plowed at least eight inches deep, as a rule, and to fit it for such plowing it is to be made fertile to that depth or deeper. Only fertile soil is to be deeply plowed, and every farmer should know of what his soil consists, and its condition, before he puts a plow in it. If it is shallow and ill fertilized, the first business is to deepen it and fertilize it gradually until at least eight inches of soil filled with plant food are available. Nothing else more tends to deeply fertilize a soil than plowing under clover, and it would pay any farmer well to turn under a growth of two feet of pea-vine clover, when in full bloom, nine or ten inches as a beginning of the deep fertilization of his land.—N. Y. Times.

Hard and Soft Food.

Experience shows that hard food is better than soft food for poultry, not that it contains more nutrition, but for the reason that when soft food is given the hens are tempted to eat a a larger proportion than should be the case. The giving of soft food leads to over-feeding and impairs the digestion. It also supplies the wants of the fowl more readily than hard food, and so completely satisfies it that the inducement to work and scratch—so essential to health and the thrift of the fowl—is lessened. There is the fact that when giving soft food the poultryman, by mixing several kinds, is likely to give more of one kind than may be needed, while with hard grains the fowls have a greater privilege of selection of that which they prefer; but with mixed soft food, they must eat everything of which it is composed—all or none—and thereby surfeit themselves. It is proper to give soft food, so as to feed some needed substances, but we believe three times a week sufficient. Give whole grain and scatter it far and wide, or mix it with a litter, thus compelling each hen to hunt and scratch for all she receives, which will keep her in health and promote egg production.—Farm and Fireside.

Stock and Their Drink.

One of the worst things to contend with in the care of stock is their drink. No creature will thrive if compelled to go thirty or forty rods to drink and then get it by standing in the mud up to their knees, or in a cold northwest wind that will chill them so that they won't get warm for the next twenty-four hours. Farmers had better hire money at twelve per cent. to bring water to their barns than compel their stock to travel off in the fields to drink.

Farm Notes.

Are your stables clean? If not, for the sake of those who drink milk, clean them.

In selecting vegetables for the use of the family the garden should contain those of the best quality in preference to size or quantity.

Some clay lands are so stiff that the water cannot go down. Such lands are benefited by deep ploughing, subsoiling and tile drainage.

Economy in feeding means providing the cows with a generous allowance of the food that will produce the most returns.

Don't leave tools of any kind lying out in the weather. Have a place for everything and have everything in its place.

Give your floral plants sufficient water, but not too much. If the water be about the same temperature as the air, it will be better than having it either too warm or too cold.

Experiments made by German officials have demonstrated that a horseshoe made of layers of parchment paper, cemented and pressed together in a hydraulic press, is much more durable than an iron shoe.

Halter-training cattle should be done while they are calves; it is easy then, a few lessons will do it, and these lessons are never forgotten. It is far better than "breaking" them while older.

CARBONATE OF AMMONIA.

Highest Authorities Approve its use as an Ingredient in Baking Powder

That a small portion of carbonate of ammonia—about one part to a hundred of cream of tartar and soda is generally used—is a most valuable addition to a baking powder is a fact well understood by every physician and scientist who has examined into the matter. It adds to the leavening power and keeping qualities of the baking powder and to the wholesomeness of the food raised by it. So used it is entirely harmless, not only, but highly beneficial.

Those baking powders in which carbonate of ammonia is not used are of inferior quality and do not give satisfaction in the making of choicest food. The various articles appearing in the newspapers against the use of carbonate of ammonia are well known to be published by those manufacturers of baking powder who do not use it, in the effort to create a prejudice against the better powders. The articles of such character quoted from scientific or medical journals first appeared therein as paid advertisements.

In explaining the cause of the great value of carbonate of ammonia for leavening purposes, the Scientific American says editorially:

"The carbonate of ammonia is an exceedingly volatile substance. Place a small portion of it upon a knife and hold over a flame, and it will almost immediately be entirely developed into gas and pass off into the air. The gas thus formed is a simple composition of nitrogen and hydrogen, slightly aromatic, inoffensive, and perfectly wholesome. No residue is left from the ammonia. This gives it its superiority as a leavening power over soda and cream of tartar used alone, and has induced its use as a supplement to these articles. A small quantity of ammonia in the dough is effective in producing bread that will be lighter, sweeter and more wholesome than that risen by any other leavening agent. When it is acted upon by the heat of baking the leavening gas that raises the dough is liberated. In this act it uses itself up, as it were; the ammonia is entirely diffused, leaving no trace or residuum whatever. The light, fluffy, flaky appearance, so desirable in biscuits, etc., and so sought after by professional cooks, is said to be imparted to them only by the use of this agent.

"The bakers and baking powder manufacturers producing the finest goods have availed themselves of this useful agent, and the handsomest and best bread and cake are now largely risen by the aid of carbonate of ammonia combined, of course, with other leavening material.

"Ammonia is one of the best known products of the laboratory. As the application of its properties to the purposes of cooking results in giving us lighter and more wholesome bread, biscuit and cake, its general use will prove a boon to dyspeptic humanity."

The Indiana State Board of Health, the New York State Board of Health, the Ohio Food and Dairy Commissioner, the Canadian Government and various other official authorities agree that carbonate of ammonia is a perfectly admissible ingredient for a baking powder and that it in no way effects the wholesomeness of the food.

It is well that consumers should know the facts in reference to so important a matter, that they may dismiss the silly stories published by the alum baking powder makers in order to detract attention from the inferiority of their own goods.—Medical Journal.

A Bad General Presumption.

I think it is not to be denied that the rules by which testimony is admitted or excluded, originating in the purpose of the English courts to protect innocent persons from prosecutions often malicious, and accusations often false, under laws frequently unjust and arbitrary, do now sometimes produce effects unfair to society and partial to the criminal class. Taken in connection with the requirement of a unanimous verdict from twelve jurors, selected by process that carefully sifts out intelligence and competence, the result, in a large proportion of cases, is the escape of the guilty at the cost and risk of the community. I am even tempted to go so far as to say that in a large class of criminal cases the presumption of innocence for the accused is, if not wholly unfounded, at least much too obstinately maintained, and that the rights of society are ignored or violated.—Scribner.

A FEMALE lecturer in New York proposes to aid in the solution of the problem of the business dress for women by what she terms a cheap device. It can be constructed on her plan for $70. That is evidently the great need of the girls and women who are troubled how to get rid of their $5 to $10 per week. Still, they will be apt to wait for the invention of a still cheaper fashion.

Cows Attacked by Hungry Birds

The severity of the pangs of hunger among birds, brought about by the recent severe weather, has had a forcible illustration at Horsington, Somerset. It was noticed that one of a herd of cows had a hole in its back, near the root of the tail, deep enough to receive a large size hen's egg. It was afterwards found that other cows in the herd had also wounds in the back, which could not be accounted for, and it was subsequently discovered that the mischief was caused by magpies, who, driven by hunger, had resorted to tearing flesh from the animals.

Something is lost when you use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It's Catarrh. The worst cases yield to its mild, soothing, cleansing, and healing properties. No matter how bad your case, or of how long standing, you can be cured. Incurable cases are rare. It's worth $500 to you, if you have one. The manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Remedy are looking for them. They'll pay you that amount in cash, if they can't cure you. It's a plain square offer from a responsible business house, and they mean it. It seems too one-sided, too much of a risk. It would be—with any other medicine behind it. It only goes to prove what's been said: incurable cases are rare—with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Other so-called remedies may palliate for a time; this cures for all time. By its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, it conquers the worst cases. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, watering or weak eyes, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are.

Remedy sold by druggists, only 50 cents.

A TALE OF TWO CHAIRS.

Elijah on his Lizzie calls.
When chores are done and evening falls.
Elijah's bashful, Lizzie's sly,
But then, her parents sit near by.
"Good-night, Elijah—Liz, good-night,"
And paw and maw, by candle light,
Go off to bed and leave to bliss
Their daughter and her beau, with chairs arranged like this:

Elijah 'lows "This weather'll do
Fur hay'n." Lizzie thinks so, too.
"Went coonin' 'long with John las' night."
"Get any coons?" "No: moon wa'n't bright."
And so they court; naught goes amiss
And Lige and Liz have aimed respective chairs like this:

With Spartan will to do or die
Elijah seems to grow less shy
And chairs become bewitched, I wis,
They hitch, and hitch, and hitch, until they stand like this:

"D'you like me Liz?" "Oh, Lige!" they kiss.
Then round gets caught in round, and chairs resemble this:

THE CARPENTER'S MATE.

TWENTY years ago I commanded one of the vessels, the Norseman, of the old Allesworth line of Liverpool. She was in the East India trade at the time, and I was about to make my first voyage as master. I had been with her the previous voyage in the capacity of chief mate, and was more than pleased when the firm called me into their private office and offered me the command of the ship.

I had just been married, and it is needless to say that I accepted the firm's offer, at the same time arranging to have my wife accompany me on the voyage.

"I have a favor to ask of you, Capt. Thornton," said Mr. Burlingame, the senior partner, when we were alone, "and I rely upon your honor to keep the matter confidential."

I bowed, and Mr. Burlingame went on:—

"My daughter Evelyn has become infatuated with one of my clerks, and he has had the assurance to ask her hand in marriage. He has been dismissed from our employ, and I have seen nothing of him since. My daughter has taken the matter to heart, and I have decided to send her out with you on a voyage, in hope that the change of scene and the companionship of your wife and yourself may bring back the roses to her cheek. Anything you can do to assist in makher forget this wretched infatuation will be appreciated."

I had little faith in my ability to cause Miss Evelyn to forget her lover; besides, as I had just entered the married state myself, I could hardly be expected to sympathize with a plan for the separation of two loving hearts, but I promised to care for the shipowner's daughter as far as was in my power, and the interview terminated.

The following morning my wife and I went aboard the Norseman, which was lying at anchor in the Mersey. At nine o'clock Mr. Burlingame and his daughter came aboard. The latter was a handsome young lady of twenty-two years, but her sweet face was pale and sad, and although she said nothing, it was evident that the thought of leaving home affected her deeply.

Farewells were over, the anchor was aweigh, and Mr. Burlingame, after a parting grasp of the hand, and a whispered admonition to "take good care of Evelyn," stepped aboard the tender and returned to shore. We were towed down the Mersey, crossed the bar, and dismissing our tug pilot, bore away for the Cape of Good Hope.

After we were well under way all hands were called aft to choose watches. As the crew filed by, one of their number, a fine-looking young fellow, attracted my attention.

"Who is that young man?" I asked pointing him out to Mr. Everson, my chief mate.

"Kenneth Gardner; he shipped as carpenter's mate," was the reply.

Just as the crew ranged themselves in a line a little abaft the mainmast, the ladies came on deck and walked forward to where I was standing.

As I turned to greet them I was startled by a scream from Miss Burlingame, and the next moment I was holding her limp form in my arms. She was at once taken below and soon recovered consciousness, but could give no explanation of her fainting fit.

We were scarcely two weeks out before I noticed a great change in Miss Burlingame. The roses returned to her cheeks, and she seemed well pleased with her situation aboard the Norseman.

She went all over the ship, sometimes accompanied by my wife, and sometimes alone. Several times I noticed her in conversation with the carpenter's mate, and, my curiosity being aroused, I walked forward one day and got into conversation with him.

I found Gardner an intelligent fellow, possessing a surprising familiarity with the rules of navigation and all matters pertaining to the merchant marine. I thought it a little singular that a man of his intelligence and apparent ability had no better position than that of carpenter's mate on a merchantman, and told him so.

His reply was that his limited resources had prevented his gratifying in any other way his passion for travelling and seeing the world. The explanation was not satisfactory, but a look into the handsome, manly face convinced me that whatever his reasons were for being on the Norseman in his present capacity, they did not concern me, and I asked him no further questions on the matter.

In due time we doubled the Cape of Good Hope, ran the eastings down, and crossing the Bay of Bengal, sighted one morning the low sandhills and, later, the flat, sandy coast at the mouth of the Hooghly. We took aboard a native pilot, and were soon lying at anchor at Garden Reach, about eleven miles below Calcutta. I went ashore accompanied by my wife and Miss Burlingame.

During the voyage the young lady had regained her health and spirits, and had become well acquainted with the carpenter's mate. While he took no liberties, I began to feel anxious about the matter, and regretted that the handsome youth was a member of my crew. I pitied the poor clerk left in Old England and meditated on the fickleness of woman.

At Calcutta we loaded a cargo of jute for Melbourne and put out to sea. On the morning of the sixth day out the baromenter began to fall rapidly, and as the typhoon season was at hand I felt a little anxious, although there was no indication of danger in the clear sky and the light breeze which fanned the surface of the Indian Ocean.

About two o'clock in the afternoon the sky to windward showed signs of a gathering storm. Professional pride told me to crowd on all sail so long as the wind continued fair, but experience whispered that the lives of the ship's crew, my wife and Miss Burlingame depended to a great extent upon my seamanship and good judgment. I considered the matter a few minutes, and then, summoning the chief mate, said—

"Mr. Everson, call all hands, take in the light sail, send down the studdingsail yards and booms, skysail, royal and topgallant yards fore and aft, and close reef the topsails and courses.

The mate, whose hair and beard were whitened by the ocean blast of forty years, regarded me in surprise for a moment, then touched his cap and returned to the waist. I could see that the old salt doubted the advisability of the course I was pursuing.

The orders for shortening sail were rapidly executed, and in less than twenty minutes the Norseman was all snug fore and aft. In the meantime the horizon became overcast with a heavy bank of copper-colored clouds; in the thirty years I have followed the sea I have never seen the elements arrayed in a more terrific line of battle than they were at 3:30 of the afternoon of September 15, 1870.

The hatches were carefully battened down and the watch sent below to secure what rest they might, while I paced the quarter-deck, restless and uneasy. The breeze gradually died out and a dead calm ensued.

The ladies came on deck and chaffed me for shortening sail.

The barometer continued falling, and I again ordered all hands called. A line of foam was approaching on the starboard beam.

"Hard a port!"

"Hard a port, sir!" responded the helmsman.

I seized my trumpet and gave my orders.

"Haul up your courses."

The command was promptly executed, and the men started aloft to furl. They were too late.

"Down for your lives! Down!"

The tidal wave struck us on our port quarter, breaking over the poop deck, accompanied by a fearful gust of wind. Away went our courses, and the topsails were literally blown from the bolt ropes.

I looked for the ladies who had been standing on the quarter-deck. Merciful heavens! they had been washed overboard, and I saw their agonized faces half a ship's length to leeward.

With a yell to lower away the starboard boat I plunged into the sea. as I rose to the surface I heard a cool voice beside me:—

"Cheer up, Cap'n we'll save them sure."

I glanced over my shoulder and saw the carpenter's mate.

It seemed as though Providence had intervened in our behalf, for after the first terrible gust the wind subsided. We reached the ladies and looked around for the boat. It was coming, the crew pulling like demons, while in the sheets sat Everson, urging them to greater exertion.

By the time we returned to the ship the cyclone had broken upon us in all its fury, and for three days we drifted at the mercy of the storm.

On the morning of the fourth day the wind and sea went down, the damage to the Norseman was quickly repaired, and we stood away for Melbourn.

Upon our arival Kenneth Gardner asked for his discharge, which I could not well refuse him. After the papers had been filled out I took occasion to thank the young man warmly in behalf of Mr. Burlingame, and intimated that it would be to his advantage to return to Liverpool as soon as possible, giving him at the same time a letter of introduction to my employer, which contained a detailed description of the gallant conduct of Gardner in saving Miss Evelyn's life.

The ladies were ashore, stopping at one of the hotels, and I was to join them later in the day. I appeared about five o'clock. Mrs. Thornton was suffering from a headache and Miss Burlingame had gone for a drive.

The young lady came in half an hour after accompanied by Kenneth Gardner. Exchanging greetings, the latter placed in my hands a document. I opened it and was taken flat aback at the contents. It was a certificate signed by a leading clergyman of Melbourne, stating that Hiram Holdsworth and Evelyn Burlingame had that day been united in marriage.

Of course, I gave them my blessing. I couldn't help it. I believe I kissed the bride several times, and would have continued had not my wife objected.

The next thing was to inform Mr. Burlingame of the condition of affairs, and as gently as possible I broke the news that his discharged clerk had rather played it on the old man. I recieved his answer at San Francisco in the person of Captain Gregson, who had been sent out to relieve me of the command of the Norseman, but the agents of Burlingame and Co. were instructed to pay me a full year's salary.

Burlingame died of apoplexy, and as Evelyn was the only heir, she inherited all his vast wealth.

A River that Flows Inland.

There is an interesting instance of water flowing inland from the sea. It is found on the island of Cephalonia, in the Ionian sea, west of Greece. The phenomenon occurs on the southwest side of the island near the small town and port of Argostoli. Two streams flow at a short distance from one another, straight from the sea, for a few yards, and then follow different courses. One turns at right angles and runs for some ways parallel with the shore and close to it. Then it turns again toward the sea, and running, of course deeper and deeper, doubles completely under itself, thus forming a loop, and finally passes out of sight deep down in a landward direction. In its course it turns two flour mills, which will give an idea of the strength of the current. There is no tide in the sea here, and the flow of the salt water brook is perfectly steady and continuous. The other stream disappears in the ground in a similar way. This curious phenomenon has not attracted much attention because Argostoli is not on one of the regular tourist routes. No one knows what becomes of this water, but it probably flows to some subteranean reservoir, and it may have something to do with the earthquakes that occur in that neighborhood once in a long while, or, possibly, it feeds some distant volcano, for, as is well known, the most generally accepted theory of the cause of volcanic eruptions is, that they are due to steam generated from water, admitted through the cracks in the earth's crust, or in some other way.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

Will the African Elephant Work?

In modern times, we have only to look to India to be convinced of the great usefulness of the elephant. To the agriculturist, who uses him before his wagon or his plow, he is indispensable, and for the transportation of heavy articles, he has no rival. We see him carrying immense tree-trunks out of the Indian forest, and by his indefatigable industry, in picking up and carrying off large stones, aiding the construction of roads and railways. For labor of this kind a coolie receives from four to eight annas, while five and six rupees are paid for the daily work of an eleqhant. From this fact, we conclude that one elephant performs the work of from twelve to twenty-two coolies.

From the record of the British expedition against King Theodore of Abyssinia in 1868, we learn that 44 elephants were shipped from Bombay for use in the campaign. Each animal was in charge of two men. Of this number five succumbed during the campaign. The remaining 39 rendered valuable services, being entrusted with the transportation, through a mountainous country, of cannon, ammunition and supplies. It was frequently very difficult to procure food for them, and as it was often necessary to traverse great distances to reach the watering places, the death of the five animals is ascribed to these hardships. Although elephants move slowly through a mountainous country and soon become foot-sore, they perform their task with admirable faithfulness. Without them it would have been necessary to await the building of wagon roads.—Goldthwaite's Geographical Magazine.

Sportsmen Never Get Ill.

As a rule a sportsman may take great liberties with himself without being much the worse. No man was ever harmed by wet feet on a moor, though if he comes home and contemplates them for an hour over a gunroom fire he may be reminded of the indiscretion. A deer-stalker has to put up with great exposure and temporary discomfort, but he is rarely the worse for it. He may have to run at the top of his speed for two or three miles along a rough hillside to cut off a stag he has wounded or started, or in some way made a mistake with, and he arrives at his post as hot as a man can be.

The deer are not in sight, and have to be waited for in the best position for the shot, not for the comfort of the shooter. The place is high up—2,000 feet up, perhaps, among lichen and rocks and great patches of snow; it is October, and an east wind blows upon the little company of three which seems to cut into their very hearts; finally a snow shower comes on, as it were a winding sheet, We have spent a couple of hours or more in such a position, teeth chattering, body shakeing, fingers benumbed. If the stag judiciously wait for an hour he is probably missed; the above three phenomena do not promote good rifle shooting. Very likely the stag never comes at all; he was suspicious and uneasy, and preferred to take an unusual pass, and so dissapointment is added to the other discomforts. But such a wait has never made us ill, nor have we ever seen a stalker who was the worse for it.—From Macmullans' Magazine.

"August Flower"

For two years I suffered terribly with stomach trouble, and was for all that time under treatment by a physician. He finally, after trying everything, said stomach was about worn out, and that I would have to cease eating solid food for a time at least. I was so weak that I could not work. Finally on the recommendation of a friend who had used your preparations with beneficial results, I procured a bottle of August Flower, and commenced using it. It seemed to do me good at once. I gained in strength and flesh rapidly; my appetite became good, and I suffered no bad effects from what I ate. I feel now like a new man, and consider that August Flower has entirely cured me of Dyspepsia in its worst form. JAMES E. DEDERICK, Saugerties, New York.

General Surprise.

The man-eating tiger is a creature both cunning and audacious. One described by Sir Samuel Baker, which became the victim of a practical joke, was not the typical old and mangy animal, but a powerful beast, of almost unexampled ferocity. It was a merciless highwayman, which infested a portion of the road, and frequently carried off the drivers of bullock carts to feast upon them in the jungle.

The natives feared to travel with a single cart, and it became the custom to pass the dreaded spot with several teams together. This, however, proved a vain precaution, for the tiger seized the driver of the hindmost cart, and made away with him, in spite of the cries of those left behind.

At length, Mr. Duff, the superintendent of police, provided two covered carts, each drawn as usual, by two bullocks. The leading one was fitted with strong bars of bamboo, which formed an impenetrable cage. In this the driver was seated, and Mr. Duff himself sat with his face toward the rear, prepared to fire throug the bars at the moment of attack.

This would have been an exciting time for the driver, but that individual was personated by a dummy stuffed with straw, which might prove tempting to the tiger's eye, but would hardly satisfy his palate.

Slowly the carts moved along the dreaded path. Suddenly there was a roar and a crash in the jungle. A large tiger bounded forth, seized the dummy driver, and dragged him away. Nothing could have been better planned, but one chance, necessary to success, had been forgotten. No sooner had the tiger roared and bounded upon the carts than the bullocks, terrified beyond control, went full gallop across the country, followed by the other team, all in the wildest panic.

It was impossible to fire, and after a few seconds of desperate chariot-racing, both carts capsized, and lay, with the animals, in a heap on the ground. The victorious man-eater, victim of what he must have considered a practical joke, was left to a dry meal of a straw-stuffed carter, instead of the juicy native he had expected to get.—Youth's Companion.

Wall Street Cripples.

"Down in the district of town known as Wall street," a distinguished railroad official said recently, a number of sturdy men move about on crutches. They have all their arms and legs; their faces are as a rule the faces of men whose lives are not too hard; they do not sport the Grand Army buttons. If you watch them you see that they do not rely very greatly on their crutches; that the crutches, to be sure, are always under the arms in the right position for use, but they are used very seldom. One of the church bearers will stand and talk to a friend, holding the crutches entirely off the sidewalk, and will gesticulate with them violently; then starting on he will let the foot of the crutch touch ground once in every three or four or half a dozen steps. These gentlemen are 'railroad cripples,' who are suing railroad companies for alleged damages; they go around with crutchss so they can swear on the witness stand that they were on crutches for six months' after the accident, on account of which they are suing."—New York Sun.

CREOLE AND PURITAN

By T. C. DE LEON.

Author of "Four Years in Rebel Capitals," "Juny," "Cross Purposes."

DEDICATED TO HON. HENRY WATTERSON,
In Memory of Schoolboy Days, Still Unforgotten, as Our Shadows Lengthen
Toward the Sunset.

Copyright, 1890, by J. B. Lippincott Company, and published by arrangement with [illegible] concluded it a solemn duty to write you some facts which it is your right to know. For, from chance words escaping her, I am now convinced that Edith Van der Huysen knew in those days secrets which another's command and my own sense of honor locked behind my lips.

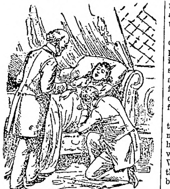
"I could also swear that she lost or withheld a brief note written me on the day of Bennie's wedding to further seal my lips on the knowledge that the love she denied me was given utterly to you.



The wife he had won—and lost!

"I am sure now, as I suspected then, that Edith herself loved you, as far as she is capable of loving. I am convinced she visits Egypt now to test on the man that wonderful fascination of hers which failed with the boy.

"Another reason this that I should break my word and my silence now—that I should reproach myself for not having done so in the past."

Then the letter went on to explain very delicately the story of that cottage on the Hudson, and how it chanced that the pure girl's secret escaped into his keeping. It further told how the young widow chanced to be in New Orleans. She had been wholly ignorant of her husband's total ruin by the war, and Dale would not tell her of his failure to recover the dead man's property, as he had recovered madame's plantations adjoining. Dale had postponed the ill news, letting her suppose the money he furnished was her own.

What betrayed his secret, what caused her sudden change toward him, he never knew: but after Mardi Gras night she positively declined another dollar, and insisted on leaving New Orleans at once. This she did by selling her diamonds. And from that day Dale had never been able to trace her whereabouts, but had received three kind and gentle letters, each inclosing a check, but only adding that she was well and with her father and aunt.

The letter closed with frank forgiveness of Latour's violence and insult; with candid praise for the fame he had won in his new service; and with most delicate intimation that, if his memory of his early love was not really dead, he might wish to find its object once more.

Latour again folded the letter carefully, placing it in his inner pocket.

He was absolutely sure that Dale Everett was as equally ignorant of the base suspicion he had harbored of the wronged woman as that they had ever met and spoken in the garden.

His decision had been made as calmly as irrevocably on first reading Dale's letter. There had been no question of it: his duty to himself, to the true woman and noble gentleman he had so injured, demanded that he should seek them now, striving as best he might to atone for his past.

But stronger than duty was his awakened love for the sweetheart of his boyhood—the love he himself had so long believed dead, not sleeping; that only last night he had boasted to another was buried deep and still as the Memlook caliphs in their tombs!

With Latour, to decide had been to act ever. He stood in that still moonlight, ready and determined to start upon the quest for his spirit's Sangreal, as had been that older and less sinful Launcelot.

With the earliest streak of dawn he had gripped Ahmed Mustafa's hand, mounted his horse and was riding slowly toward the station of the Northern railway. As he rode near the Mosque el Aksar ere yet the first ray of the sun had gilded its lofty minarets, from one of them floated the muezzin's note of its advent to the faithful:

"Allah il Allah! Mohammed resoul il Allah!"

And that call echoed through the chamber where Edith, Lady Martindale, lay calm and still upon her bed, as though love and sin and remorse had never been. It sounded clear into the chamber near, where her husband heard, springing from bed as the sound of Sir Roger Arnyffe's rap blended with its solemn cadence.

Lord Martindale had been detained long at the British consulate general.

"It is my duty to make this a national matter, my lord," her British majesty's representative had insisted on hearing the facts of the capture. "Much as you may desire to avoid publicity, I must report the details to the foreign office."

"Can't stop the wheels of diplomacy, I suppose," grumbled Lord Martindale. "Might be worse, though. Devilish lucky not to be in America, you know. Those newspaper fellows would have twenty different versions already in as many newspapers, really! Some comfort in a slow country, after all."

But at last, escaping the consul general and refusing the proffered services of the dragoman, the anxious husband started for the hotel, walking rapidly through the crooked and narrow streets. But, swift as was his stride, the Englishman's thoughts were still more rapid, reviewing the near past and trying to comprehend its punishment for him. He not only admired his wife, but loved her with the deep passion of a sluggish nature when waked to feeling; and her insistent return to a demand for a separation pained him more than the taunts and insults she had heaped upon him that morning.

But, with all that, no shadow of jealousy clouded the perfect trust he reposed in her. Whatever her whim or imperious temper during the ten years she had been an acknowledged leader and envied beauty in London society, no faintest whisper had been heard in any quarter against Lady Martindale's perfect discretion.

Suddenly the houses seemed strange to him; the street was narrower, and he noticed that more than one of the overhanging balconies quite bridged it. He was at the Turkish quarter of Cairo. With agony of helplessness he realized that he was lost in a city of the dumb; but what must be thought of his sick wife had she waked meantime, and noticed his long absence from her side. British pluck rose at thought of her; he turned, pressed round many a tortuous lane, suddenly halting to mop his brow, with a great sigh of relief, as the Eybikieh showed before him.

Five minutes later he had bounded up the stair and passed softly across his wife's sitting room. The lamp upon the stand was turned low, but resting against it was a folded square of paper, addressed to him in his wife's writing. Tearing it open Lord Martindale read:

Do not wake me, my husband, but if you love me take me away at once. Cairo is hateful to me after today! Forgive me all my waywardness—my taunts. Oh, Herbert, take me home and I will never ask to leave you again. EDITH.

The great, sturdy fellow read these lines over and over, through suspicious moisture in his eyes; with a great lump in his throat.

"Husband! Herbert! The first time she has used those names for months," he said aloud. "Poor child! how her pride must have suffered to bring confession! But she loves me the same, thank God! Go? Of course she shall; first train, by Jove!"

He dived deep in his pocket, drew out his "Murray," and scanned the train list eagerly, muttering:

"Um, um! 6:10 a. m.; yes, that will do. Plenty time to pack after dawn."

He stood irresolute a moment, his face glorified almost into beauty by the radiance of a new born joy. Then he softly raised the portiere of his wife's room. The stillness of death was there, broken only by the heavy, regular breaths of the English maid sleeping profoundly on a near divan. Only reflection from the brilliant moonlight lit the room. Thrown carelessly upon the bed he saw the graceful, stately form he so loved, the loose glory of her superb hair sweeping about the shoulders and shadowing the face.

The husband paused beneath the lifted curtain, the impulse to pass the two paces between and softly seal their new peace upon her lips strong upon him. But he mastered it, dropping the portiere gently as he whispered to himself:

"She would wake so startled! She is sleeping so light! But at dawn!"——

Lightly crossing the room he sought his own, where he found Harris, with bandaged head and pale face, sitting up for him. To the groom's infinite amaze as he rose to his feet Lord Martindale rushed upon him, seized his hand in vise like grip and shook it fiercely.

"Glad you're all right! Thank you sincerely—very sincerely! She told me, you know!" the British peer blurted out at the dumfounded serving man.

Harris let his relinquished hand drop limp to his side, gasping with surprise and flaming red with pride.

"Oh! me lud! me lud!" was all he could mutter, but the tone was as eloquent as most after dinner speeches are not.

"Leave this cursed place at dawn, Harris," his lordship added. "Train at 6:10. Get to bed now and wake me at first light. Here, send this to Sir Roger at once. Must see him to say good-by, you know. That's all!"

And soon the lately anxious husband threw himself upon his bed, the happy light of the new day dawning for him still shining in his face.

Did the beautiful woman lying in the room so near know what a load her words had lifted from his true, undemonstrative heart?

When Adrien Latour's last words had crashed upon her sickening sense, when his tall form passed from her sight, as she felt forever, the horror frozen in Edith's face rested there, cold and still.

A cunning sculpture of despair had been not more motionless than the stately woman there, while the little clock ticked sixty seconds out upon the deadly stillness.

Gradually the rigid arms relaxed, the horror softened in her eyes—only the anguish left; and a great, gasping sob shivered from her heart. The stately head, shadowed by the loose hair, dropped low in her hands; again the sob rent her—this time a moan:

So many minutes. Then the face was raised, white and sorrowful, the eyes now dark and luminous, the lips no longer set, but quivering with the almost soundless words:

"Yes—expiation!"

She grasped the curtain, rising to her feet and putting back the hair from her broad, low forehead with both hands. Quietly, calmly she moved to the table, opened her desk with steady hand and began to write rapidly.

"I dare not see him to-night," she said, in low tones. "What I owe his faithful heart I will begin to pay—to-morrow!"

A luminous resolve lighted the grand oval of her face. Rapidly she folded the note and placed it on the stand without, the low voice—not trembling now, but clear and sweet—repeating:

"Expiation! Yes, thank God! expiation!"

Turning back, the raised curtain still in her right hand, a quick agonizing spasm shot through her side. Her left hand clutched the laces above her heart, crushing them hard against it; a labored breath or two and the pain passed away.

"That is the first step! The next is so hard—so hard!"

Her whisper was full of shame and sorrow; but never hesitating she sat once more and wrote in rapid characters, but firm and clear:

"Knowing you as I do, Adrien, knowing myself as you now know me, I feel that you will never look into my face this side of the great mercy seat. That I sinned against you all, more against myself, most against God, through my wild love for you is no palliation. For what I thought love itself was only crime! That love which schemed to make you my husband, which would have made me your slave had you so willed—that passion is dead. You killed it at a blow, showing me myself in the full glare of my sin; but, God be thanked, not hopeless now. And when we do meet there expiation will be done, if his mercy lets contrition, lifelong study of duty atone here. For now I see that lust is never love. It may rise to the dignity of passion, never to that better, purer love she feels for you. I have told my husband enough to lift the load I studied to heap upon that true heart, so little conscious of the baseness in mine. Confession now would punish him as I am punished! Everything Dale Everett believes of me—yes, far more than he suspects—is true! I lied to him, lied to that pure girl, lied to you in everything save when I said I loved you! And the letter she wrote to Dale on her wedding day I gave to"——

Again the sharp pain pierced her side, fierce, unbearable. Agonized, racked, she pressed her hand upon her breast. With ashen lips apart, breathless, she leaned against the table.

Mechanically her hand reached for one of the bottles near, sprung the stopper and the sickening odor of chloroform stole into the air. She placed it to her nostrils; the tortured lungs moved gaspingly, each breath a stab, then gradually more naturally, under the numbing drug.

Her right hand closed the bottle wearily, pushing it back among the others, then dropping nervelessly upon the written page.

A moment later that hand closed hard upon the sheet, crushing it with spasmodic strength against her heart. She rose to her feet, not noting the jar that overturned the candle; staggered to the bed and fell upon it with one deep gasp of relief unspeakable!

The sputtering taper on the table flared high up, then went out, leaving the moonlight dim about the room; but Lady Martindale lay calm and motionless as a tired infant on the mother's breast, until the first gray streak of day rose over the eastern desert and, peering through her casement, lightly touched the soft folds of her white drapery.

Then from the minaret swelled out the call of the muezzin, heard by Latour as he went forth to his quest; by the eager husband fresh awakened into his new life of love; by the trusty old friend coming to bid them Godspeed.

But if the sleeping woman heard the call she made no sign, lying there quiet and peaceful as though love, remorse and sin had never been.

Sir Roger was doubtful if his patient's strength was equal to an early journey, but Lord Martindale would hear no doubts. In his new found joy his wife's will was not his law alone; it must be law to circumstance as well.

Crossing the sitting room with a boy's step the husband moved swiftly to his wife's side. The kiss he withheld last night might wake her now. He stooped and pressed it softly on her lips.

Sir Roger in the doorway saw him stagger back against the will, wide eyed, a ghastly horror in his face.

At the bedside in an instant, the surgeon raised the rounded wrist. Quickly he stooped and passed his cheek before the lips, then placed his ear to the heart. Tenderly he laid the still hand by her side, and the face he raised to the husband struck him to his knees by that bedside, his strong frame racked by soundless sobs, his white face pressed hard on the cold, still one of the wife he had won—and lost!

No word was spoken; but the old surgeon turned away. His practiced eye caught the writing case, the candle overturned, the bottles. One of these he raised, smelled the chloroform and shook his head.

Then, conscious of the crumpled paper left in his by the stiffened fingers he had held, he opened it and read a few lines. Glancing at the still bowed head, at the calm, peaceful face near it, with infinite pity, Sir Roger moved swiftly to the door and held the paper in the night lamp there.

When it had curled, blazed and shriveled black to cinder still no word was spoken.

Only the breathing of the sleeping maid was heard in that still chamber, whence a woman and her secret had both gone out into the new dawn.

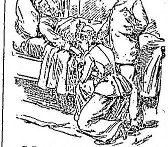
Had her own mocking words been prophecy?

Had her Œdipus come to her?

And, with the riddle of the ages solved for him, had a later Sphinx found life was bearable no more?

PART III—CHAPTER IX.

WHAT QUEST BROUGHT.



Full memory had come back now.

A heavy snow drove across Broadway, freezing against the window of the hotel whence Adrien Latour peered anxiously into the late December day that closed the old year.

From Alexandria, where he chanced on steamer day, he had gone direct to Paris. From the military attache of the United States legation there he learned that Dale Everett had sailed for home soon after the Martindales left for Egypt, but that his arrival at a New York hotel had just appeared in late papers. Latour promptly cabled there, taking the next Havre steamer; and as her gangplank touched the New York wharf, not waiting "the law's delay" in custom house matters he drove straight to the hotel.

Awaiting him there he found tough old Dr. Minot, an army surgeon known in boyhood's days; and from him learned that his cable had reached Dale too late for answer. He had been ordered home for special duty, and arriving quite sick had insisted on attempting it. Exposure in the dreadful weather had developed typhoid symptoms; and he now lay ill at the hotel.

"Is he dangerously ill?" Adrien asked the doctor, his face white with anxiety.

"How the devil can I say?" the old surgeon answered gruffly. "You might as well ack, Do men get killed in battle? Some do; some don't! Typhoid is as bad as bullets. If he weathers the fifth day from this he'll probably pull through. Come up and help nurse him."

And Latour did nurse him, with the tenderness of a woman, never leaving the bedside save to confer with the lawyer and detective he had promptly put on a search for Bennie Mason. But advertisements for heirs of Beverly Mason were unanswered; and the detective system of New York remained ignorant whether Bennie or her father was in that city or not.

Twice in that weary suspense of five days Dr. Minot had shaken his head ominously on taking his patient's temperature, and Adrien read in his face that Dale would die. But twice the mighty frame and unbroken constitution had wrestled successfully with the grim foe, for it seemed that the strong will which had borne him from boyhood to honors and distinction had decreed that the matter it dominated should not yield.

But through the wandering fancies of the fever one had recurred again and again—meaningless to all else, but thrilling Adrien Latour with infinite pity. Half moan, half entreaty, would come the words:

"We're old—old friends, Bennie!"

And hearing them the Creole had more than once hid his face in the coverlet and pressed his grim mustache against the wasted hand lying helpless upon it.

This was the day of crisis. Outside the snowflakes flew faster and more blinding, pedestrians turned up coat collars about their ears, and the few cab horses left at the stands seemed mutely begging pity and shelter. Inside Dr. Minot nodded comfortably in an easy chair before the fire, waiting the waking so meaningful; Adrien Latour, at the window, gnawed his mustache in restless thought, mechanically counting the few street lamps now visible through the storm.

Suddenly a movement in the bed, and both watchers started forward to see the longed for sanity in the eyes of Dale Everett feebly turned from one to the other. Gradually memory crept into them, now steadily fixed on Latour; the wasted fingers crept out to his hand, and as the Creole bowed his head over them Dale whispered feebly:

"Letter—came—dear old boy!"

Then, closing his eyes in very weariness of content, he slept softly.

"Will he get well?" Adrien whispered eagerly.

"How the devil can I tell?" again answered old Minot, this time rather huskily and with suspicious moisture in his eyes. And he blew his nose trumpet like before he added, "Watching and tonics and he'll all right now."

Since the day his appointment as cadet reached him in Paris, Latour had never felt the joy that now thrilled through him. When the doctor left he sat before the glowing coals dreaming, while the snow fell faster without and darkness crept into the sick room. But he heard nothing save the regular breathing of his sleeping friend, saw nothing but pictures of the long past in the glowing vistas of the sea coal.

Suddenly he felt a light touch on his shoulder.

"Tapped twice, and feared to disturb him," the new comer said, jerking his head toward the sleeper. "How's he getting 'long?"

"Better. Any luck?" Adrien replied anxiously.

The other motioned him into the parlor and closed the door before he answered, quietly:

"Luck's not in my line, general. Dick Peerman's reputation was made by trusting to something better'n that. No luck."

The speaker was wiry, medium sized, and close shaven. He was dressed in scrupulous black, with natty boots and stitched tan gloves. The hat he had not removed was flat rimmed, with a broad band of crape. He was an ordinary man, with two extraordinary things about him: one that, coming from the furious storm, there was no speck of moisture

Good Crop News.

An Evil Wind Has Been Blowing Good Prospects to our American Shores

France and Russia as well as India in bad Shape as to Wheat Crops.

The London Standard's Estimate of the Wheat Shortage —Its Effect.

LONDON, April 6.—The Standard publishes a long and careful review of the agricultural outlook, in the course of which it says that the steady raise in wheat revives the hopes of the English farmer, adding that wheat will probably reach the highest price in many years, the principal cause of the rise being the failure of foreign crops.

The wheat crops of France and Russia, according to Standard, are much below the average; the same paper says, the deficiency will be at least 20,000,000 quarters, adding: "It is expected that cold winds and frosts have almost destroyed the French crop. Germany, Holland and Belgium all furnish pessimistic reports. In Roumania there is a diseased wheat area, and in India there has been a bad wheat season. Whatever the magnitude of America's crop may be, it will not be sufficient to cover the European deficit thus compelling an extensive draft upon the reserves for the third year in succession.

The Standard in conclusion, says: "Increased home consumption, the decreased wheat area, owing to the spread of population, and recourse to scientific tillage in order to repair the waste of first settlers, thus increasing the cost of production, must inevitably remove the American farmers' formidable competition in European markets and allow the English farmer to look forward to a prosperous future."

A New Profession.

The writing of advertisements is assuming the dignity of a profession. Much of the style of writing is charmingly seductive, and withal contains no little information of a scholary nature, as many a reader has discovered after pursuing half a column quickening interest to find in the end how he may become a Hercules in strength or a beauty by the use of certain elixirs! There is more money in the writing of advertisement than in legitimate literature. Agencies solicit the writing of advertisements and guarantee appropriate illustrations, and the insertion of same in whatever newspaper or periodical the advertiser may desire. Most of the celebrated advertisers write their own notices. "It is only needful to repeat a thing often enough," says Goethe "and everybody will end by believing it."—L. R. McCabe in Chicago Herald.

Chrysanthemums.

A plant that anyone can raise and everybody will admire is the Chrysanthemum. It grows rapidly if potted in good soil, and only asks for a good supply of water. What a wonderful variety of Chrysanthemums are now seen in the late autumn! All sizes and colors, and forms of flowers. There never before was such an interest in them as now, and the more we think of them the more beautiful appear the new varieties, as if they came on purpose to be admired and petted. No wonder it is a popular plant, since it lends itself so freely to be shaped and moulded almost as we care to have it. The plants can be trained into the different forms that we may choose, bush-shaped, fan-shaped, single stems, and many other ways. Much as the Chrysanthemum is admired it is not yet at all common. And our reason for this is that it is not well known that one has to take the little plants in early spring and keep them growing freely until time to bloom. The time to begin with them is now, and by sending to VICK the choicest varieties may be had for very little. What a single flower will cost in October will pay for a plant now. A dozen plants taken in hand now, and well cared for until blooming time, will be valued then at dollars where now they are at cents There will be no disappointment in raising Chrysanthemums, Mr. VICK, of Rochester, N. Y., will send plants prepaid at the following low prices:

Standard sorts, 15c. each; $1.50 per doz.
Spcl selection, extra 25c. each $2.50 "
Novelties, new this year. 35. each 3.50 "

Ravages of LaGrippe.

Though not at all fatal the present visit of LaGrippe is assuming a serious phase in this city. The sale of quinine at the various drug stores has been enormous, and it is plainly evident that nearly every one attacked by the malady endeavors to be his or her own physician, While there are various remedies prescribed for the disease, from the old ladies "yarns" to the most subtile prescription known to pharmacy there are few people who do not advise primarily a liver-moving physic, which will relieve almost any complaint.

A Globe reporter yesterday asked a well known physician for a positive cure of the grip, and this is what the medical man had to say:

"Yes, I can give you a prescripition for the treatment of the grip, which is as specified in its cure of that disease as sulphur is for the itch or quinine for chills and fever. It arrests the aching of the bones, headuche and backache, as well as prevents the disease from causing pneumonia. I know by experience whereof I speak, and deem it important that it should be made public. I don't want you to publish my name, because I do not wish to appear before the public as pretending to know any more about the grip and its treatment than any other physician.

Chloroform	1 drachm
Pulverized gum arabic	1 drachm
Powdered white sugar	1 drachm
Deodorized tincture of opium	1 drachm
Tincture Gelsemium	1 drachm
Tincture alclipins tubowsi	1 drachm
Peppermint in sufficient to make	2 ounces

Dose—one teaspoonful in a wine glass of hot water every hour until the symptoms abate: then every two or four hours until well. Drink accasionally half a cup of hot water and take a two-grain quinine pill every three or four hours.—St. Paul Globe.

Several of the boys have started for the scene of log driving, at the head of the rivers. P. & J. Meehan will start their drives as soon as the creeks open.

Our shoemakers as usual have been rushed with work making driving shoes for the log drivers. A Boston girl would go into a fit of convulsions as the result of the shock to her nerves if she beheld a pair of these shoes and was informed that they were indeed to incase human feet; but they answer a double purpose, and many a western maiden in the days following the mooring of the drives, listen with ears alert for the beloved sound of her driver's shoes upon the pavement.

Crookston's New Grand Opera House.

Thos. H. Bjoin, of Crookston, has earned a name for himself among the successful men of the Northwest. The near completion of the new Gradd Opera House at a cost of $55,000 is among the events in Crookston that mark her march toword metropolitanism. It is first-class in all its appointments, elegant in finish, and a credit to the Thespian cult. The size of the block is 56x100, The dimensions of the opera house alone are given as follows, by Editor Palmer: 56x59; height of dome from floor, 31.9; height of stage, 4; height of proscenium arch 17; opening width, 24.6; Parquet length, 33, width, 45; drop curtain to balcony. 42; width of foyer, 10; width of balcony 56, depth 35.6 The drop curtain with an artistic scene in Verona is 20x29, There are four boxes 9x6 and 5 dressing rooms. The scenery is elaborate and beautiful, the work of Peter Claussen of Minneapolis, who painted scenes in the Grand Forks opera house. The painting and frescoing is the handiwork of Boerth of Grand Forks and is elegant. Wood painting was done by A. C. Schmidt of Crookston. The house will be illuminated by 154 incandescent lights. The building is heated by the Huxtun system. The light will be furnished by the Crookston Water, Power and Light Co. The stone work was furnished by W. H. Ulmer of St. Paul, the woodwork by W. E. Walker, Crookston; the brick by the Erskine Brick Co., the plastering by Kennedy & Budge, Fargo, and the architect of the whole edifice is John Ross, of Grand Forks. The entire seating capacity is 800, and the cost of the opera house alone $13,000. Mr. Bjoin has closed a contract with Manager Truesdell to open the opera house on April 13th, 14th and 15th, with the Boston Comic Opera Company, the plays being Mikado, La Mascotte and Erminie.

The County.

A lot 75x140 feet at East Grand Forks brought $1,400.

The St. Hilaire creamery will probably be run this summer.

Last night the Crookston amateur Dramatic company played to a large audience in the old opera house, "The Only Daughter."

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Gilley (late democratic candidate for county auditor) of East Grand Forks, will move to West Duluth.

The new Opera house at Crokston will be opened Monday by the Boston Comic Opera company, which will play for three nights.

The Fisher Bulletin says, Miss Willis is only fair as an elocutionist. Oh, no, she isn't only fair. Fair, to be sure but she is much more—she is divinely fair divinely formed and divinely does she perform.

The I. O. O. F. dedication and ball at Crookston proved a brilliant social event. The building is owned by Archie McKinnon and costs $35,000. It is 50x 100 feet built of red St. Louis pressed brick.

At Fosston the marshal arrests men and the justice fines them for abusing their teams by making them stand out for hours without food or shelter while the proprietors carouse in the saloons. A good idea.

A fire alarm was sounded at Fosston. The fire was supposed to be in the jail. The crowd rushed there but found it all right. The one prisoner there thought his last day had come and shouted for mercy. The peaceful citizens laughed at him and retired.

A Thief River Falls party received a letter from L. Loughbridge of Aurora, Ill. stating that he is anxious to hear immediately from this locality as there is a colony of 800 persons coming this way soon and if people will write him what they have to sell or offer he can help them.

The Bjoin Opera House of Crookston will be opened by the Boston Comic Opera company Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday April 13th, 14th and 15th, with Wednesday matinee. This opera house is the most complete this side of the twin cities. It is thought a large delegation will go from here to witness one or more of these productions.

Vick—Michigan

It has been decided that the $1000.00 prizes offered on Vegetables by JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, will be contested for at the fair to be held at Hillsdale, Michigan, Septr. 28-Oct. 2, 1891. At the Illinois State Fair last year over 200,000 people witnessed this exhibit, which filled a tent 60x90 feet, and it was conceded on all sides to be the chief attraction. There were over 1000 entries, coming from every State and Territory in the Union, besides several from the Canadian Provinces.

The managers of the Hillsdale Fair have already arranged for a large extension to be added to the same tent that was used at Peoria, making it 120 feet long, and everything will be done to make this the largest and grandest exhibition of the kind ever seen. There are four prizes on each of the following eight varieties of Vegetables—first $65, second $30 third $20, fourth $10, making in all $1000, which is very large and liberal:

Cabbage, for the largest and best 3 heads All Seasons.

Celery, Golden Self-blanching, 12 plants, largest and best blanched.

Potatoes, best peck, Vick's Perfection.

Cauliflower, largest and best 3 heads, Vick's Ideal.

Tomatoes, largest and best 12, McCullom's Hybrid.

Musk Melon, largest and best 3 Irondequoit Melons.

Onion, largest and best 12 Danvers Yellow Globe.

Mangel, largest 1 Golden Giant.

The cost to enter for the prize is so small we cannot see how the Messrs. Vick make any profit; for instance, one packet of either of the following will entitle a person to enter the competition.

1 pkt Cabbage, All Seasons .....10 cts
1 pkt celery, Golden self-blanching, 10cts
Potatoe, Vick's Perfection, 1 lb, 30cts.; 3 lbs, $1; peck, 50c; bus., $1.60; bbl, $4
1 pkt. Cauliflower, Vick's Ideal....50cts.
1 pkt Tomato, McCullom's Hybrid, 10cts.
1 pkt Musk Melon, Irondequoit, 15cts.
1 pkt Onion, Danvers Yellow Globe, 5cts
1 pkt Mangel Wurzel, (Beet), Golden Giant, 10cts

Select one or more that you would like to grow and enter for a prize. Be sure and state, in your order, that you intend entering for competition. Write JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, Rochester, N. Y., for Vick's Floral Guide, which will give full particulars.

Minnesota Rice.

Northwest Magazine.

Judge Flandrau, of St. Paul, says that Minnesota has an undeveloped source of wealth in wild rice which grows in great profusion in the shallow lakes in the northern part of the state. More of this native grain could be harvested every year, according to the judge, than South Carolina or Georgia grows of the cultivated rice. He always keeps wild rice in his house for his table and says it is much more palatable than the best white rice of the South. In color the grains are bluish brown. They are more glutinous and consequently more nutritious than those of the cultivated rice plant.

Improved Passenger Service.

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C., St. P., M. & O.Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7:45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their time as on other lines, because this is shorter than any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicago to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

THE FIVE NUMBERS.

Five years ago I was in Naples, disguised as a Franciscan friar.

I was tracking or endeavoring to track, Pietro Malasso for a peculiarly atrocious and mercenary murder committed in one of the upper wards of New York City several months previous, and who was known to have returned to his native Italy only a few months thereafter, probably to resume the life of brigandage in which he was said to have engaged before his brief migration to America.

After several days spent in diligent but unsuccessful search, I was standing one afternoon at the court entrance of my modest hotel in the Strada Nuova, gazing upon a curious scene.

The crowds in the street, on the neighboring quays, and even in the court corridors behind me, were greatly excited over the next drawing of the Italian National Lottery, to take place two days hence.

This is a periodical frenzy with the Italians Every device is resorted to, every superstition ransacked, for the lucky numbers. Dream-books are in demand, nonsensical signs consulted, and astrologers reap their harvest.

The Neapolitans are especially insane on the subject, and among other idiocies, as I was subsequently to learn, are fully convinced that the gift of prophesy is vested in certain persons—the Franciscan friars in particular, as being benevolent, and having "the lucky eye."

While thus occupied, I chanced to be making a mental computation of the distances from city to city that I might be eventually compelled to cover in pursuit of my fugitive, and doubtless fell to muttering some of the numerals aloud.

Presently I felt a tug at my clothing and turned to perceive a handsome young woman, with her fat baby in her arm, kneeling at my feet, while several of her companions were grouped near by, gazing at me in rapt expectance.

"Ah," she exclaimed, imploringly, "the lucky numbers—give them to me, for the love of Heaven! See! even my little Anatole here reaches out beseeching hands to thee, infant that he is, he knows that thou canst make us rich. The numbers, father, the numbers!"

"Nonsense!" I exclaimed, half angrily. "I know nothing of luck or ill luck. Away, or I shall be seriously displeased! Stay, then. Here—a blessing on thy little Antole!"

And touching the child's forehead, I sought to make my escape back into the hotel.

But so persistent were they all, this was not affected without difficulty; and in the meantime I cursorily noted among my tormenters another and yet handsomer women standing gravely apart from the rest, and observing me with quiet earnestness.

I heard her addressed by some one as Nita, and had only time to remark that there was something of the gipsy or rustic in her dress and bearing, when I at last succeeded in beating my retreat.

"Yes, sir; it must have been extremely annoying to you," sympathizingly observed my landlord, when I told him all about it.

And he eyed me with a faint smile and a growing wildness of the eyes.

"Well, what is it?" I demanded, being impatient for an hour of quiet in my pleasant balconied chamber overlooking the blue waters of the peerless bay. "If you are anxious about my bill, make it out at once, and"——

"No, no, no!" he exclaimed, grasping me by the arm, his eager black eyes fairly boring into my head. "Peste! enjoy my poor accommodations at your pleasure: it is nothing. But"—his voice sinking to a confidential whisper—"if you could favor me with the lucky numbers of the next drawing—ah, what slavish service might you not exact at my hands!"

I broke away from him indignantly, and retired to my room without vouchsafing him a word, lest my anger should betray me.

After supper that evening a waiter brought me word that a distressed young woman was in the outer court anxiously waiting a few words with Fra Ambrogio—my assumed name.

I went down and found, to my surprise, that the person awaiting me was the gravely handsome young peasant woman whom I had heard addressed as Nita.

Her story, told with tears in her eyes, was a brief and pathetic one: Her brother, Guiseppi, was lying at home fatally stabbed it was feared, and I must go with her to him at once, inasmuch as she was quite sure that I might keep off the destroyer's approach.

I accompanied her at once.

It was after nightfall as I followed her unsuspiciously into an old, dreary-looking building, where, in a large, squalid chamber, up one flight of stairs, she indicated a pallet, on which lay a large, bearded man, apparently near his last gasp, the figure motionless, the pale, set face upturned to the rays of an iron lamp hanging from the centre of the grimy ceiling.

"Giuseppi, do not despair!" cried my conductress, clasping her hands. "See, I have brought a good Franciscan! It is the Fra Ambrogio, and he is of 'the lucky eye'!"

I signed her to silence, and was bending over the pallet, when I was unexpectedly seized from behind.

The room was suddenly filled with villainous-looking armed men, and in an instant I found myself pinioned and gagged securely, while a low, exultant laugh rippled from the young woman's lips, and the seeming dying man started from the pallet, as lusty and live-looking a beetle-browed rascal as could be found anywhere.

"Be not uneasy," grinningly remarked a brawny tatterdemalion, who seemed to be in chief authority. "No harm shall come to you if you are docile."

He then waved his hand, and I was carried away, after being blindfolded.

I felt myself being borne down stairs, and then thrust into some sort of conveyance. Word was given, there was a scramble of hoofs, and then I was being jolted along over the rough lava pavements of the narrow, steep and sinuous streets peculiar to the quarter.

After awhile the way grew smoother, but still steep—now up, now down—and from the increased coolness of the air I realized that we were out of the city, and even beyond the suburbs, among the wild mountain roads of the interior.

If I had been in any doubt as to the object of my abduction, it would soon have been dissipated by the conversation of the rascals who were still with me.

I was in the clutch of mountain brigands, with the design of securing or forcing from my supposed prophetic lips the winning numbers of the approaching lottery drawing.

And, after a little reflection, I resolved to make the best of my unique predicament, in the faint hope that it might assist me upon my secret quest.

After three hours' hard traveling we reached the brigands' cave, were the gag and hoodwink were removed, and I was at once questioned as to the winning numbers, in the glare of torches and surrounded by a dozen or more of the miscreants—including fair but treacherous Nita—the greater number of whom must have made their way thither on foot.

I not only protested that I had no revelations to make, but indignantly berated them for the disrespect to my person.

They laughed or cursed my responses to scorn, while the muscular scoundrel who seemed to be their leader, and whom they addressed as 'signor,' shrugged his shoulders philosophically.

"Time enough," he said. "You can think over our modest request during the night."

My bonds were then partly loosened, and I was thrown into a dirty little dungeon-like cave, where, with such sleep as I could obtain, I was kept under guard until daylight.

They then hauled me out, placed me in their midst, and, while they regaled themselves with bread and wine, asked me, with mock solicitude, if I was not hungry. I replied in the affirmative.

"Good!" said their leader. "Impart to us the winning figures, and you shall share with us of the best; otherwise you starve."

Having already studied their faces severally without discovering one that might belong to my fugitive, of whose personal appearance I was provided with a pretty thorough description, I again insisted that I had nothing to reveal.

My bonds were tightened afresh, and I was once more cast into the dungeon.

Similar treatment was repeated at noon, and I persisted in holding out against it, though by this time really faint from hunger.

"Time flies, and is therefore precious," observed the leader, frowning angrily, and at the same time picking his teeth with a stiletto. "Look you, now—we are very poor, and those winning figures are indispensable to us. One more chance will be afforded you to reveal them through this means." He pointed to the food and wine they were again discussing among them. "Should you still prove stubborn"——

He twirled the stiletto in one hand, while significantly scratching one of his ears with the other, whereupon his subordinate ruffians burst into a savage laugh.

"It is only just," cried Nita. "To be crop-eared will be no worse than to be tongue-tied. If Pietro were here, he would agree with me."

The italicised words were a new hope to me as they once more thrust me into the jagged rock cell, with their curses and brutal laughs, not neglecting to add a thump or kick or two at parting.

When I was again dragged forth by my tormentors at sunset, I was very faint, and so hungry that I might have eaten a side of beef, but my heart gave a secret leap of joy.

Pietro Malasso was now among them. I recognized him from the description in an instant; and from the intimate relations that seemed to exist between them, I doubted not that he was Nita's husband.

I still persisted in my ignorance, however, not only with the tempting food and wine again under my nose, but until they had thrown me down, and the leaders sharp stiletto was already tickling my left ear as a beginning towards the consummation of his threat.

Then I made a great pretence of weakening at last.

"Hold on, signior!" I cried. "Give me sustenance, and I will try to satisfy you."

Instantly I was unbound, even caressed, and with the best that they could offer before me, handsome Nita especially exerting herself to make amends with her most brilliant smile and numerous little womanly attentions.

My appetite was huge, and when I had thoroughly satisfied it to the full, I spoke to them like a Dutch uncle, as the old saying goes.

"It is only on certain conditions," I then said, "that I can surrender this secret to you, my friends."

"Name them, Fra Ambrogio!" cried the leader, whose name I had by this time discovered to be Lazanetto.

"First, instantly on my imparting the five figures constituting the winning combination, I must be escorted back to my hotel in the Strada Nuovo; and in return I shall promise to say nothing to the authorities of these indignities you have put upon me."

"Agreed!" observed Lazanetto, composedly. "I shall myself be your escort, and you shall return as you came—by coach and pair. You see"—with a really engaging smile—"we begin to like you very greatly. As for the authorities—pish!" he snapped his fingers contemptuously.

"Second," I continued, "it will be indispensable that the person purchasing and presenting the magic numbers for to-morrow's drawing should be peculiarly stamped upon his flesh the holier the better."

"Ah!" cried the leader, with gusto, "I rather think I am the man."

And he bared his brawny arm to the shoulder, displaying thereon an inscription in India-ink tattoo.

"Not so fast, captain!" exclaimed another. "I can beat that, I fancy."

And stripping his own arm, he revealed a villainously designed tattoo-mark in different colors.

There was an eager baring of arms and bosoms all around, this custom of tatooing being a favorite one among the mountaineers.

I shook my head dissatisfiedly, and then fixed my eyes on Pietro Malasso with what I intended for a mysterious and prophetic look the man having hung back from the others, notwithstanding that Nita was apparently urging him to a similar display in a low voice.

At last, apparently yielding with much reluctance, he tore open his shirt, revealing a very creditable design done in sepia and pink tints on his breast—the very distinguishing mark by which I would be enabled to identify him as the fugitive murderer.

And closing my eyes in a rapt attitude, I called out at haphazard, though jerkingly, and with an appearance of occult prompting, these five numbers: "2, 13, 24, 26, 73."

A shout of jubilation arose from the miscreants, who evidently regarded the lottery prizes already won.

Malasso was regarded as a particularly favored individual; and I at once set forth on my return to Naples under their leader's special escort, as had been promised.

But apart from the particular result I was aiming for, a wholly unexpected and most remarkable development was destined to evolve out of this strange adventure.

The National Lottery of Italy is based on the old game of "lots." There are ninety numbers, and one can stake on one, two, three, four, or five of them, any sum, from one franc to a thousand, being paid pro rata of the numbers coming out.

Once safe in my hotel apartment, I discarded my Franciscan garb for my proper habiliments, and at once communicated the result of my adventure to the chief of the Neapolitan police, with whom I had previously made myself and my mission acquainted, and who cheerfully promised me his co-operation.

Then, on my way back to the hotel, a sudden impulse seized me, and stopping at one of the lottery offices, I staked ten francs on each of the numbers I had given to the brigands.

At the drawing of the following day, to my utter astonishment, the five numbers actually did come out, and I was just ten thousand francs richer.

But at an early stage of the announcements, I had already marked Malasso and Nita side by side in the crowd, while others of the brigands were scattered here and there. They had all doubtless staked heavily on the combination, and were wild with joy in consequence.

I signalled the chief of police and several of his subordinates, who were on the alert, and then laid my hand roughly on my man's shoulder, declaring him my prisoner.

His stiletto was in his hand in a flash, and he turned on me like a tiger, but I had him down and handcuffs on him before he could strike a blow. Nita, no less desperate than he, was quickly taken in charge while in the act of clapping a pistol to my head.

I then pointed out to the chief of police several of the brigands, including Lazanetto, but the official only shrugged his shoulders, and declined to make any arrest on his own account.

"Peste! What is the use?" he said, in his easy-going way. "You can make no criminal charge against them my friend. All's fair in a lottery, as in love and war, and the kidnapping of a bogus Franciscan or two is of very little account."

But I had secured my murderer, and subsequently got him back to New York, where in due course of time he was indicted, tried, convicted, and hanged for his crime; and I was, moreover, just as much richer as has been indicated in the foregoing.

Nita was left behind, as a matter of course; and I have understood that she afterwards became the wife of Lazanetto.

The brigands were in clover, for none others could have played the combination so strangely forced out of me save by the purest chance; and I have heard that the Government had to pay ten millions of francs on that one day's drawing. But as there was no Fra Ambrogio to give the fortunate clue thereafter, and as there was a great run on the lottery the following week, with a very different result, the State was enabled to recoup itself. Altogether it was the strangest adventure in all my detective experience.

Self-Discipline.

"Al Burton, the great gambler, who I see by an article in the Inquirer, has quit backing his judgement with his money, is a peculiar man," said a well known traveling man yesterday. "He is a great big fellow, over six feet, and weighing over 200 pounds. One of his peculiarities is punishing himself when he loses his money or does anything that after-thought suggests to his mind as foolish. I remember a story I heard sometime ago. Burton had been playing faro-bank and had lost quite a sum of money. He went to his room, and the man who occupied the next room declares that he spent the night marching up and down, and at every step swearing at himself something after this fashion: 'You thought you knew all about faro, didn't you? You——, —— old fool, that's what you are,' and so on. Finally, he laid himself out on the table, folded his arms and rolled off on the floor. This is a favorite way he has of punishing himself, and, being such a large man, it is doubtless very effective."—Cincinnati Inquirer.

Tweed As Ah Sin.

There recently died in Chicago an old colored man named Joe Owens. At the time of his death he was head bellman at the Leland Hotel in that city. Years ago when Tweed was in his glory, Joe was employed in the Delevan House, Albany. There used to be some heavy poker-playing in that hotel during those lively times, and Tweed's room was generally the headquarters of the game. Joe was a great favorite with Tweed, as indeed he was with most of the "high rollers" at the capital. Tweed had Joe made the special guardian of his room, and no one could ever get in there if Joe said no.

The old darkey happened to step into the apartment one evening when a more than ordinary big game was in progress. In front of a man named Shepard was a stack of chips representing $5,000. Joe was an inveterate pocker-player himself in those days, he and the other colored boys having a game going on most of the time in their quarters, and when he saw that heap of money his eyes fairly bulged out of his head.

"Foh de Lawd, but I wish I was in dat ar game," said Joe with a gasp. A thought came to Mr. Shepard. He sent Joe downstairs on some errand, and during his absence a "cold deck" was run in and fixed for the darky's special benefit. When Joe came back Mr. Shepard asked him to play a hand or two for him while he went out. Joe with his heart beating high, took his seat and began to play. When two or three hands had been passed Joe was startled at getting four aces.

He trembled all over; but just then Mr. Shepard returned and, looking over his shoulder, said: "Go for them, Joe; go for them." Joe did go for them. Everybody but Tweed dropped out of the game. He kept on raising, while Joe encouraged by Mr. Shepard, raised him every time until the darky had piled the $5,000 in the centre of the table.

Then Tweed called him, and Joe, his eyes fairly gleaming with wild excitement, threw down his four aces, while he reached for the money, saying:

"What you got dah, Massa Tweed?"

"Four aces," said the boss, coolly laying them down.

"Fo' aces!" cried Joe. "Fo' aces! 'Fore de Lawd, Massa Tweed, how can you hab fo' aces?"

The gamblers had had their fun, and had seen Joe excited. They were ready to go on with their own game, so Shepard shoved a hundred-dollar bill into Joe's hands and thrust him out into the hall, saying: "Get out of here you black scamp! You talk about playing poker, and you don't know there are eight aces in a poker deck. Get out!"

A hundred dollars at any other time would have made Joe supremely happy, but, dazed with the big play he had just been having and knocked out by the result, he forgot his wealth in his abject misery and mortification.

Character in the Thumb.

Determination is shown by the thumb, which is a study in itself, its three joints representing the three powers which rule the world—Love, Logic, and Will. The third joint, surmounted by the Mount of Venus, is, as its name states, dedicated to Love; the second, rising from the mount to the first joint, shows Logic, or its absence; and the first phalange, ending in the nail, declares the force forthcoming to shape success or fortune. Want of length between the nail and the first joint of the thumb tells of weakness, which often explains how brilliant chances marked by lines on the palm have been allowed to slip through feeble fingers. Only in a clever hand, where finger-tips are pointed, and their first phalanges [i. e., joints] long, is this short-topped thumb desirable. In this combination its weakness is but that of all imaginative genius—inability to cope with the rough realities of daily life. With clever hands the short first phalange tells of inspiration and creative faculty, and in such cases a long second phalange to the thumb denotes a tendency to see things from all points of view, which makes life difficult, but composition easy; for such people can so put themselves in sympathy with all sorts and conditions of men that they will paint them to the life, whether with pen or pencil. Persons whose thumbs show a long, broad, thick, and coarse-looking first phalange, while the second is short and insignificant, are obstinate to pigheadedness; but when both phalanges are of equal length, they show the man qui ira loin, his determination being based on the calmest, clearest logic, and carried out by an unfaltering will.—The Hon W. R. D. Forbes, in New Review.

Her Dreadful Ordeal.

She came into the room, where he sat alone, with a glittering knife in her clinched hand amid the folds of her dress.

Her face was white and drawn, and her eyes were wild and haggard-looking.

He, the man whose name she bore, sat by the grate fire, deep in thought, and never heard the slippered footfall of the beautiful woman, who now stood behind his chair with a strange, cold smile upon her lips.

Suddenly, with a gasp, she cast the knife from her toward the bed of glowing coals, but it sank silently into a divan at the other side of the room.

"I cannot," she moaned wearily—"I cannot!" And she fell in a white heap upon the floor at his feet."

A pitying, Kelceyesque expression broke across the Gothic granite of his cheek, and he murmured in deep, tender, Seventh Regiment tones, "What is it, my darling?"

But she spoke no word, only raised one white hand toward him, in which she clasped a leadpencil.

She had tried to sharpen it, poor girl!—New York Mirror.

GEN. GRANT'S SPEECH,

A Story Which the Late Gen. Sherman Was Fond of Telling.

The following characteristic anecdote of Gen. Grant was told, and illustrated with exquisite humor, by Gen. Sherman at a little dinner:

"Grant and I were at Nashville, Tenn., after the battle of Chattanooga. Our quarters were in the same building.

"One day Grant came into the room that I used for an office. I was very busy, surrounded with papers, muster rolls, plans, specifications, etc., etc. When I looked up from my work I saw he seemed a good deal bothered, and, after standing around awhile, with his shoulders thrown up and his hands deep down in his trousers pockets, he said:

"'Look here; there are some men here from Galena.'

"'Well?' I said,

"Looking more uncomfortable every minute, he went on:

"'They've got a sword they want to give me,' and looking over his shoulder and jerking his thumb in the same direction, he added:

"'Will you come in?'

"He looked quite frightened at the idea of going to face them alone, so I put some weights on my several piles of paper to keep them from blowing around and went into the next room, followed by Grant, who by this time looked as he might if he'd been going to be courtmartialed. There we found the mayor and some members of the board of councilmen of Galena. On the table in the middle of the room was a handsome rosewood box containing a magnificent gold hilted sword with all the appointments equally splendid.

"The mayor stepped forward and delivered what was evidently a carefully prepared speech, setting forth that the citizens of Galena had sent him to present to Gen. Grant the accompanying sword, not as a testimonial to his greatness as a soldier, but as a slight proof of their love and esteem for him as a man, and their pride in him as a fellow citizen.

"After delivering the speech, the mayor produced a large parchment scroll, to which was attached by a long blue ribbon a red seal as big as a pancake, and on which was inscribed a set of complimentary resolutions. These he proceeded to read to us, not omitting a single 'whereas' or 'hereunto.' And after finishing the reading he rolled it up and with great solemnity and ceremony handed it to Grant.

"Gen. Grant took it, looked ruefully at it and held it as if it burnt him. Mrs. Grant, who had been standing beside her husband, quietly took it from him, and there was dead silence for several minutes. Then Grant sinking his head lower on his chest and hitching his shoulders up higher, and looking thoroughly miserable, began hunting in his pockets, diving first in one and then in another, and at last said: 'Gentlemen, I knew you were coming here to give me this sword, and so I prepared a short speech,' and with a look of relief he drew from his trousers pocket a crooked, crumpled piece of paper and handed it to the mayor of Galena, adding, 'and gentlemen, here it is!'"

"German Syrup"

The majority of well-read physicians now believe that Consumption is a germ disease. In other words, instead of being in the constitution itself it is caused by innumerable small creatures living in the lungs having no business there and eating them away as caterpillars do the leaves of trees.

A Germ Disease.

The phlegm that is coughed up is those parts of the lungs which have been gnawed off and destroyed. These little bacilli, as the germs are called, are too small to be seen with the naked eye, but they are very much alive just the same, and enter the body in our food, in the air we breathe, and through the pores of the skin. Thence they get into the blood and finally arrive at the lungs where they fasten and increase with frightful rapidity. Then German Syrup comes in, loosens them, kills them, expells them, heals the places they leave, and so nourish and soothe that, in a short time consumptives become germ-proof and well. ®

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

HINTS ABOUT KAFFIR CORN CULTURE.

A Kansan Who Has Had Success With It—Cattle for Profit—Tomatoes for Feed—Ensilage Talk Overdone—Farm Notes.

Kaffir Corn Culture.

D. P. Norton in the Council Grove, Kansas, Republican: I have received so many inquiries about Kaffir corn, its growth, method of planting, cultivation, harvesting, etc., that I would like space to answer all at once through your columns and save time.

When planted for grain, we use the lister, and make rows about three feet wide. The plates for planting corn will not do. Get a blank plate and have small holes drilled in it, same as for sorghum, as the seed is about the same size. One bushel will seed twenty acres. It grows much like sorghum and needs the same cultivation as it and corn. The seed should be covered two or three inches deep. The foliage is simply immense, three times as much as sorghum or corn. It heads out like sorghum, but the heads are much more compact and the crop of seed very much greater. It should be planted as early as corn and not later than May 1. There are two methods of harvesting; first, cut up when seed is ripe, with sled, and shock same as corn. It has to be cut very low to get all the fodder. Then we throw down the shocks and even up the heads in armfuls, hold them on a block and chop the heads off with an axe and re-shock the fodder. The seed is threshed like any other grain. Some cut the heads off with knife before cutting up, and then cut and shock afterwards, or turn in the cattle, same as corn fodder.

I may say that harvesting Kaffir corn is a very slow and tedious process, but the crop—a good one, too—is certain to be there, wet or dry, and if the harvesting is tedious, the crop will be a bonanza, if your corn is a failure; and it beats paying 50 cents a bushel for corn, or going without feed, if you have no money to buy. I am confident the harvesting may be done with a header, same as wheat, by enlarging the wheels of the header so as to get the sickle high enough. When this is done there will be more Kaffir corn than oats raised in Kansas. But if a crop of Kaffir seed is a good thing to have at the end of a drouth, when your corn is a failure, a crop of Kaffir corn is no less a bonanza when millet is killed by a drouth, and prairie grass not high enough to cut. Sow a bushel to the acre, broadcast, or drill it in with a wheat drill, get it well covered so as to insure a good stand, and you are as certain to have a good crop of the best feed that grows as that your taxes or mortgages will some time be due. The writer thereof has made arrangements to put in 100 acres of Kaffir for hay and grain the coming season, and he does not expect to buy any feed of any kind to winter thirty head of horses and colts and seventy-five head of Shorthorn cattle. Sow Kaffir corn on the highest, driest, thinnest soil you have; the crop will be there all the same.

Cattle Grown at a Profit.

The best beef has usually sold at a profit through all the seasons of depression. The exception may be accounted for in the improper methods of feeding, and neglect to improve the best time for marketing. Every general farmer should grow good grade cattle—every animal the progeny of a good pure-bred sire of any recognized beef breed, and the dam should be of the best type of cows, herself the get of a choice sire with as much good blood back of him as is obtainable. The cows should be trained to milk well; and if their capacity after a full test, when three years old, does not reach an average of four gallons per day during at least 250 days in the year, greater effort should be made to breed them so that their progeny will be more surely in the milking strains. Half of such cow's milk should go to the calf until six months old, the balance to good use for butter or cheese, and the dross to the pigs. A three-year-old cow whose average milk production is less than three gallons daily for two-thirds of a year has no profitable place on the average farm.

There is a right principle to follow in the successful production of beef and butter. The above outline applies to the general farmer who lives five miles or more from a village of 1,000 or more population or a railway station—his farm land being worth $30 to $100 per acre. The special dairyman who sells milk in town by retail, or ships to the city wholesale trade may (?) ignore the calf and beef question. The large farms where help is scarce and high-priced and the land worth less than $30 per acre, may dispense with great milkers by careful management, grazing the cows principally, and the steers after twelve months old, putting the latter on the markets at thirty months of age instead of twenty months. But the prosperous cattleman must be a business man—one of natural ability; and the more he knows of the world of business the better chance for profit from his calling.—Orange Judd Farmer.

Tomatoes For Stock.

A correspondent of the Rural Canadian last fall had a thousand bushels of tomatoes left after his market, and tried the experiment of feeding them to his cows with such an increased milk flow that he planted tomatoes for the purpose of feeding them to the cows. He says: After the first frost last fall we pulled tomato vines and collected them in piles, with the green tomatoes adhering, where they remained a couple of weeks before we could let the cows into the field. By that time we found that a large percentage of the green tomatoes had ripened and the tomato leaves had cured. The cows could not be kept away from these tomato piles. They rooted them over with noses and horns and cleaned up everything but the bare vines, and at nights as long as the tomatoes lasted they would come into the barn painfully full and their udders distended. I leave it with scientists to say whether the milk producing element was in the tomato itself or whether it supplemented some other feed to make a well balanced milk ration.

Corn Smut.

The Ohio experiment station has been examining a subject of great interest to the farmers of this locality, viz., smut in Indian corn. The experimenters have found that no applications of liquors or powders will do the least good after the fungus is once in this plant. It says unprincipled makers of nostrums advertise preparations warranted to prevent or cure all manner of insect or fungus injuries. The station men are of the opinion that the claim is false. There is no chance save in prevention. Smut may be distributed by domestic animals, by yard manure, etc. Infested stalks should be cut out, gathered and carefully destroyed. In no other way can the ground be kept free from the smut and in no other way can smut be prevented than by keeping the ground clear. Seed corn that is absolutely clean is another necessity for a smutless crop.

Live-Stock and Farm Notes.

Dry ground and dry weather suit sheep best.

An excessively fat animal often proves barren.

The more an animal is exposed the less it will produce.

On a majority of western farms clover should be grown more than it is.

Hogs will pull a farmer out of a financial hole quicker than any other stock.

Meat, meal and milk make a substantial hen ration, while green vegetables furnish the appetizers.

One of the principal items in plowing is to produce loose earth, in which seed may be conveniently planted.

A pig farrowed in April has nine months to grow, and should, if well fed, be fully ready for market by that time.

In feeding grain of any kind to hogs, care should be taken to have the feeding place clean, or they will eat too much dirt.

In feeding for meat a good strong growth from birth to maturity is the most profitable, whether the animals are cattle, sheep or hogs.

Don't let the "goodness" of the manure be washed into runs or ditches where it will be of no value to anybody. If the manure pile must be exposed let "fertilizer juice" go where it will do some good.

A hog or any other animal can be hurt by over-feeding. Even when fattening only what will be eaten up clean should be given; more than this is a waste of material without an adequate return.

When by a careful test a cow cannot be made to give a profitable flow of milk, the sooner she is fattened for market the better. There is no advantage in keeping a cow that does not pay a fair profit.

Well cared for scrubs can be made to pay a more profitable return than the best thoroughbreds if they are neglected. With all classes of stock the most profitable results are only secured by good treatment.

Hints to Housekeepers.

To prevent layer cake from sticking, grease the tins and dust in a little flour.

Hot milk is a simple means of comfort, and is most reviving to one who is fatigued by over-exertion.

The best thing to clean tinware is common soda; rub on briskly with a damp cloth, after which wipe dry.

Disinfectants are useful possessions in all households. Even the most sanitary plumbing may need the occasional purification of disinfectants.

A German prescription for preventing cold-sores and boils from coming to a head is to paint them five or ten times daily with equal parts of boracic acid and water.

Sponge carpets occasionally with hot water in which either common salt or powdered alum has been dissolved. This not only brightens the carpet but prevents moths.

To keep glassware bright wipe directly from the hot suds. Tumblers used for milk should be thoroughly rinsed in cold water before being immersed in hot suds, as hot water seems to drive the milk into the glass and give them a dingy appearance.

By applying a little of the best carriage oil varnish carefully with a camel's hair brush to the edges of broken china, the parts being neatly joined together, the fracture will, when thoroughly dry, be hardly perceptible, and the china will stand fire and water.

To preserve the rich fruity flavor, do not boil the prunes. Allow them to soak over night in cold water, enough to cover the prunes. Then take the prunes out and boil the water in which they have soaked; add sugar to taste and boil fifteen minutes. Then add the prunes and set off on the range and allow them to simmer thirty minutes, then set off to cool.

If you feel a little debilitated take the coca tonic; eat plenty of fresh, ripe fruit and vegetables, especially oranges, drink lemonade, and when unusually fatigued, and just before retiring, drink a glass of milk as hot as can be taken in large sips. Walk reasonably, and sleep in pure air. If a few days of this sort of home treatment fail to bring up the body and mind to their proper tone, call in your doctor and follow his advice.

LIBERALITY OF ARABS.

A Fable Which Probably Has Not Much Foundation in Reality.

Three men were disputing, in the court of the Caaba, which was the most liberal person among the Arabs. One gave the preference to Abdallah, the son of Jaafar, the uncle of Mohammed; another to Kais Ebu Saad Abadah, and the third gave it to Arabah, of the tribe of Aws. After much debate one that was present, to end the dispute, proposed that each of them should go to his friend and ask his assistance, that they might see what each man gave and form a judgment accordingly. This was agreed to, and Abdallah's friend, going to him, found him with his foot in the stirrups, just mounting his camel for a journey, and thus accosted him: 'Son of the uncle of the apostle of God, I am traveling and in necessity.' Upon which Abdallah alighted and bade him take the camel with all that was upon her; but desired him not to part with a sword which happened to be fixed to the saddle, because it belonged to Ali, the son of Abutaleb. So he took the camel and found on her some vests of silk and 4,000 pieces of gold: but the thing of the greatest value was the sword. The second went to Kais Ebu Saad, whose servant told him that his master was asleep, and desired to know his business. The friend said he came to ask Kais' assistance, being in want on the road. Whereupon the servant said he would rather supply his necessity than wake his master, and gave him a purse of 7,000 pieces of gold, assuring him it was all the money then in the house. He also directed him to go to those who had charge of the camels with a certain token, and take a camel and a slave and return home with them. When Kais awoke and his servant informed him what he had done, he gave him his freedom, and asked why he did not call him, 'for,' said he, 'I would have given him more.' The third man went to Arabah and met him coming out of his house in order to go to prayer, and leaning on two slaves because his eyesight failed him. The friend no sooner made known his case than Arabah let go the slaves, and clapping his hands together, loudly lamented his misfortune in having no money, but desired him to take the two slaves, which the man refused to do, till Arabah protested that if he would not accept them he would give them their liberty, and, leaving the slaves groped his way along the wall. On the return of the adventurers judgment was unanimously and with great justice given by all who were present that Arabah was the most generous of the three.

Where to See the South.

If you wish to see the south in its true genius you will find it in Chicago, says Gath in the Cincinnati Enquirer. We are in the habit of thinking that Chicago was a great way from the south, whereas it is only one night or a sleep from Louisville, in Kentucky, to Chicago, and I found at my hotel great numbers of horse and cattle traders and Northwestern railway operators direct from Kentucky and Tennessee taking their meals together, influenced by the example of such men as the late Senator Beck and Eckstein Norton and the former Secretary Guthrie, who took early stakes in Northwestern property and acquired great sums of money. The southern man knows that real estate in his region has no chance as real estate in the Northwest. Whatever his newspapers may say, he finds his way to this great region and plants his seed as he formerly placed his stake upon the turning of a card in a faro box. Chicago is full of men with high Puritan, New York and New England heads and Southern faces, the physical instincts welded upon the Northern cranium. It is said that 100,000 Southerners are in Chicago. The principal politician of that city, long its mayor, is a Kentucky man. Kentuckians, indeed, like Lincoln, Logan, Cullom, Cannon, Edwards and Oglesby, for a good while ruled Illinois, though on the radical Northern side.

Next Door.

When the woman of the house answered his ring he began:

"Madam, I am sorry to disturb you, but I came here from Buffalo to find work at my occupation, and being unable to strike—"

"What is your occupation?" she demanded.

"I am a nurseryman."

"Then drop in next door."

"But, madam, I—"

"Next door, I say! They have seven children there, while we haven't any!"

The Creole City.

A visitor in New Orleans says that there are three features of the life in the Creole City that are sure to impress the stranger forcibly. They are the cemeteries, which are veritable flower gardens; the language of the French residents, which is spoken everywhere and has the pure Parisian accent, and the fact that the negroes of the lower river still sing the old tuneful songs that were heard in slavery days.

No Ear for Music.

Recent investigations go to show that the horse has no ear for music, and only a slight understanding of time and military signals. The popular impression that a trained horse can waltz in time to music is unsupported by experience, as in such cases the music is always played to suit the step of the horse, which is regulated by signs from the trainer.

The Art of Story Telling.

The habit of telling stories is apt to grow into a vice. It is easy enough for a bright man to raise a laugh and aid in the entertainment of a company by the relation of some bright incident, but unhappily he is apt to degenerate into a monopolizer of conversation. Some one once defined a bore to the man who persists in talking about himself when you want to talk about yourself. There is a good deal in this, even when the desire is not to be so personal as one's own affairs. It is only human to desire to have a fair share of the conversation as of every other social privilege. I sat at the table of a very cultivated family living in the east, and only a few months since.

Among the guests at the dinner was a professional story teller with a wife who knew exactly when to make a suggestion, and played foil for him from the soup to the walnuts. After the meal the men went into the smoking room, and I complimented this gentleman upon his marvelous memory. At that he produced a small memorandum book in which were notes sufficient to suggest every story he knew. In other words he had a repertory, and deliberately selected the stories best suited for each occassion, thus monopolizing the attention of the company and ruining the conversation.—Detroit Free Press.

Two Optnions

From New York Sun (Dem.)

WHAT about New York?" asks our esteemed Democratic contemporary, the St. Paul Globe. "It must be won to secure the victory. Can Cleveland carry it? That is the great question to be answered." It is an easy question to answer. Mr. Cleveland won in New York in 1884 merely by a scratch. He was beaten up to the moment when an estimable gentleman whse vocal organs were peculiarly fitted for the emission of the letter R sayed him beyond his deserts and contrary to reasonable expectation. In 1888 Mr. Cleveland was fairly and squarly beaten. There was no accident, and the bull head luck which his admirers attributed to him was not visible. In spite of all the power and the patronage of the Federal administration, its head was rejected by his own State. A candidate who loses his own State under such circumstances by nearly 15,000 votes can not be apologized for successfully. He is out of the question.

From The Baltimore Sun (Dem.)

WHATEVER the profesional politicians may think or say upon the subject, and what ever may be their secret desires to the contrary, there is no reason to doubt that with the "plain people" everywhere, the bone and sinew of the Democratic party, Mr. Cleveland is as much the leader of the party as he ever was, and as much entitled to that proud distinction. His hold upon the respect and confidence of the masses of the American people remains unshaken. Even those who disagree with the sentiments or disapprove of the policy of his letter opposing the "free, unlimited, and independent coinage of silver" respect and admire the man, who has always the courage of his opinions, who never falters in what he believes to be the path of duty, and who, in dealing with the people, practices no evasions or concealments. Mr Cleveland, in addition to the record of his public services, has established for himself one of the strongest possible claims to the confidence of the people which a statesman can possess by showing fearlessly and unreservedly his absolute trust in them. The very contrast between Mr. Cleveland's honesty and openness and the politic reserve, not to say crafty shiftiness, of some other candidates for the Presidential nomination can not fail to tell in the end, as indeed it is telling every day, in his favor with the great body of his countrymen. Mr. Cleveland, it is well understood, is not the favorite of the machine politicians. He never has been. He is probably also especially distasteful to a few Democratic leaders who would much prefer to see the President selected from their own number—some one whom they know well, and who is bound to them by ties of long and intimate association and comradeship in political affairs, and who in the White House, could be relied upon to "stand in with them and gratify their wishes in the matter of the distribution of collectorships, and marshalships, and Federal patronage generally in their respective States. It is not surprising that politicians of the self-seeking professional type, do not like Mr. Cleveland. His ways are essentially not their ways, and his ideas and standards of political conduct differ radically from theirs. A man who is so old-fashioned as to insist that "public office is a public trust," necessarily can not be a congenial person to those who believe that "public office is a private opportunity," and practice what they believe. Hence it is the usual thing for politicians of this class to decry and try to belittle Mr. Cleveland. Being men who pride themselves upon being "practical politicians" above all else, they affect to believe that as they think so do the people think with them, and that on the score of "availability," if for no other reason, Mr. Cleveland must be dismissed from the list of "Presidential possibilities" in 1892. Before these gentlemen get so far, however, as to settle in their own minds who shall be the Democratic standard bearer instead of Mr. Clevelaad, whom they have already in their harts deposed from his leadership, they will probably have abundant opportunity to revise their present opinions and correct their political prognostications.

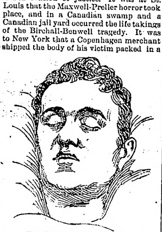
LIVING OR DEAD?

The Mystery of a Murder on Staten Island.

A CORPSE FOUND BY A SAILOR.

It Is Thought to Be That of Carl Ruttinger, Who Came to America with William Wright—The Latter a Suicide or Fugitive.

Europeans have made America notorious as the scene of some of their most infamous crimes, or as the land to which they have fled in evasion of justice. It was at St. Louis that the Maxwell-Preller horror took place, and in a Canadian swamp and a Canadian jail yard occurred the life takings of the Birchall-Benwell tragedy. It was to New York that a Copenhagen merchant shipped the body of his victim packed in a barrel of lime, and it was at New Orleans that Esposito, the most fiendish Italian brigand of modern times, first felt the clutches of the law. In due season the trunk mystery of St. Louis, the swamp mystery of Canada, the barrel mystery of New York, and the mystery of the New Orleans bandit's identity were solved; and as in those cases the American officials showed their competence and intelligence, it is only reasonable to expect that in course of time they will arrive at the facts in what must yet be termed the Staten Island mystery. As in three of the other affairs mentioned, the fate of two men is involved.

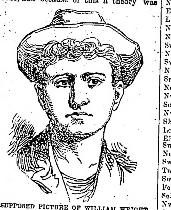


THE ASTOR HOUSE SUICIDE.

When the mate of a vessel anchored off Tottenville discovered the body of a man floating in the water near his ship, and when a subsequent examination of the body disclosed documents and a passport bearing the name of Carl Ruttinger, the evidence all seemed to show that Ruttinger was the man's name and that he had been murdered. Further inquiry brought to light the fact that the dead stranger had for his companion and friend a brother-in-law called William Wright, and as a handkerchief stuffed in the mouth of the corpse bore the initials "W. W." the conclusion first reached was that Wright had killed Ruttinger. As nearly as could be established, the death of the Staten Island victim occurred on a day in February about twelve hours previous to the suicide at the Astor House in New York city of a person who had registered as Fred Evans, and who left among his effects no clew to his identity or relatives. The Astor House case was for a time something of a sensation because of the queer attempts at identification made by a lawyer, an actress and a real estate dealer. The claims of these people proved baseless, and after lying for weeks at the morgue the corpse was buried in Potter's field on Hart's Island. But it was not permitted to rest in its unmarked grave.

The man with whom Ruttinger and Wright had lodged in New York city recognized as the former the Staten Island body, and gave such a description of the latter that it was thought possible that the self styled Evans might be the missing Wright. The remains, therefore, were exhumed and the theory indicated established, so far as the testimony of several witnesses and of two photographs can be considered of value.

Apparently this identification closed one part of the search. The next thing essayed by the officials was a discovery of the reasons for the murder and suicide. Ruttinger, it was learned, had been a lace manufacturer in Germany, and had married a sister of William Wright in England. The couple quarreled and separated. Wright sided with his brother-in-law, and with him sailed for America. The German had plenty of money, the Englishman had none, and because of this a theory was evolved that Wright had killed Ruttinger and then, horrified by the enormity of his crime, had taken his own life. But opposed to this was the fact that Ruttinger was tall, stoutly built and powerful, while Wright was small and delicate in physique, almost to effeminacy. The authorities now are engaged in the investigation of new clews which, if they amount to anything, are expected to show that the body found near Tottenville is not that of Ruttinger at all, but of a sailor named Schneider.



SUPPOSED PICTURE OF WILLIAM WRIGHT.

They have also been informed that within the last few days a man answering Wright's description in every respect was seen at a hotel in Rochester, N. H. So it will be seen that they are confronted with a remarkable series of complications. If the bodies now on hand prove to be those of Wright and Ruttinger, the question to be solved is that of the reason for the murder and suicide. However, if it should transpire that the German and the Englishman are still alive, it will be the duty of the officials to ascertain how Ruttinger's papers chanced to be in the pockets of the Staten Island victim, and why it is that Wright has made no effort to elucidate the mystery of the affair. The German, it may be as well to state, carried an insurance on his life of 90,000 marks.

A. D. Wishard,
RED LAKE FALLS,
f521may Polk Co., Minn.

State of Minnesota } ss In Probate Court,
County of Polk } Special Term March 17, 1891.

In the Matter of the Estate of Peter Bischoff, Deceased:

Letters of administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto Joseph Bischoff of said county.

It is ordered that all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this court, for examination and allowance, at the probate office in Crookston on Wednesday the 12th day of August A. D. 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m.

It is further ordered, that six months from date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless for cause shown further time be allowed.

Ordered further, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 17th day of March, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:59 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. Jackson, St. Paul. Address letters to Chas. E. Dixon, acting city passenger and ticket agent, St. Paul, F. H. Hanson, Gen. Northwestern Pass. agent, Minneapolis, or Louis Eckstein, Assistant General Passenger and Ticket agent, Milwaukee.

ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

Song of Spring .

The vernal flowers begin to wake,
And verdant grow the grasses,
And now the little children take
Their sulphur and molasses.

The marsh quil wakes the dawn with song,
The snow bird softly twitters;
To make her constitution strong
The maid takes liver bitters.

When golden morning gilds the sky,
You hear the bluebird trilling;
Fresh eggs are cheap—you can buy
A dozen for a shilling.

Love lights fair Chris' sparkling eyes,
And nestles in her dimples;
And Strephon Bolus Bitters tries
To drive away the pimples.

Sweet spring! When with the golden light
The morning skies are glowing,
And birds are voicing their delight—
By Jupiter, it's snowing!

Rev J. S. McCormack is expected to conduct services in Presbyterian church next Sunday at 10:30 a. m. Evening, 8.

The Jacklin family have moved to Thief River Falls and the Daley family moved in the residence formerly occupied by them.

Geo. Brunelle's bay and Dr. Lemieux' gray horse were run Saturday from the West to the depot, the bay coming out second best.

J. T. Knight, the war horse, has gone to St. Paul again. During his brief sojourn here he amused his friends with many a jovial tale.

Jas. Meehan Sr. started for Milwaukee Friday evening. Later reports give the cheerful intelligence that Mrs. Meehan is improving and out of danger.

Bro. Bierley, that time Red Lake Falls "killed" county division, you know, she only cut off the dead limbs. There was still a lively little heart left.

A dance was held at the section house Saturday evening that for brilliancy and enjoyment has seldom if ever been equaled within the bounds of our municipality.

Napoleon Marleau is about on crutches. It will be a few weeks before he will be able to use his injured foot, and may be several months till he can work.

Died.—Tam, beloved cat. He will probably be buried beside the remains of the once beautiful Rose Elizabeth, cat, upon whom he was often seen to cast regretful eyes.

Alonzo St John returned from Duluth last week intending to work on his farm this summer. Telesfore and family will soon arrive. He reports several former citizens as about to return.

The Clearwater bridge is now safer. The braces don't waggle as hard as formerly but the east pier presents the appearance of Pat Duffy's guests after the "Grand opening noight".

The rivers are now open. Another winter has passed. It seems hard to realize yet its true. We have been favored with an almost perfect winter—may the summer prove the same.

Call on Mat Skala, Broadway, North Side, for wines and liquors. He has them, pure goods for medicinal purposes as well as wholesome beverages. A stock of choice cigars. The popular brands.

Mrs. Chas. Langevin had a photograph of her houseplants taken. Mrs. Langevin has a fine and varied collection of plants. They have borne the winter well and are now a grand sight—to judge from the photo.

Gardens are being made. John Walters will soon have peas in the market—see if he don't. There isn't a gardener in the state who can approach Mr. Walters in efficacy of methods, considering his facilities.

We often note items in the East Grand Forks papers relative to C. T. Walker, host of the Hotel Minnesotah of that place, and observe that he is as popular there as he was here. Is doing a lively business.

Prof. Terry Shelly has been engaged by ahe Fosston school board as principal there the coming term. Both Fosston and Mr. Shelly are to be congratulated on this. Mr. Shelly is one of Polk county's able pedagogues.

The Grange supply house—we forgot its exact title, but it is the concern that sends out agents and takes orders among the farmers for general merchandise—are good advertisers. We have before us a proposition to insert one of their ads for cash!

W. G. Cooke, publisher of the Polk county Journal, died recently. When alive he was such a crank that he went into a dark corner to look at his watch for fear the office boys would ask what time it was. His brother H. E. Cooke survives him.

Joseph Smith & Co. shipped over 10,000 bushles of potatoes of the 1890 crop, always paying the highest cash market prices. Joseph Smith & Co. do not believe in the "whole hog" policy but are always found willing to show the farmer a good margin on his products.

How many faces were awry—mostly male faces, to be sure—as the tall figure under a black tile strolled down the street claiming proprietorship over a piece of property it had been thought none had yet won! Well, the audience was smaller at the last entertainment, too.

The crew at High Landing working on the steamer consists of thirteen men. High Landing is about twenty-eight miles from here. It is a picturesque spot. Rev. Ig. Balluff last fall painted three pictures of the place in water colors. They are very fine and adorn homes in the village.

Over in East Grand Forks the editors are having lively times. There are three of them now, each after the others' scalp, it would appear, from casual observation: Bierley, calm, unruffled, sarcastic; Duffy, sharp as a needle and lively as a cricket; Strong, overwhelming and successful—a trio worthy a better field.

Tom Hennessy was married at Crooks. last week to a young lady who had been a school mate of his. He will be section boss near St. Hilaire and will take all his children back except the little boy living Mr. with Fred Schmidt and the little girl living with Mr. and Mrs. Glin of Crookston.

Chas Langevin and sons leave for West Superior to-morrow or the next day. Mr. Langevin came here in 1883 when there were but few neighbors to enjoy his conviviality. In him Red Lake Falls will lose one of her staunchest friends, most upright and progressive citizens. Her regrets will only be equaled by the good wishes for his future prosperity. The children, Joe, Chas. and Nellie, are all at West Superior, and this probably influenced his move.

THE CASH MERCHANTS.

The beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs F. E. Hunt was thronged Tuesday night by a happy party—a surprise party in honor of Mr and Mrs. J. I. Wyer who are at present guests there. For several hours the mirth and jest went round, and a delightful evening passed. Mr. and Mrs. Wyer were much pleased at this token of thoughtfulness on the part of their friends, and in turn did their utmost to have the golden wings of happiness hover over the occasion. It will long be remembered by all present.

For the fall term it is proposed to have the new schoolhouse ready. A force of six teachers will then be employed, the grades advanced a step higher, thus promoting our school to the rank of a High School. This advent will be hailed with keen delight by all who have the advancement of our village at heart. Improved educational facilities cannot fail to redound to the increased prosperity of a municipality Many who would otherwise forgoe an ordinary education will be thus enabled to avail themselves of it and many will attend a year longer before seeking advanced grades elsewhere.

FRANK E. HUNT, P. M.

Our business men ought to do more advertising. Of course it is a shame that they don't, everybody knows that and we're not going to tell you. We receive inquires frequently from men prompted by an idea that the business they pursue is not represented here. They send for a sample copy, look the paper over and see scant, or no notice of business houses in their line, and write us for information. We can count among them representatives of almost every line of business. One of these says we'll sit down in a fit of despondency and induce all these stagglers to locate here. Maybe they'll advertise.

Talking about spring poets: The poor multitudirous being are cruelly abused. When the biting winter is passed, chilling blasts have changed to gentle wafting breezes, bearing on their delicate wings soothing warmth, and a faint suggestion of budding trees and flowers and life in nature; when the sun, as if repenting for past indifference, beams brightly forth, smiling and radiant and making all else participate through mere sympathy; when the first notes of the most daring song bird are heard—who would be else than a spring poet! Who would confess himself dead to such delicacy and beauty and grandeur in nature. Many feel the thrill and call it the intense enjoyment of the perfect days of spring; others, whose sentiments are still the same, not content with feeling it, find their souls overflow in ryhmetic lines and these are called spring poets.

You have noticed those three beautiful gems of art in our office window—those large steel engravings? Their value is $15 each. We are going to raffle them in a week. Would you like a ticket? Miss Marion Willis, the elocutionist, gave two entertainments at the Opero house, one Saturday evening, and one Monday evening. Her first entertainment proved so delightful and taking that she was prevailed upon to appear ag in. The ladies of the Presbyterian Church assisted her in filling out the programs. Prof. Fieund gave a couple selections on the violin and Mrs. Emerd one on the organ. Miss Willis proved all and more than had been anticipated. Her very presence was a "poetic reality (as it were) and her ability as an entertainer of human passion and humor is beyond question great. Her every move the embodiment of grace, kind nature having lavished upon her many beneficences, natural talent augmented by hard study and able tutorship—she takes possession of her audience at once, and holds their wavering emotions a captive to her art. The audience at both entertainments was small but refined and appreciative. Monday night the band gave some stirring music on its way to the hall. Messrs Theo. Garceau and Helmuth Zaiser favored the audience with a couple of charming renditions on the zyther and guitar.

Couldn't Trust His Countrymen.

Bismarck relates the following anecdote: One day the physicians in attendance on the Czar Nicholas recommended their august patient to have his back rubbed. The emperor had no one about his person whom he saw fit to intrust with the operation. In his dilemma he decided to write to King Frederick William IV., asking him to send to St. Petersburg a few subaltern officers of the Prussian guards. These administered in turns the prescribed amount of friction, and when the cure was completed were richly rewarded for their pains.

"So long as I see my Russians face to face," said the czar, "everything goes well, but as for letting them rub my back I won't risk it."—La Famille.

At Waterloo, according to one authority, the weather during the morning of June 17, 1815, had been oppressively warm. The atmosphere was close, and a dark, heavy cloud hung over the combatants. Brigade guns began firing. The concussion seemed to rebound through the still atmosphere, and to communicate like an electric spark with the heavily charged clouds above. A violent thunder-clap burst forth, which was followed by a great downpour of rain.

Dates, names, figures and the greatest intricacy of details could not escape General Sherman's marvelous memory. He remembered them all, and could call them up after the lapse of many years. He remembered everything about California just before and at the time it was admitted to the Union as though it had been yesterday. He was in command of a portion of the United States forces there then.

The persistent loss of potash from food predisposes the system to attacks of gout, rheumatism, lumbago and neuralgia. All similar diseases, including the painful gallstones, are caused by an excess of lithic acid in the blood. This acid can be reduced in quantity by the use of the vegetable acids combined with potash.

Edmund Russell, the apostle of Delsarte, is a very youthful looking man. He is of average height and stout figure, with a clean pink face and blue eyes. He wears his dark hair cut high at the back and in wavy bangs from the crown to the brows.

The lava flood at the eruption in Iceland, in 1875, has been computed to contain 31,000,000,000 cubic feet, while the largest eruption of Vesuvius on record, that of 1794, only threw out 780,000,000 cubic feet of lava.

Retorts Among 'Bus Drivers.

It is very amusing to hear the 'bus drivers shout "A penny all the way to the World's End" or "The Man in the Moon," two public houses, by the by, where they invariably stop. The way a driver will address the occupant of the seat of a vehicle which is blocking his way is funny to a degree. "Now then, Coaly, git on with that 'alf 'undered." "Here, Pickford, are you goin' to a funeral?" "Look 'ere, Great Western, if you don't move a bit faster I'll stop all my fresh heggs from the country a-comin' on your line."

More often than not the gentry referred to as Coaly, Pickford and Great Western fittingly reply, in which the various merits of the horses are discussed. Pickford will probably invite the 'bus driver to send his horse to "my privit residence, an' I'll put a bit o' flesh on it." Great Western will say quietly, "Halloa! wot, brought that lot out again, Bill?" Coaly, however, becomes personal, and looking up at the busman's red face may remark to the great delight of the onlookers, "Yah! I believe yer mother must 'ave nussed yer for a month upside down!"—London Tit-Bits.

Manufacturing Relics.

On the lookout for crudities and barbaric taste, as travelers from the enlightened east are likely to be, a party of New England tourists were recently treated to a genuine surprise. While driving with their western friends their attention was attracted by a number of gravestones of peculiarly ugly design, the distinguishing feature being a dial on which the hands pointed to figures indicating the age of the deceased. Coming out of the cemetery they stopped for a chat with the stonecutter at its gate, and in course of conversation one of the visitors, bent on mischief for the Californians, referred to these remarkable monuments. "Well, yes," said the gratified sculptor, "they air popular. I've sent for some more, but the dealer says they're going off like hot cakes 'round there, and I'll have to wait a little before he can ship another lot." "Then you don't make them here?" asked the visitor. "Oh, no. I only make the base. The tops are a patented article. They come from Connecticut."—Christian Union.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

THE pardon, in Tennessee, of the father of triplets, who was found with a pistol on his person, is generally approved. The father of triplets does right to carry a deadly weapon. Somebody might try to steal those babies and distribute them.

A SCIENTIST in Chicago professes to have discovered the microbe of the grip. Now the interesting question arises, can it be captured and exterminated by some easy means like throwing salt on its tail? If not, it will be best to shoot the scientist and let the bacillus go free.

A FRENCHMAN in the province of Lorraine left a legacy of $800 to France to aid in buying arms for the next war with Germany. As he was dead and out of reach the German authorities did the only thing they could do. They arrested his brother for sedition and conspiracy.

IN response to a prisoner's plea of not guilty in a Pennsylvania court, the other day, the district attorney replied: "You are guilty, and the common wealth will prove it." Such language was not allowable, and the brutal official should have been committed to jail for contempt of court.

THEY will have odd fish in the jury boxes of Illinois should they enact a proposed statute making non-voters preferred jurors, that is, making them do all the jury duty as long as they last, and only calling in good citizens when the non-voting panels are exhausted. It would have a tendency to hustle merchants and professional men out to the polls, however.

A FRENCHMAN is going to walk on stilts from Paris to Moscow. It will be remembered that some time ago another Frenchman went thither on on aspirations considerably higher than stilts, and was lucky to get home again. If this Gaul is not careful he will furnish an instance of history in the act of repeating itself.

IT is said that the Connecticut maple sugar industry is dead, all the trees that yielded the sap having been cut away. This would be sad news, indeed, if we did not know that the maple sugar industry, which depends on the amount of common cane sugar of a very brown color that can be pressed and sold as maple, is still thriving,

A YOUNG man named Deacon has had to flee from a West Virginia town because he had got engaged to twenty girls. Steps should be taken to make this man change his name, or assert his allegiance to the Mormon Church. It is only a Mormon Deacon who can indulge so riotously in fiancees, and in these days he has to be very quiet about it, too.

AFTER a bloody feud of twenty years, the Hatfields and McCoys of West Virginia and Kentucky have become reconciled. Cupid's powerful wand was the cause. One of the Hatfields is to be married to a Miss McCoy, and henceforth the two families are to live in amity and peace. The trouble has been the subject of hundreds of newspaper articles and two novels, and originated in a dispute about a sow and a pig.

THAT was a dastardly act at Sofia which resulted in the assassination of a Cabinet minister and might have resulted in the death of Premier Stambouloff himself. Assassination ought to be stamped out in Servia with the same determination that was the case at New Orleans. But let's see if European paternalism with its boasted superiority over American institutions will succeed in doing it.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD wants Canada to monopolize the term "American" and applies "Yankee" to every man south of the Canadian border. Very well. The "Yankees" have a record of which no American need be ashamed. They cut loose from John Bull and licked the old fellow to signify that they were free for all time, and when we had a little rebellion at home it was the "Yankees" who gave John Bull notice to keep his fingers out of the muss. "Yankees" is good enough for the Americans of the United States.

KITTY NOT THE ONE.

Rumors that Mr. Parnell Has Been Privately Married Since the O'Shea Divorce Proceedings.

The Statement Also Made That Mrs. O'Shea Did Not Become the Bride of Parnell.

LONDON, April 7.—A sensation was caused in the lobby of the house of commons this evening by a rumor that Mr. Parnell has been privately married since the O'Shea divorce proceedings. According to this rumor, the lady whom Mr. Parnell married is not Mrs. O'Shea.

Several Parnellites in the house of commons were interviewed on the subject tonight, but they refused to say more than that the "mystery" of their leader's inner life, often referred to recently as certain to clear Mr. Parnell's character, will shortly be explained.

REBELLIOUS NATIVES.

Serious Trouble Brewing in India for the British Forces.

CALCUTTA, April 6.—If probable indications turn out to be correct there is very serious trouble brewing in India for the British forces.

Emboldened by the success of the Manipuris, who recently crushed the Ghoorka escort accompanying Chief Commissioner James V. Quinton in his efforts to settle the disputes which have occurred among the rival chieftains of Assam, the Miranzai, in the Kohat territory, a district of the Peshawer division of the Punjab, have risen in arms, and are attacking the British troops along the whole length of their lines. It is also known that the Miranzai attack is being pushed vigorously, that strong reinforcements have been hurriedly dispatched to the front. Full details as to this new uprising are withheld by the British authorities here.

Sharp fighting with the rebellious natives continues. The Miranzais rising is extending. Yesterday the Twenty-ninth regiment lost nine men killed and four wounded.

WANTS HIS WIVES.

Cannon Afraid That He Cannot Keep All of the Mrs. Cannons.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, April 7.—The spring conference of the Mormon church closed to-day. At the morning session George Q. Cannon spoke of the manifesto stopping polygamous marriages for the future. He said it was hard for him to accept it, but the saints were in straits and something had to be done. He finally saw the light, but much against the grain, as he had always held that the salvation of the soul lay through polygamy. The question now was, what could be done with plural wives? He had hoped the government would say the husband could keep them, and may be that would be done yet.

Raferring to statements issued by anti-Mormon agitators that the manifesto issued some six months ago by President Woodroof in regard to the discontinuance of plural marriages was not genuine, Cannon said its sentiments were sincere and its terms had been observed. It is the intention of the Mormon people as then stated to abide by the law. He considered it of the utmost importance that this should be thoroughly understood in future, and that when a promise of this kind is made by them, they mean what they say; that they are not dealing falsely, but are treating matters in good faith. He said the Mormon people will accommodate themselves to changed conditions to the best of their ability, and honestly carry out all they have promised.

IN A MEXICAN PRISON.

An American's Terrible Experience Among the Greasers.

WICHITA, Kan., April 7.—The mystery surrounding the disappearance of James Bellew was cleared up to-day by that gentleman's return home.

Mr. Bellew is a commission merchant and started for Mexico by the way of Galveston a month ago. He spent about a week in Galveston and then left for Mexico, since which time nothing has been heard of him until to-day. At Paso Del Norte, Mexico, Mr. Bellew tendered a Mexican merchant a ten-dollar gold piece in exchange for some purchases. The Mexican claimed that the coin was only a five dollar piece. A dispute arose, and the Mexican called on the police and had Bellew arrested. The prisoner was thrown into jail, and was denied all communication with his friends or with the American consul.

He says that he was subjected to all sorts of indignities and harsh treatment. His health has been shattered by confinement in prison, and he intends that the American government shall procure satisfaction from the Mexican government.

CURSES AND MISSILES.

What a Crowd of Italians Received Upon Asking for Work.

KANSAS CITY, April 7.—There was a small riot at the Phœnix packing house, in Kansas City, Kan., this morning.

For some time past the rumors of the reopening of the packing house, which has been closed since Nov. 17, have caused large crowds of laborers to congregate about the gates of the plant every morning seeking for work. This morning, as usual, they were there, about three hundred in all.

About 9 o'clock twenty Italians came up in a body to apply for work. They told the superintendent that they would work for $1 a day. When the others who had assembled there learned of the offer of the Italians, they seized fence pickets, stones and other missiles and charged the Italians. The latter made a stand for a moment, but were soon forced back and ended by taking precipitate flight, followed by a storm of curses and missiles. They fled across the Kansas river to Missouri. The crowd followed them to the bridge and there stopped.

It is not known whether any of the Italians were hurt or not. None of the others were injured.

A Town Submerged.

NEW ORLEANS, April 7.—Two-thirds of the town of Gretna has been submerged by the water from the Ames crevasse, a hastily constructed levee had been built with the view of protecting the town from overflow, it could not stand the pressure of water against it. Many of the people on the overflowed section are moving to this city.

Thacker, Glenwood, Pope county; W. C. Andrews, Granger, Fillmore county; C. W. Russell, Pleasant Grove, Olmsted county.

The Czar's Life in Danger.

LONDON, April 7.—The Telegraph's St. Petersburg correspondent says that another conspiracy against the life of the czar has just been discovered there.

A POSTPONED FUNERAL.

Signs of Returning Life Shown by the Corpse of an Ohio Woman.

LIMA, Ohio, April 7.—Mrs. Francis O'Neill, a cousin of Sheriff O'Neill of Allen county, died suddenly Saturday morning. As deceased was apparently in the best of health up till the moment of her death, it was attributed to heart failure.

To-day signs of returning life were noticed by the relatives. Her body became warm and twitched convulsively. All the funeral arrangements which had been made were postponed, but up to this writing she has not recovered consciousness.

The relatives have decided that even if death appears certain they will keep her remains in a ventilated vault until her death is certain beyond peradventure. This action is taken on account of a similar occurrence in the case of her brother five years ago. Henry Lawler, brother of Mrs. O'Neill, in March, 1886, died apparently, and all arrangements were made for his burial. On the day set for the funeral he returned to life, and is to-day a prominent business man and leading politician. The relatives of Mrs. O'Neill are fearful that she may have experienced a trance as did her brother.

SHREWD CHINAMEN.

They Play a Trick in Order to Get a Chance to Spend Their Money.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 7.—During a gale on the bay to-day the schooner Sadie F. Collier, destined for Chignuk bay, Alaska, with a cannery outfit, was found to be in a leaking condition.

One hundred and forty Chinese were secured to man the cannery, but as there had been great difficulty in securing Chinese for the work the slave dealers have had to give advances to get the Chinese to ship. The schooner had ninety-five of her Chinese on board, and was ready to sail as soon as the other forty-five Chinese should be put on board. The ninety-five on board the schooner had their advance money in their pockets, and were burning for a chance to spend it. As they could not get ashore, owing to a vigorous watch, they determined to sink the schooner. They procured an augur and bored several holes in the bottom of the vessel.

This morning the Collier was in a sinking condition, and her crew had to be taken ashore as quickly as possible. The Chinese are now spending their advance money in Chinatown, and the schooner has been beached.

NINE LIVES LOST.

The Fire at Rochester, Pa., More Fatal Than at First Supposed.

ROCHESTER, Pa., April 7.—The fire here last night, in which four lives were reported lost, was worse than at first supposed, nine bodies having been found.

The wife and son of C. J. Keene, the shoemaker, were visiting in Pittsburg. Had they been at home they would no doubt have also lost their lives.

Maria Tecchio, the Italian girl, the only one of the family to escape, although not seriously injured, is prostrated.

There is no definite evidence as to how the fire started, but it is the opinion of the authorities and it seems to be the correct one that a lamp left burning by Mr. Keene in his kitchen exploded and fired the house. There appears to be no indication of incendiarism. A revised list of the dead follows: C. J. Keene, aged forty; Walter Keene, his son, aged nine; Baptisti Tecchio, aged forty; Annie Tecchio, his wife, aged thirty-six; Yosef Tecchio, aged thirteen; Rosa Tecchio, aged eight; Annie Tecchio, aged two; Victorio Tecchio, brother of Baptisti, aged thirty-seven; Joseph Raema, aged thirty-five, place of residence unknown.

FIGHT WITH ROBBERS.

An Exciting Time in a Restaurant in Chicago.

CHICAGO, April 7.—Six men entered the Farwell house cafe to-night, and while two presented revolver at Cashier Bliven's head the other four busied themselves with the cash drawer, or in seeking to intimidate the solitary waiter on duty.

The latter, named Delude, grappled with one robber, who was making off with the cash register, and was fired upon twice but not seriously wounded. The shots attracted the police, who chased the robbers into their den, a tenement house near by. The place was quickly surrounded by a patrol wagon load of officers, and after a sharp struggle all of the six desperadoes were arrested. In the fight at the house Policeman Smith received a bullet through his right hand. The prisoners are all local toughs, and one is an ex-convict.

LAWFULLY CONVICTED.

Decision Against a Prisoner Who Would Escape on a Technicality.

WASHINGTON, April 8.—The supreme court of the United States to-day affirmed the judgment of the supreme court of Wisconsin, in the case of Patrick Manning, convicted in the court for the district of Ashland, Wis., of manslaughter.

He contended that his conviction was without due process of law, basing it on the ground that under the state law the governor had no authority to appoint the judge who tried him, and that he was tried and convicted by an unlawful court.

The United States supreme court says that the highest state tribunal held that the Ashland court had always existed and was a court de jure, regardless of whether or not the governor had the right of appointment of the judge. The court is bound by that judgment, and there being a court de jure and judge de facto, it holds that there is no ground on which to order Manning's discharge.

All Held Without Bail.

PITTSBURG, April 7.—The coroner's inquest in the Gilkinson murder case to-day, after a brief review of the testimony, found that Detection D. H. Gilkinson's death resulted from two gun shot wounds inflicted by Frederick Fitzsimmons. His wife, Lucy, was held as an accessory, and C. M. Clark, his wife and her sister, Cora Wyatt, were held as accessories before the fact in concealing, harboring and maintaining Fitzsimmons at Clark's house in Homestead with the knowledge of the fact that he had committed the murder. All five prisoners were committed to jail to await trial for murder.

A Trifling Accident.

HELENA, Mont., April 7.—An accident in the Mullan tunnel on the Northern Pacific west of Helena proves to have been of a trifling character. A projecting beam on a passing freight car knocked down several tunnel supports. Repairs were made during the night, and trains passed through this morning.

Work of Train Wreckers.

MANITOWOC, Wis., April 7.—An unsuccessful attempt was made to wreck a Milwaukee, Lake Shore & Western train near Centerville. A tie was placed across the track, but the engine did not leave the rails when it struck the obstruction. The engine was wrecked. No clue to the wreckers.

An Aberdeen Blaze.

ABERDEEN, S. D., Special Telegram, April 7.—The residence of Court Stenographer Granger was partly destroyed to-day by fire. Loss $1,500; insured.

IT MADE NO DIFFERENCE.

A Legal Technicality Settled by an Ohio Witness.

The following story is told by Senator Manderson of Nebraska, of a peculiar cross examination of a quack. A number of years ago Mr. McSweeny was one of the most celebrated criminal lawyers in the state of Ohio. He was noted for his eloquence and his adroitness. He was tall, with a broad, large figure; his large, smooth face was set off by a mass of curling reddish sandy hair. He dressed in a rich and expensive manner and always wore around his neck, twisted in and out of the folds of a ruffled shirt front, a huge gold watch chain. He had a quiet way in examining witnesses. He sought to never alarm the witness he desired to entrap. Once he was defending a man charged with having committed murder. The man had stabbed another. The wound was a slight one and Mr. McSweeney was able to show that the wounded man had been treated badly and that he died from the result of the treatment rather than of the original wound.

He first showed by the testimony of the alleged physician that he had put a plaster over the stab. This was the first of the malpractice. McSweeny brought out all of this in the gentlest way as if he had admired the method of treating a wound by covering it with a plaster, as the witness said it had been done is this particular case. McSweeney examined him with the most respectful deference, but still the jury was a country jury and McSweeney was not satisfied that he had shown fully to their comprehension the full depth of the ignorance of the witness. Toward the close of the examination he stepped back and picked up an old book. He pretended that it was a medical book. "I suppose," said McSweeney, "that you are familiar with this work, 'Bushey on Surgery'?"

"Perfectly," said the witness.

"You agree in the main with all the principles laid down by this distinguished authority?"

"Absolutely," said the witness.

"Then I need hardly ask," said Mr. McSweeney, "that you agree with the great authority upon the little importance of whether a post-mortem examination is held before, or after the death of a patient?"

"Not the slightest importance," said the witness.

"That is all," said Mr. McSweeney, as he bowed graciously to the witness and turned to the jury for the acquittal which was promptly given him.—T. C. Crawford.

SPOILED THE ELOPEMENT,

A Goat Engaged in a Nocturnal Prowl Smashed a Romance to Pieces.

Not long ago a young lady who desired to get up with the lark, in order to go on an eloping tour, adopted the schoolboy's plan, and the lover was to be on hand at daybreak to give the signal.

The string used for the pedal communication was a stout cord, and one end was dropped out of the third story window into the back yard, and the other end, of course, was attached to the damsel's great toe. The legend runs that a healthy goat of the William persuasion arose early the next morning and wandered into the yard.

After eating up all the old sardine tins, barrel staves and broken crockery, he found the string, and took that in as desert. As soon as the string was drawn taut the goat stood upon his hind legs and gave an impulsive jerk. The girl awoke. The goat gave another sudden pull, and the maiden jumped out of bed with a smothered cry of pain. Then she stooped down to detach the cord just as the ridiculous beast gave another violent jerk, and she nearly lost her equilibrium, and her toe, too, the cord cutting into the tender flesh.

She sprang to the window and called down in a hoarse whisper—

"Stop pulling, Harry; I'll be down in a minute."

Then she made another effort to untie the cord, but the persistent goat gave his head several angry bobs, and each time the girl uttered a cry of pain. Again she called into the darkness:—

"Harry, if you don't stop jerking like that I won't come down at all."

She was answered by another savage pull, and the cry of anguish that escaped her brought her mother into the room with a look of affright and a lighted lamp. The young lady fainted, the elopement was nipped in the bud, and the disappointed maiden's toe was sore for a month. The goat escaped.—Sheffield Telegraph.

A Timely Word on Long Engagements.

The sort of courtship that goes on for hours behind closed doors, that insists upon seclusion and resents a third person, that thinks first of the beloved object and not at all of any one else—this may do for a six weeks' intermission between maidenhood and marriage; but lovers' courtships should be conducted on radically different lines. Was there ever a dearer sweetheart than Lorna Doone, whose maidenly reserve allowed John Ridd one kiss a day, and no spooning whatever? And do you remember Mary Garth, so true to her not-any-too-eligible Fred, and yet so straight and strict with herself? Engaged or not, she must surely have been a welcome companion in any house, Fred or no Fred. And again that dame in silver gray who married John Halifax—be sure that her betrothal was a modest and unselfish one.

Lace yourself straightly, Mistress Lucy, and encourage Colin to understand that while you stay under the paternal roof the obligations of that shelter are on you, and forbid you to concentrate all your courtesy on a single guest.—Scribner.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

A union has been formed by the business men of Caledonia.

Paul Endres of New Trier received a stroke of paralysis and died aged eighty-three years. He was an old resident of that town, and leaves four sons.

The city election at Redwing takes place on Monday April 27, this year. The officers to be elected include, besides ward aldermen and an alderman at large, a mayor, a treasurer and justices.

The change in postmasters took place at Redwing. W. W. De Kay, Democrat, was succeeded by Fred Seeboet, Republican. Mr. Seeboet makes but one change in the management of the office.

T. J. Cleary, check clerk on the Chicago & Northwestern road, has been appointed to the position of local freight and passenger agent of the Winona & Southwestern road at Winona.

Robert Johnson and wife, an aged couple of old residents living alone, at Spring Valley, Minn., were nearly asphyxiated by the gas from the coal stove. Both were unconscious when found.

The committee appointed to investigate the charges against W. H. Knapp, stewart for the second Minnesota hospital for the insane, at Rochester, has concluded its work. It is expected the report will be favorable to Mr. Knapp.

The report of the postmasters of Duluth for march shows that $5,000 worth of stamped envelopes was sold and the receipts for the fiscal year ending March 31 amounted to $80,000, which is $15,000 more than receipts of the previous year.

Mrs. Mary Quillman, an old resident of Hastings, and one of the pioneer settlers of Nininger, died a few days ago, aged seventy-five years, after a week's illness. She was the mother of Miss Eliza A. Quillman, principal of the Everett school.

Casper Nuebel, who was arrested at Red Wing and bound over to await the action of the grand jury on the charge of indecent assault on a little girl and against whom no indictment was found, was rearrested on the same charge and bound over to the October grand jury.

Parties from the Twin Cities are in Mankato endeavoring to start a commercial college, a branch of the Northwestern College of Commerce and Finance. They are meeting with such encouragement and a new educational institution is likely to be the outcome.

Ladies and temperance people generally, are making a determined effort to have the Alexandria council remove all blinds from the saloon windows. Petitions to that effect are circulated and numerously signed. The council is supposed to be opposed to the measure.

T. V. Knatvold, who has been one of the leading citizens of Albert Lea, and who was the Republican candidate for state senator in this county last fall, will leave with his family for Cannon City, Cal., next week and will look up a location in the far West, having disposed of his mercantile interests here.

J. C. Turner has been appointed collector of customs for Fairbault by Col. C. G. Edwards, of St. Paul. His first official act was the releasing of a car load of pounded sugar for Theopold Mercantile company. Our city now presents the promise of becoming a wholesale importing center as well as manufacture.

NORTH DAKOTA.

J. G. Sanders and Louis Westhauser's saloons at Bismarck were closed by the sheriff in obeyance to a writ issued by Judge Winchester. Cases are to be brought against six others unless the law is obeyed.

Judge McConnell rendered a verdict in the Gracie vs. Gracie divorce suit at Fargo, scoring the attorneys for the complainant and the plaintiff's father for bringing into the court such a flimsy case and denied the application for divorce.

Hon. N. E. Nelson, collector of customs for North and South Dakota, has taken charge of his district. R. Morris, formerly clerk in the St. Paul custom house, is his special deputy. No other appointments have yet been made.

Application for a receiver for the Fargo Argus printing company, made by J. J. Hill, was denied by Judge Thomas of the United States court. It is understood that proceedings will be commenced in a day or so against the parties who participated in the recent effort to oust Edwards to cover damages.

Mrs. Mae Smith of New York city, who has been spending the winter as a guest of the Presentation nuns at St. Joseph's academy, Fargo, was united in marriage, to Dr. Thomas Stone, New York city. Among other valuable presents was a deed from the bridegroom to property in New York valued at $32,000.

The new agricultural college board of directors met at Fargo and elected Hon. H. F. Miller of Fargo president and Col. J. B. Power of Ellendale secretary. The election of treasurer was deferred until the next meeting. Various committees were appointed and plans of work outlined.

William Riddle and George Smith of St. Paul, news agents on the Northern Pacific, who were arrested at Dickinson, charged with assault and battery on a prominent party here, had a justice trial. Smith was acquitted, there being no charge proven against him, and Riddle was fined $5 and costs. He has taken an appeal to the spring term of the district court. From the evidence, Riddle stands a fair chance of acquittal before a higher tribunal.

Late advices to the department of the agriculture from North Dakota state that the greatest consternation exists there over the emigration campaign opened in that state by the Canadian government among the Canadian settlers. The government of North Dakota is making a tour of the state, holding public meetings to endeavor to induce the Canadians to stay, and he is being strongly seconded by storekeepers and others.

Last Fall the Red river valley Lutheran association located its college at Crookston, conditioned on the city raising a certain amount of bonus by April 1. This bonus has not been guaranteed. The committee met in Crookston to again receive bids, and the Fargo board of trade appointed a committee to canvass for pledges, with the result that the committee will wait on the Lutheran committee at Crookston with an offer of $15,000 cash and eighteen acres of land. There is little doubt but the college will come to Fargo.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Eden citizens are preparing to raise $1,000 bonus for a flouring mill.

Contracts have already been let for a large number of new buildings at Madison.

Sanborn county lays claims to being the banner county in South Dakota. It has not had a saloon for four years.

The flouring mill at Wentworth, is being removed to Fulda, Minn., and the citizens are endeavoring to secure a creamery in its stead.

Thomas Kukeal, a Bohemian farmer living near Lesterville, blew out his brains with a shot gun. Financial trouble was the cause.

Snow and rain fell heavily at Huron the other day. The snow is full of water and will put the ground in a splendid condition for seeding.

Gilbert and Olaf Anderson, two sons of Gus Anderson, living near Parker, were overcome by deadly damp in a well. The bodies were taken out with grappling hooks.

A meeting of the Mitchell university board President William Brush was granted leave of absence during his contemplated sojourn as United States consul at Messina, Italy, to which place he goes next month.

Parties report a rich discovery of horn silver at a point about twenty-five miles northwest of Rapid City. The lucky parties are Deadwood prospectors, and it is said the district is in a fever of excitement over the find.

The chairman of the enforcement committee at Aberdeen offers a reward of $100 for evidence that will secure conviction of false swearing in liquor cases, and $50 reward for evidence that secures conviction for violation of sections 8 and 9 of the prohibition law.

State Treasurer Taylor has issued a notice to the effect that all "South Dakota State Warrants" that have been presented for payment and endorsed "not paid for want of funds," excepting two funding warrants dated March 5, 1890, for $50,000 each, are called in for payment, there being funds on hand in the office of the treasurer to pay the same.

Gov. Mellette has made the following appointment: S. H. Elrod of Clark, member of the state board of regents, vice Talcot, resigned; Dr. J. R. Spooner of DeSmet, member of the board of charities and corrections, vice Alford, resigned; Dr. C. B. Alford of Huron, Dr. E. A. Fowler of Aberdeen, and Dr. D. W. Robinson of Pierre, members of the state board of health.

A delegation of professors, representing the faculty, in company with Judge Blaire, of Elk Point, left for Brookings, where the case of the students' and faculty's request that President Grose be not engaged for next year as president will be heard. President Grose, D. McInman and the delegation representing the students left yesterday morning on the east-bound train.

John Henjum, an old and wealthy citizen, was found dead in the slush and snow deposited by the recent furious storm at Sioux Falls. Hemjum when last seen was in a beastly state of intoxication, and the inquest held over the remains elicited the conclusion that he was chilled to death while drunk. The deceased was one of the early settlers of this city, coming here in 1875 from Decorah, Iowa.

WISCONSIN:

William Simmons, of the town of Nekimi, died, aged 60 years.

The remains of John Plankinton, the millionaire merchant, were laid to rest in Forest Home cemetery Milwaukee.

At Ironwood, John Nye, a miner, fell down a shaft 100 feet and was instantly killed.

Owing to the continual showers of the past few days Black river is rapidly rising. From present indications the river will be clear of ice, and logs will be running soon.

The senate has sustained the veto of the governor of the bill appropriating $50,500 to the Waupaca Veterans' home by a vote of 12 to 11.

Martin Dugan, fireman on the northwestern, running between Eau Claire and St. Paul, fell from his engine at an early hour and split his head open. His life is despaired of.

Jane Klein, age six years daughter of Mrs. Nettie Sullivan, of Prescott fell into a cistern containing eight feet of water, in the absence of her mother, and, before assistance could be procured, was drowned.

The logging cut on the Black river, and its tributaries will fall nearly 20,000,000 feet short of last year, it being about 200,000,000 this season, but there is general satisfaction among lumbermen as to the result.

A 4-year-old child of George Perrigo was drowned while playing in the yard of his home at Oconto. The boy fell in a small mud-puddle, and when the mother found the child life was nearly extinct.

Larson and Stapelton at Eau Claire were found guilty of burglary in connection with Joseph White, of St. Paul, who pleaded guilty recently. They burglarized Holmes & Simpson's store of $700 worth of furs New Year's.

Darius Winckley, a farmer living a few miles from Clinton, invited a neighbor to see his fine lot of clover seed. On arriving at the granary the clover seed was not to be found. It had been stolen. There were about fifty bushels, worth about $1.25 per bushel.

The handsome new building erected for the National German American academy, the gift of Mrs. Guido Phister and Mrs. F. Volge; was formally dedicated to-day. Addresses were made by Mr. Somers Richard Barthold, of St. Louis, as representative of the North American Sangerbund; Prof. Rosentengel, of the state university; Supt. Anderson, of this city; Mr. Vogel and others. The building cost about $50,000 and will hereafter be the home of the teachers' seminary, the normal school proper and the turn teachers' seminary.

IOWA.

Ex-Senator James Harlan is seriously ill at his home in Mount Pleasant: His physicians and friends are worried about his condition.

One hundred miners at Lehigh struck because of inability to agree on a summer schedule. They have been paid $1 per ton, but were offered 85 cents and obliged to sign a year's contract.

The $20,000 due the depositors of the bank of John A. McFarland of Boone suspended last November, is being paid off in full, the district court having approved the agreements.

The public school in Council Bluffs will probably be closed on account of the sickness prevalent. The complaints mostly are la grippe and measles, although there are some cases of scarlet fever and diphtheria. One-third of the teachers are unfit for duty.

During the past ten days a dozen or so of patients afflicted with pneumonia at Dubuque have been treated with Koch's lymph, which was received direct from the professor in Berlin. Five physicians are using the remedy, and in every instance with gratifying results.

Ex-Congressman J. B. Grinnell, founder of the town of Grinnell, died at Marshalltown, after a year's illness, aged seventy years, of throat and constitutional troubles. He was one of Iowa's best-known men, having filled a number of official positions in both the state and nation.

Smith Hastings, a very wealthy and eccentric old man, who lived alone at Lime Springs, was found dead on the sofa at his home here this evening. Though two of his daughters resides here he would live alone. He had been dead several hours when found. There is no evidence of foul play. Hastings leaves a large property.

An Elephant That Could Count Twenty.

Mr. Arthur Clay sends the following instance of the sagacity of the elephant. It was told me, he says, by Mr. Quay, at the time a con-commissioned officer in the first battalion of the sixtieth rifles, but now one of her majesty's yeomen of the guard. In 1953 his regiment was marching from Peshawur to Kopulvie and was accompanied by a train of elephants. It was the duty of the mahout in charge of each elephant to prepare twenty chupatties, or flatcakes made of coarse flour, for his charge. When the twenty chupatties were ready they were placed before the elephant, who during the process of counting never attempted to touch one of them until the full number was completed. On the occasion related by Mr. Quay one of the elephants had seized the opportunity of his mahout's attention being distracted for a moment to steal and swallow one of the chupatties. When the mahout, having finished the preparation, began to count them out. he of course discovered the theft, and presented his charge with nineteen in place of the usual number. The elephant instantly appreciated the fact of there being one less than he had a right to except, and refused to touch them, expressing his indignation by loud trumpetings. This brought the conductor of the elephant line (with whom Mr. Quay had been in conversation) on the scene. Having heard the explanation of the mahout the conductor decided that the mahout was in fault for not keeping a better lookout, and ordered him to provide the twentieth cake at his own cost. When this was prepared and added to the pile the elephant at once accepted and ate them.

Ohio Girl and Alligator.

Miss Helen Boyd, a charming young lady of Xenia, Ohio, who is just now visiting this city, is the heroine of a thrilling encounter with an alligator. Miss Boyd, with a gentleman companion, took a horseback ride out into the country, and on the route came across a large alligator, which the warm weather had brought forth from his winter quarters.

As soon as the saurian was discovered the couple dismounted, hitched their horses, and taking a fence rail each from a convenient fence began to pound the life out of the 'gator, which they finally succeeded in doing.

When the first onslaught was made upon the 'gator he showed fight, but Miss Boyd stood her ground like a veteran and rained blow after blow upon his head until he gave up the ghost. His tail was then cut off and carried home, and part of it being turned into savory dish by an experienced cook, the dashing young beauty partook of it with relish, declaring she had never found anything in Ohio to equal it in delicacy and flavor.—Atlanta Constitution.

Plagiarism of Sermons.

The Rev. Septimus Smith was many years ago Vicar of St. Cross, Neneham. He made no secret at all of his habit of buying ready-made sermons, any more than his fondness for old port, and of whist-playing with leading parishioners until midnight of every Saturday. He was a kindly natured, easy-going man, and was popular among his equally easy-going flock. One Sunday morning, on going into the vestry after service, he found his old clerk in tears. "What's the matter, Jones?" inquired the vicar. "Oh, sir!" replied the clerk, "this is a painful surprise for us all." "Surprise, Jones? What do you mean?" "Your sermon this morning, sir. We are all very sorry, and you gave us no warning." "Sermon, Jones? Sermon? What do you mean, man?" "Why, sir, your farewell sermon. We are all dreadfully cut up." And it is quite true that that morning the Rev. Septimus had actually read an old farewell sermon without either intending or knowing it.

Fooling with Two Dangers.

A man tried to electro cute a cat at Davenport, Iowa, recently. He placed the ends of the wires from each pole of the battery in a tub of water, placed the cat therein and turned on the current. For some reason he had to move the tub, and in doing this he managed to get his own hand in the water and came near being electrocuted himself. After he was brought to and the cat recaptured the original came off without a hitch—Waterbury American.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Monday, March, 30,

SENATE.

Senator Day gave notice that he should introduce a resolution providing for the cleaning of the windows of the senate chamber if they did not have an improved appearance by the succeeding morning. The senators present gave unmistakable signs that they would heartily support the resolution, and the janitors will doubtless act upon the hint.

The senate entered upon reports of committees and the passage of local bills. Among the first measures passed was the Duluth annexation compromise bill, which had already passed the house. There is now needed only the governor's signature to the measure to end the fight over this question.

The senate judiciary committee reported back a subsitute for the various bills designed to prevent corruption of elections.

About 11:30 o'clock the senate went into committee of the whole to consider general orders, with Senator March in the chair. Senator Day's bill amending the law relating to roads and bridges, Senator Keller's measure providing or livery stable liens, and Senator McMillan's bill, requiring railroads to provide automatic brakes and couplers, were recommended to pass.

HOUSE.

The house by an almost unanimous vote ordered 5,000 copies of the report of the special prison investigating committee to be printed.

The house went into committee of the whole, with Mr. Greer of Wabasha in the chair, but even in committee the general stagnation which pervaded the whole day's business crept in and but little of interest transpired. H. F. 1015, authorizing the state agricultural society to make a lease with the Twin City Jockey club for the club house and grounds on the state fair grounds, went through after some questions had been asked, but H. F. 653, a bill relating to the foreclosure of chattel mortgages, was not so fortunate.

The World's fair appropriation bill also went over, as the attendance was not large enough to pass any appropriation bill.

Mr. Gallagher's bill reapportioning one of the Hennepin county senatorial districts was recommended to pass and several other bills were also favorably passed upon before the committee rose and the house adjourned.

Tuesday March. 31,

SENATE.

Senator Daugherty's bill prohibiting private banks came back from the committee on banks and banking with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. The Duluth senator objected to such treatment, however, and succeeded in getting the bill referred to the committee of the whole.

In the afternoon the first matter of importance to come before the senate was Senator Donnelly's mortgage taxation bill, S. F. 56, which was on its final passage. There was no debate whatever. Senator Leavitt attempted to get an amendment before the senate, but Senator Brown objected and the roll was called on the bill. The result showed 22 votes in its favor and 23 against it:

HOUSE.

When the house met to-day Mr. Gallagher moved to have his bill providing for a three-cent street railway fare taken from the table, but after a lurid discussion, extending over half an hour, the motion was, voted down.

The sensation of the morning was caused by Mr. Tripp of Hennepin, who sent up a resolution to enforce the rules of the house against the admission of lobbyists to the floor for the rest of the session.

Mr. Penney, on behalf of his bill, made a strong speech in which he pointed out the cruelty of the present law, which provides that executions shall take place between midnight and sunrise, and further that so far as the provision of the present law prohibiting the publication of reports of executions was concerned, it had never been observed by any of the newspapers of the state.

After a lengthy discussion, in which the objections of the people of Stillwater to have all the executions take place at the penitentiary were enlarged upon at considerable length, the bill was defeated by a vote of 36 yeas to 44 nays.

Wednesday, April. 1.

SENATE

The committee on printing recommended the indefinite postponement of the resolution of Senator Leavitt providing for the asking of bids for the printing of the session laws. This report was signed by Senators Craven, Day and Eaton. Senators Hompe and Grafe dissented from the report.

The afternoon session of the senate, though spent entirely in the consideration of general orders, was productive of not a little interesting debate and action. Most of the time was spent on Senator Hompe's bill entitled "An act to prevent abuses of the right of the liberty of the press," but which Senator Crandall, in his remarks, styled "a blow at the liberty of the press." The bill as introduced provided that all articles and items of whatever nature which appeared in any newspaper should be signed by the writer.

John Day Smith offered an amendmsnt excepting from the provisions of the bill all articles not reflecting upon any one's character.

Senator Lienau was about the only one who voted against the bill. It was almost unanimously recommended for passage.

HOUSE

There were several important bills considered in the house yesterday, among the number being Mr. Tripp's bill to prevent corrupt practices at elections, the bill relating to foreclosures of chattel mortgages and the world's fair appropriation bill. This latter bill provided for a $100,000 appropriation, but it was cut down in committee of the whole to $75,000. The major part of the morning session was devoted to considering the reports of committees, a number of bills being reported back to the house.

Gov. Merriam's veto of the Pickerel lake bill was taken up, and by a very large majority the house sustained the veto.

A number of senate bills were given their first reading, among them being S. F. 699, Senator Hompe's railroad bill. Mr. Searle moved that the rules be suspended and the bill referred to the committee of the whole. Mr. Currier objected to this, and held that the bill should take its regular course and be referred to the railroad committee. There not being sufficient members present to suspend the rules the bill was referred to the railroad committee in the usual way. was next taken up and discussed at some length. The bill provides for an appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of making a Minnesota state exhibit. On the motion of Mr. Bell it was amended so as to provide for the turning into the state treasury of all proceeds from any sale of the exhibits.

Mr. Bjorge said he believed $50,000 was as much as the state could afford at this time. If more was to be appropriated the money would have to be found.

A vote of Mr. Feig's amendment was taken, and it was carried by 48 in the affirmative and 43 in the negative.

The bill as amended was then recommended to pass by a vote of 48 to 43.

SENATE.

The routine business of the senate was inordinately dull yesterday. Nearly the whole day was spent on general orders and it happened that no bills of particular interest to the general public were discussed. It was the same way with the calendar. Senator McMillan's automatic coupler and brake bill—the measure which provides that all cars and engines in the state must be equipped with couplers and brakes within four years—was referred to a committee consisting of Senators McMillan and Morse, the latter having discovered a provision which he thought needed modification. It will be reported back to-day, and being first on the calendar is likely to be passed. This was the most important bill on yesterday's list. The bill providing for the revision of the statutes under the direction of the attorney general went through without objection.

In the afternoon there was a little more animation in the senate over J. W. Peterson's bill amending the law regulating the sale and manufacture of baking powder and prepared foods, syrups and the like. After the bill had been amended by provisions requiring that all ingredients be shown on the labels the bill was recommended for passage.

The joint resolution petitioning congress to establish a postal telegraph was favorably considered. This was one of Donnelly's pet schemes. Another bill of some interest was that of Senator Leavitt's, providing for the assessment and taxation of telephone and telegraph lines. The Currier bill from the house was substituted for this—it having practically the same provisions—and was then recommended for passage.

HOUSE.

The question of increasing the compensation of employes of the house came up, Mr. Feig calling up his resolution of March 24. This resolution provides for increasing the pay of the reading clerk, Robert Dakin, one of the best and most efficient officers of the house, to $8 per day.

Mr. Lomen offered an amendment raising Mr. Dakin's pay to $10 per day, and in support of his amendment Mr. Lomen made quite an effective speech.

The amendment of Mr. Lomen was then passed by a vote of 77 to 2, the objectors being Messrs. Knudson and Lewis.

Mr. Knudson called up his resolution authorizing the purchase of copies of the statutes for the use of state officers and it was adopted.

Mr. Doyle, in behalf of the Goodhue county delegation, reported back H. F. 1196, a local bill fixing the salaries of the county officers. On his motion the bill was passed under suspension of the rules.

Friday April. 3.

SENATE.

A resolution from Senator Stevens directing the insertion of maps of the new congressional apportionment in the legislative manuals not yet distributed was adopted.

In the order of committee reports Senators Day and Leavitt reported back the bill asserting the state rights to the Pickerel lake land with a substitute for everything after the enacting clause. The bill is a simple assertion of the claim of the state to the land in question.

The veterinary practice bill landed unexpectedly back in general orders. It was first defeated, 25 yeas to 23 nays, then reconsidered, and finally turned over to committee of the whole.

When the calendar was finished four bills were introduced by permission of the governor, and then adjournment was taken until 10 o'clock this morning.

HOUSE.

The Currier bill, H. F. 901, was the eighth in order on the calendar, and when it was reached there was a large house, only nine members being absent from their seats, namely: Messrs. Bowman, Campion, Coates, Doyle, Gallagher, Lloyd, Sinclair, Wacek and M. Walsh.

KILLING THE BILL.

After the bill had been read, Mr. Searle offered an earnest protest in behalf of Stearns county and the city of St. Cloud, the interest of which he believed would be injuriously affected by the bill, against the passage of this bill. Without further deliberation or discussion the roll was called on the passage of the bill, and it was defeated by eight votes.

There was quite a battle over the world's fair appropriation bill, made mainly by the Alliance members of the house. As this bill came up for consideration just after the Currier bill had been defeated, there was a faint suspicion existing that they were feeling sore and perhaps a little revengeful, but all who spoke disclaimed any such feeling. Nevertheless, they insisted upon the amount being cut down from $75,000 to $50,000, and as the author of the bill would not yield they defeated the bill altogether. Seeing this Mr. Reeve offered to accept $50,000, if the Alliance members agreed to pass the bill without opposition, which they consented to do, and the bill as amended was passed.

Mr. Reeve remained obdurate, and the roll was called on the bill, with the result of its being defeated by 50 negative votes to 41 affirmative,

Saturday, April 4.

SENATE.

A bill was passed allowing alliances the use of school houses for meetings.

The bill requiring all baking powder containing ammonia to be labeled as such.

Senator Donnelly's petition to congress for the establishment of a postal telegraph was passed.

HOUSE.

A motion was made to reconsider the vote by which the Currie bill had been defeated yesterday; the motion was lost.

The Hompe railroad bill, which was reported back by the railroad committee, was ordered to be placed on general orders, where Mr. Searle's bill now is, and the probabilty is that Senator Hompe's bill will be passed by the house.

The only other matter which excited any degree of interest in the house yesterday was the report of the judicary committee on the bill to regulate the sale of baking powders containing ammonia as one of the ingredients. The bill provides that all such powders shall bear a plain statement of their ingredients printed on each package. It is proposed to amend the bill by compelling all baking powders to be so labeled, and the bill was recommended to be indefinitely postponed by the committee. After a little discussion the bill was ordered to be placed on general orders.

A Senatorial Dandy.

Washington Correspondence New York Tribune: Here is the picture of the costume of a Southern senator, which should be preserved in the record of the fashions of the time. This senator wore on his head a small, soft black hat, well pulled over his eyes. His undercoat was dark green, made so as to button at the throat. Under that he wore a low-buttoned waistcoat, leaving a white, shiny triangle of the shirt bosom showing, upon which glowed coral studs. His trousers were a dark blue, with a light red stripe. These trousers were made absolutely skin-tight, like the trousers of the German officers. They came down snugly, over a pair of low Oxford tieshoes tied with loose, wide ribbon laces. Over this morning costume he wore a drab-colored cloak lined with brown. The collar of the cloak was a light blue purple velvet. It was caught at the throat with two brass hasps of a character ponderous enough for fastening the back door of a stable. It was in this unique and altogether original attire that the senater was out paying his respects to various department officials.

BANK NOTE FACTS.

Points on the Manner of Detecting Counterfeit Paper.

"Let me give you a few points on the best way to detect a counterfeit note," says an authority on the subject in the Boston Transcript. "Experts don't judge so much by the appearance of the bill as they do by its 'feel;' that is, by the way it slips through the fingers, but it takes years of experience to acquire the necessary fine touch and even then it is not always reliable. Every bill is lettered and numbered, and there is a connection between the numbers and the letters which is made in such a way that when you know about it you can tell a genuine bill almost at a glance. What are known as the character letters of a bill are placed on either side of the central figure or vignette, and are A, B, C, and D only. The letters stamped in colors before and after the numbers have nothing to do with the case so far as detecting a counterfeit goes, but those engraved on the bill in the places mentioned are rightly named character letters, since they serve, in connection with the numbers, to show if the bill is genuine. Now suppose you have a bill numbered 12922826. The character letter on such a bill should be B. Why? If you take the last two figures, which are 26, and divide them by 5, you will have a remainder of 2. Now B is the second letter of the alphabet, and the remainder after dividing the last two figures by 4 must in every case be that represented by the numerical position of the first four letters of the alphabet. That is, when one is left over the character letter should be C, and when there is no remainder the letter should be D. When this rule fails to work on any bill you come across you can bet as many more as you can raise that the bill is counterfeit. It's rather strange, but it's still another fact that the counterfeiters have not caught on to this little scheme of Uncle Sam's currency sharps, and that they slap in their letter, and numbers without any regard to the relation that ought to be between them.

A Great South-American Railway.

The station of the Southern Railway on the Plaza de la Constitucion at Buenos Ayres is a vast and handsome building, which will bear comparison with the best modern railway stations in Europe. The monumental marble staircase and entrance hall, the offices of the administration, the waiting-rooms, and the arrival and departure platforms, spanned by a tasteful iron roof, are all as fine as anything of the kind in the Old World. The adjoining goods station and depots are of enormous extent, and during the season from the great wool market of Buenos Ayres. The plan and distribution of the various services are most conveniently arranged. The rolling stock of the great Southern Company for passenger traffic is, like the station, of the most modern, and improved description, built in England, the ordinary cars on the North American plan, and the sleeping cars on the European system, with compartments of beds. This company runs also vestibule trains between Buenos Ayres and La Plata, these cars likewise built in England, are fitted up with the greatest luxury, and provided with every convenience that a traveler can desire. I confess that I was agreeably surprised to find such an admirably appointed railway in the new republic. In the Old World, even in these days of international expresses and through trains from the Bastille to the Sublime Porte, the public is not accustomed to such splendor as the Buenos Ayres great Southern Company offers to the nil admirari Argentine farmers.—Harper's Magazine.

In "Sahsiety,"

Two immense, jet black women in gorgeous plaid dresses, red and blue and yellow bonnets and imitation monkey hair shoulder capes, boarded a Detroit street car recently, each with a huge market basket on her arm.

Dropping into their seats with the baskets at their feet, one of them said to the other in a weary tone.

"La, Mis' Wintahbottom, how ti'ed I is ob all dis heah sahsiety. I'se jess been on de lope all wintah. I'se plum sick of it!"

"I is, too, Mis' Snow. I'se jess been a gallopin' to dis an' a racin' ter dat de hull endoorin' tima. An' I nebbah cared much fo' sahsiety nohow.

"Nor I. I ain't no wish ter be a sahsiety pusson: but hit jess seems like one got ter go or else 'fend one's fren's. nebbah did care fo' sahsiety. Ob co'se I like ter see my fren's but when hit comes ter dis reg'lar fash'nable sahsiety I been in all wintah I don't go much on hit."

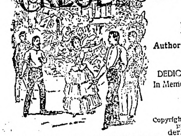
"Now yo's talkin sense, Mis' Snow, yo' jess air. Dis is de las' wintah I'se gwine ter frow myse'f into sahsiety like I'se been doin'. Ez I say, I been on de lope all wintah ter dis pahty an' to dat 'ception, but I'se gwine ter break off from hit all next wintah."

"So's I. I'se seen an' heerd all I keers to of fine sahsiety an—oh, is dis your street?"

"Yes; goodby. See you at de Jackson's pahty tonight?"

And the careworn "sahsiety" ladies separated.—Detroit Free Press.

CREOLE AND PURITAN



By T. C. DE LEON.

on shiny hat or glossy boots: the other the cool, incisive, meaningless stare of his keen, gray eyes. Yet Capt. Richard Peerman was the sharpest detective Uncle Sam had ever paid for unearthing a paymaster's "little game" in war or "clicking the bracelets" round a felon's wrists in peace.

"So you cannot find any clew?" Latour asked wearily; but he eagerly seized the card the other extended by way of answer.

"Toughest case I ever worked up on no clew," the detective said placidly. "Tens o' thousands of 'em exactly alike in this town. But when Dick Peerman goes for a thief or a woman, either may as well come down."

The Creole had read the card over and over by the fitful firelight. Without reply he threw on a heavy army cloak, and whispering the other to wait stole out and softly closed the door.

Through howling storm and blinding snow the driver of a chanced-on cab steered Latour over the East Side, where tenements swarm with human vermin, where poverty and pestilence stalk hand in hand through mazes of their ceaseless carnival. Miles they struggled northward, out of the closer district, to where progress had not yet crowded his victims so closely; then they stopped before a tall, dingy house, and Latour, springing out, ascended the crazy stair and paused at every landing.

At last he halted, a flood of wondering, pitying tenderness sweeping his face as he looked around that cheerless home of poverty.

Twice he raised his hand, twice he paused before he tapped nervously upon the door. The answer came prompt and sharp, but again he caught his breath hard before he ventured to lift the crazy latch.

Over a very small fire, in a clean but almost bare room, sat Miss Tabitha Fay and her brother. She was only a shade more angular, he far less rotund than of yore; but over the faces of both time and poverty had unmistakably passed their hands.

"Nonsense, Brother Standish! I did hear a rap. Come in!" were the words that carried the visitor back on a flood of memory and pity.

Surprise, greeting and explanation were soon over, and Latour asked anxiously:

"Where is Bennie?"

"She is rather later than usual this evening," Miss Tabitha answered apologetically. "She usually returns by early lamplight."

"Where from?" queried Latour impatiently.

"It is a very long distance," the spinster went on as indirectly as ever, "and the artist photographer detains her at this season."

"And she now, fortunately," Mr. Standish put in, "has been able to secure extra work."

"Work! A night like this! Thank God! I have found her!" Adrien cried in a half groan.

Then, answering at random the spinster's voluble cackle and the many questions of her brother, the Creole paced the room nervously; ever and again pressing his face against the frosty little pane, or pausing to catch her tread upon the creaking stair.

At last it came. Pinched with cold and covered with snow, Bennie yet ran in cheerily and kissed her father before she saw the visitor.

"Oh! I beg pardon," she said. "I did not know you had a visitor, papa!—You here!"

She drew up in surprise, as she recognized Latour, a dash of old time hauteur over her face. But the expression on his stopped her.

"Bennie, please hear me before you speak," he said, more humbly than he had ever spoken to mortal before. And, hearing, Miss Fay signaled to her brother, strode over, took his arm and marched him from the room.

Bennie stood silent, her eyes dropped, her hands clasped listlessly before her. But eagerly the man went on:

"Bennie, ten weary years ago you asked my forgiveness. In my pride and folly I refused it. Five years later you besought me, still unchastened by sorrow, to stay my cruel judgment. Once more, in my sinful blindness, I refused. Now, in penitence and contrition, I come from lonely wandering to beseech what I would not give. Bennie, for the sake of the old days, can you forgive me?"

Those blue eyes, once saucy, proud still, raised quietly from the floor met his eager, hungry gaze. The voice was low and sweet, but it never trembled as she answered:

"From my heart I forgive you!"

His arms were around her, the snow dampened head pressed close to his breast.

"Bennie! darling!" he whispered. "I know all. Dale told me your secret!"

"Dale told!"

Quickly she broke from the strong arms; a scarlet flood dyed the face she bent upon the ground.

"Dale told!" she repeated in trembling tones. "How could he"——

"Hush, darling!" he interrupted. "Do not judge him until you know all."

Taking Dale's crumpled letter from his breast he put it in her hands. And Bennie, standing statue still, read it slowly through. But, as she read, the play of deep emotions flickered on her face, then faded out, leaving no sign to the eyes that watched so yearningly.

Then she folded the letter gently, tenderly, and put it in her bosom.

"This letter must be mine," she said quietly, but turning her face away. "Dale's sacrifice for me I guessed before, but some things in it I never dreamed till now. What he has written of me must be mine, until I can put this letter into his own hands again."

Again, as she ceased, the crimson flood swept the pale face; but she met Latour's eyes bravely as she asked:

"Where is Dale now?"

"At the hotel very ill. I have"——

"I must go to him, then," she interrupted calmly, but very pale. "Take me, please."

And again she raised her eyes and looked fearlessly into those of the first man she had ever loved.

* * * * *

When Bennie Mason softly followed Adrien Latour into the sick room Capt. Richard Peerman was immersed in the biography of James Mace, Esq., in the current number of a then famous society journal. He rose, removed his hat, as though that act were greatest concession, and remarked:

"Excuse me, miss, but hanged if you ain't as prompt as Dick Peerman!"

Then, with a voluminous glance at his employer, he discreetly retired and closed the door.

Bennie stood by the bed and looked down silently and long upon the sleeper. Opposite stood the man who had loved and wronged and, at last, understood her.

Suddenly the sleeper moved restlessly and the ever-recurrent words came very gently this time:

"Old, old friends, Bennie!"

Noiselessly and very tenderly the woman sank upon her knees, the bright masses of her hair shadowing the face bent over Dale's pale hand. But his opening eyes first fell upon his friend's face. Full memory had come back now.

"Dear old boy!" he whispered feebly. "Letter all right. Find Bennie"——

Then he saw the form beside him. Without surprise, without one start his joy went out in one low whisper:

"Bennie!"

The woman did not raise her head, but her hand very gently put out the lettter from her bosom.

"Take this back, dear Dale," she said softly. "Some of it is—true; some must be forgotten."

Feebly stroking the bright hair he answered:

"Yes, all sorrow must be forgotten, now! Give me your hand, dear old Adrien. You have found her!"

Lying there so feebly, the sick soldier tried to join the hands of those two he had loved so loyally, even as he whispered:

"When you are happiest, Bennie, remember you said, we are old, old friends!"

Very pale was the face the woman then raised before both men. Very gentle, but firmly clear, was the voice that bore these words:

"We were old friends, dear Dale. Now with the blessing of God, we will be more than that, forever, 'till death do us part!'"

THE END.

Death in Can and Pot.

But we are running twice the risk in the tin cans which furnish half the family living. The trouble is not not more from acid fruit and tomatoes than from the lead coating of inferior tin, such as furnishes the cheap kitchenware not sold by the five cent shops entirely. Housekeepers may know it by its dullness after short use, which no polishing will banish for more than a few days.

The old fashioned brightness of tin, which was the pride of the kitchen, was a safe thing for health. All darkening of metal is oxidation, which leaves traces in food plainly to be tasted.

It is no mere oblation to pride which ordains the perpetual polishing of silver, cutlery and cooking utensils. It is a precaution for health. Bright spoons, shining steel knives and saucepans are essential to safety of food. It is no imagination that rejects the taste of fish eaten with a steel knife, the action of fish juices on steel being instant and unqualified. Nor is it imagination that finds the taste of fresh water from a cup of impure tin unpleasant.—Shirley Dare.

Bill Nye's Good Taste.

Bill Nye was asked to lecture before the Woman's Press club a while ago. He consented. The lecture was in the afternoon. It was an enjoyable one. He wore a walking suit and his customary smile. He appeared, as usual, serenely unconscious of his personal appearance —presumably—because he knew that he had started out dressed just exactly as he should be. A few days afterward a member of the W. P. C. met a member of the Chicago Press club. In speaking of the entertainment she said: "We were perfectly satisfied with the lecture, but he paid us very little respect in wearing an ordinary suit. After we consented to that high price the very least that he could have done was to have worn a dress suit."

If that is a woman's idea of afternoon respect it is not at all surprising that men fall into the error and commit the unpardonable blunder of appearing in dress suits even at a morning wedding, as was the case not so long ago.—Teresa H. Dean in Chicago Herald.

Peculiar Sort of Indians.

In Manitoba and the western part of British America, where I spent some time, I came in contact with a very peculiar race of Indians. They belong to no particular tribe, and in fact, to no particular race, having Indian, Scotch and French blood in their veins. They are the descendants of the old Scotch agents of the Hudson Bay company and their Indian wives, with a dash of French blood from the Canadian woodsmen. Their hair is frequently of a light brown and wavy. They speak bad French and all have the broad Scotch burr. They hold themselves aloof from the full blooded Indians and the French half bloods, and are the best carriers to be found, for no other Indians can compare with them as runners. Sixty miles a day is no uncommon journey for them. By constant intermarriage they have preserved and strengthened their peculiarities, and consider themselves a separate tribe. They number about 5,000.—Interview in St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Suicide Bridge in Harlem.

The bridge over the Harlem at Third avenue has always been a favorite spot with suicides, and the men who let boats in that vicinity are never surprised at seeing a "stiff" in the water. The officers on duty are always on the watch for any person in depressed spirits leaning upon the rail. One hot night a large colored woman, carrying a laundress' basket, was observed to drop her burden with a sigh and lean over the railing to gaze intently into the water. The officer on guard watched her closely. She covered her face now and then with her handkerchief, and uttered deep sighs. When she took a light shawl from her shoulders, folded and laid it in her basket the officer thought it was time to interfere. He moved quickly to her side and said: "You ain't thinking of jumpin' in, are you?" The woman turned a heated but jolly face upon him. "Bet yer I ain't," she said. "I'm tryin' to get cooled off, that's all."—New York Press.

A Rival to Jute.

On the Persian shores of the Caspian a plant has been discovered which possesses a splendid fiber, soft and elastic, with a glossy, satin like texture. It is strong and pliable, and appears to be especially suitable for the manufacture of sacking, ropes and packthread, so that, being very plentiful, it is likely to become a formidable rival to jute. The discoverer has given the plant the name of Kanoff.—New York Journal.

The Dog Remembered.

A gentleman who is a great traveler, and who is always accompanied in his wanderings by a bull terrier, to which he is much attached, arrived one day in the city of Florence. His dog was for some reason intrusted to the care of a porter at the station, and in the excitement of the crowd and under the unusual experience of being separated from his master, who generally kept the animal with him, Bruno was moved to make his escape.

The most careful search was made, and before going to his hotel the traveler went to the police station to notify the gens d'armes of his loss. It was more than an hour before he reached his hotel. When he got there he spoke of his loss, so that if anything was heard of the dog it would be understood that the animal belonged to him. To his astonishment the porter said:

"But your dog is here, sir. He came before you, and we did not know to whom he belonged."

"The dog is here!" repeated the gentleman in surprise. "How came he here?"

"He ran in, sir, about half an hour ago, and after snuffing about the office for a little he ran up stairs. I gave orders to have him driven out, but the boys have been busy, and he is up there somewhere now."

The traveler, of course, went up stairs at once, and there on the mat before the chamber numbered forty-four lay Bruno, who sprang up with the most frantic demonstrations of delight at finding his master again.

The gentleman remembered that two years previous he had been with the dog in Florence, and had staid at this hotel. He did not remember that he had occupied this particular room, but on reference to the hotel register such was found to be the fact.

The dog had remembered not only the hotel, but the chamber, and when he found himself lost in a strange city he at once ran to the place where he and his master had been together before.—Youth's Companion.

It is said that Don M. Dickinson and I. Milton Weston, of Michigan, are interested with Mr. W. C. Whitney in one or two business enterprises of considerable moment. One of them is a syndicate to manufacture sulphite fiber. The plant is in Maine, and the process used is a German invention. The fibers of the spruce wood seem so far to have given the best results. Mr. Weston says that the sulphite fiber from wood makes as good blankets as wool does. The wood blankets are said to be cheaper, and while woolen blankets sell for six dollars a pair the spruce tree product can be turned out, according to this syndicate, for three dollars a pair. It may interest his society friends to know that Mr. Whitney is said to believe that we will all be wearing wooden clothes after a while—not the "wooden overcoats" in which tenderfeet who die out west are said to come home, but complete outfits of apparel which can be made from "the soft side of a board."—New York World.

She Chattered.

It was on a street car. Two lady friends were chattering away as only ladies can.

"Oh! I'm to have some new diamonds!" suddenly exclaimed one.

"Is it possible!"

"Yes. My husband is going to make $5,000 all in a lump next week, and he says I may have $500 to put into diamonds."

"Dear me! Is it a speculation of his?"

"Yes. There's a man who wants to sell him a piece of Woodward avenue property for $15,000, and he can turn his bargain over to Mr. Blank for $5,000."

"How nice!"

"The dickens it is!" growled a man across the aisle below his breath. "So it's her husband who is after my lot, and he can sell it to Blank for $5,000 more. I rather guess not, old man—not this year! I'll hop off and hunt up Blank and have his option in half an hour."—Detroit Free Press.

Youthful Ideas of Geography.

While youngsters appear to get considerably "mixed" in digesting their historical information, their ideas of geographical facts are also unfrequently, to say the least, original. A young hopeful said that the surface of the earth consisted of land and water. "What, then," asked the teacher, "do land and water make?" "Mud," was the instant rejoinder.—Cassell's Journal.

ENGAGING A PLAIN COOK

INTERESTING METHOD OF A FIFTH AVENUE YOUNG WOMAN.

The Ordeal from a Man's Standpoint. Some of the Requisites That One Has to Have to Earn Fifty Cents a Day and Board.

A business man who lives in Madison avenue wanted a coachman to go out to his summer place on Long Island. He dropped in at the Fourth avenue place one morning "just to look around." This place does not employ many coachmen. Its business is mostly with female help. The business man had to wait for about an hour, and this is part of what he saw: He had been there less than five minutes when the daughter of a man who is a familiar figure down town stepped briskly in. She was tall and handsome and stylishly dressed. Just why she chose to undertake the engaging of servants herself she might be at a loss to explain; but she did undertake it, and there she was.

The agent was obsequious in his attentions. The young woman glanced dubiously at the chair he offered her, and remained standing. There was just the suspicion of a curl on her fine lips as she told what she wanted. "I want two girls—one who can do plain cooking and a second girl to go to our country place on Long Island." The agent proposed that she try first for the cook, and she accepted his suggestion.

The first applicant examined by the young woman was an Irish girl with a brogue as broad as the grin on her generous mouth. She answered every question with a vigorous nod and an extra grin that accentuated her jolly "to be shure, mum." An expert stenographer could not have taken all the questions the society damsel asked that poor cook. Her first statement was a dampener to the cook's hope. It was to the effect that the wages would be but fourteen dollars a month. Now, you can't get a good cook for that money, and that girl knew it. Maybe she imagined she was showing some of her father's business talent. In spite of this disheartening beginner cook remained cheerful.

A FEW QUESTIONS.

Then came in rapid succession something like this: "Can you do plain cooking? and wash? and iron? and do up shirts? and collars and cuffs? and bake bread? and make good biscuits? and make pies? and bake cake? and can you sew any? are you willing to go to the country? do you think you'd like the place? and you are sure you can cook? and make pies? and bake cake? and bread? and sweep? and dust?" And the business man, who belonged to an athletic club, and had heard the Irish caretaker sing, smiled a little and hummed softly:

An' work an' sweat an' puff an' cuss,
An' drill, ye tarriers, drill.

Well, the young woman cross-examined the cook. She traced her genealogy as far back as she could, and entered pleasing comments on it whenever she chose. She asked more questions than a western mortgage sharp asks on a granger's application for a loan. Life insurance agents would have slunk away from her in despair. Only a book agent could have hoped to cope with her.

When the bewildered cook, who had nearly nodded her head off and had completely ruined the decorations of her bonnet by the unmerciful shaking she had given them, found time to enter a mild protest at the wages, the tall young woman smiled sweetly and said: "Oh, I guess we could make it fifteen if you can really do plain cooking and can make beds and do housework and make cookies and fix salads and haven't any children and don't want company or days off and can make bread and think you'll like the place and are willing to go down in the country, and we'll pay your fare down there. It's at Bay Shore, you know." And the man in the corner, who was watching, said to the agent, "She'll want that cook to pick cranberries and paint the house with the juice if this keeps up."

CONTRASTS.

After the cook had agreed to every imaginable thing for half an hour the girl suddenly announced that she wanted to see another applicant. There is nothing the matter with that agent; he knows his business. The first applicant was a bit plain as to her looks, but she was neat, clean, and evidently capable. The agent brought in a second applicant. Anybody could have noticed the contrast. No. 2 was not a bit proud and she was not what you'd call handsome. She was short and fat and frowsy. A cloak which might have been made out of the oat sack in which Noah kept his mule feed was wrapped around her ample form in a mysteriously intricate way. Her hair was trimmed a la Peter Jackson. Her hat was a Division street marvel and her abbreviated dress skirts displayed large splashes of mud on her bulbous boots. The contrast was noticeable to Miss Fifth Avenue. She was visibly struck by it, but she braced herself and began again her new catechism. It ended much quicker than the first one and resulted in the employment of the first applicant.

The business man left before the second girl had been secured. Three applicants were examined, and again the first was chosen. While this young woman was engaging two servants a dozen other people had found help to suit them. A slender young woman with a brisk, businesslike air came in to look for a cook. She was dressed quietly in some gray stuff, which, coupled with her expression, carried the irresistible suggestion that her life had been mostly gray.

She told the agent concisely what she wanted. And when he sent a cook to talk to her she told the cook as simply and explicitly what she would require. An agreement was reached in five minutes, and it will last a long time. There are plenty of such cases, and complaints are very few from them. It is from the bargain driving shrewd ones that the complaints are heard.—New York Sun.

Technical Definitions.

According to The Schoolmaster, "stability" was recently defined as being "the cleaning up of a stable;" and an answer to some question about insurance had this passage: "The money is provided by the company to defray the expenses of the birth of members in pecuniary distress." In summer, it seems, "the day is longer, owing to expansion by the heat;" and that season itself is thus explained: "Once a year we have the whole bright side of the sun turned toward us. Then it is summer. The sun is in the solstice and stands still."

Taxation of Mortgages.

From the Minneapolis Journal.

The fact that this is regarded as a question open to discussion at all, illustrates the prevalence of half thinking and wild notions on economic subject. Are titles and debt property at all? Property is always amaterial actuality with inherent rights or titles. It is the product solely of labor and in respect to value and for exchange is always measured by labor. A fish free in the water is not property, but when it is caught through the instrumentality of labor, it becomes property. Property, therefor, is not only always a physical actuality, but is always embodied or accummulated labor. If a title to a farm in Minnesota is property and is held in Boston, then the farm, not being capable of being in two states, is not property in Minnesota. Titles are inherent in property, and cannot be separated there from but are not the property itself. When a man buys a title or credit to property he pays for and in effect buys the physical actuality or right of ownership which the credit or title represents. When a man sells titles or credits in excess of, or separates from, the embodied labor they are supposed to represent, the act is called swindling. And why? Because the title to property, where there is no physical actuality, is a fraud and a delusion. The theory that everything is property that can be sold will hardly be accepted by the man who buys a title and finds that what it purports to represent has no real existence

As to the relation of debts to property, it may be said that the value of a debt rests entirely on the circumstances that it is a power to appropriate the results of embodied labor. A debt payable in merely imaginary things would be an imaginary debt. A debt is the title or the representative of property or money due. A warehouse receipt given for wheat is a title to the wheat, but it is not wheat itself; nor is the debt the property it represents. There is no value in the debt except in the property which it represents, or to which it is an equitable title Judge Foster of the Connecticut supreme court of errors has rendered the opinions that "property and a debt (considered as a representative of the property pledged for its payment) constitutes together but one subject for the purpose of taxation. The tax being paid on the property with diminutionon account of the debt, nothing remains to be taxed. The debt, indeed, aside from the property behind it, and of which it is the representation, is simply worthless."

The subject is one of interest to every man in Minnesota who has a mortgage upon his property. Let every man figure how much he pays for the luxury of having a law that mortgages shall be taxed. Say that there are outstanding in this State one hundred millions of dollars of mortgages bearing 8 per cent. interest. Of mortgages to this amount it is safe to say that not more than one fourth will be unerthed and listed by the assessors and taxed. But the legal liability to be taxed —the fact that the law provides for the taxingof mortgages—enters largely into an arrangement for loaning money; whatver the rate of interest may be at which a lender is willing to take the mortgage, he invariably adds thereto a certain per cent to which he may be legally liable, and which he may have to pay. Suppose the State collects 2 per cent tax on $25,000 000 of mortgages and the people pay in consideration thereof 2 per cent. additional on $1,000,000,000 of borrowed money, the economic wisdom which maintains such a policy is certain open to serious question. If in addition to this the nonresident mortgagees are taxed in their own state on mortgage due in Minnesota then the borrower must pay, in the shape of increased interest, the tax imposed by other States. The system which permits Connecticut, for example, to collect taxes on money loaned and invested in Minnesota—to collect a tax, in fact, on business done in this State—is carculated to repel capital, and is absurd, unjust, barbaric.

Indian Depredation Claims

Just before adjournment Congress passed an Indian Depredation law that will probably put $50,000,000 in circulation. This law practically removed all restrictions and limitations, and every settler or his heirs can now get pay in full for all losses occasioned by Indians. Henry N. Copp, the well-known lawyer of Washington, D. C., will send free of cost a copy of this law to all who apply to him for the same.

Mineral Operations

BRAINERD, April 14.—Woodsmen and cruisers are very mysterious about a reported mineral discovery a few miles north and east of this city in the vicinity of the mouth of Pine river, where it empties into the Mississippi. The first intimation of anything unusual was a sudden traufer of certain land there to a party said now to have been "put on" just in time. The property is part of certain very bluffy on the Mississippi, just below the mouth of Pine river, and is owned in part by Dorillus Morrison, of Minneapolis The mineral rumor is that an iron ledge crops out on those hills, and that specimens of Hematite ore have been taken from them that assay 68 per cent. Forty acres of the land sold the past week for $250 an acre.

Don't Care What the Newspapers Say.

Have you ever met a man who doesn't care a blank what the nespapers may say of him, good, bad or indifferent? If you have met him, and the meeting chances to have been when the paper has made a little severe—if deserved—mention of him, you need not be told that he is the maddest man out side of a lunatic asylum. His contempt for newspapers is expressed in vehement maledictions and vows of vengeance on the head of the editor.

Possibly you have met him when some thing pleasant has been said of him. He doesn't care for such things, not he; but notwithstanding this indifference you have observed, no doubt, that he reads the landing paragraph over and over, and audibly wonders how the deuce those newspaper fellows manage to get hold of so many facts, and how they happen to know so much about him. He is pleased all over, and gives so much outward expression if his satisfaction that no one would even imagine that he is one of the kindis that don't care a continental blank what the newspapers say.

May Concern Us.

BRAINERD, April 14.—A mysterious railroad survey is in progress, passing this city north and south, that gives rise to belief that a big race is on to tap the country to the north, in the Grand Rapids direction, toward the boundary region. The party is well equipped and is pushing along a couple of miles per day. The line crosses the Northern Pacific, east of this place, near Red Ceder siding, and the stakes as set thus indicate that more than 50 miles of line had been run. The line crosses of the Mississippi near the mouth of Willow, and the party was yesterday on Little Willow, in the Grand Rapids direction. From appearance the line has come from Milaca, or some point east of St. Cloud, and passed along the west shore of Mille Lacks lake. This would indicate that it was a Great Northern line, and heading for a short cut to Winnipeg, perhaps as a forestallment of the Duluth&Winnipeg. It this is true, it is so palpable an invasion of Northern Pacific territory that the fur is sure to fly, and our people would expect to see the Northern Pacific push out immediately for a short line north from this city.

Chrysanthemums.

A plant that anyone can raise and everybody will admire is the Chrysanthemum. It grows rapidly if potted in good soil, and only asks for a good supply of water. What a wonderful variety of Chrysanthemums are now seen in the late autumn! All sizes and colors, and forms of flowers. There never before was such an interest in them as now, and the more we think of them the more beautiful appear the new varieties, as if they came on purpose to be admired and petted. No wonder it is a popular plant, since it lends itself so freely to be shaped and moulded almost as we care to have it. The plants can be trained into the different forms that we may choose, bush-shaped, fan-shaped, single stems, and many other ways. Much as the Chrysanthemum is admired it is not yet at all common. And one reason for this is that it is not well known that one has to take the little plants in early spring and keep them growing freely until time to bloom. The time to begin with them is now, and by sending to VICK the choicest varieties may be had for very little. What a single flower will cost in October will pay for a plant now. A dozen plants taken in hand now, and well cared for until blooming time, will be valued then at dollars where now they are at cents There will be no disappointment in raising Chrysanthemums, Mr. VICK, of Rochester, N. Y., will send plants prepaid at the following low prices:

Standard sorts, 15c. each; $1.50 per doz.
Spot selection, extra 25c. each $2.50 "
Novelties, new this year. 35. each 3.50 "

Miss Bessie Toulouse left this morning for Crookston where she will attend school.

Vick—Michigan.

It has been decided that the $1000.00 prizes offered on Vegetables by JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, will be contested for at the fair to be held at Hillsdale, Michigan Septr. 28-Oct. 2, 1891. At the Illinois State Fair last year over 200,000 people witnessed this exhibit, which filled a tent 60x90 feet, and it was conceded on all sides to be the chief attraction. There were over 1000 entries, coming from every State and Territory in the Union, besides several from the Canadian Provinces.

The managers of the Hillsdale Fair have already arranged for a large extension to be added to the same tent that was used at Peoria, making it 120 feet long, and eveything will be done to make this the largest and grandest exhibition of the kind ever seen. There are four prizes on each of the following eight varieties of Vegetables—first $65, second $30 third $20, fourth $10, making in all $1000, which is very large andliberal:

Cabbage, for the largest and best 3 heads All Seasons.
Celery, Golden Self-blanching, 12 plants, largest and best blanched.
Potatoes, best peck, Vick's Perfection.
Cauliflower, largest and best 3 heads, Vick's Ideal.
Tomatoes, largest and best 12, McCullom's Hybrid.
Musk Melon, largest and best 3 Irondequoit Melons.
Onion, largest and best 12 Danvers Yellow Globe.
Mangel, largest 1 Golden Giant.

The cost to enter for the prize is so small we cannot see how the Messrs. Vick make any profit; for instance, one packet of either of the following will entitle a person to enter the competition.

1 pkt Cabbage, All Seasons .....10 cts
1 pkt celery, Golden self-blanching, 10cts
Potatoe, Vick's Perfection, 1 lb, 30cts.; 3 lbs, $1; peck, 50c; bus., $1.60; bbl, $4
1 pkt Cauliflower, Vick's Ideal.....50cts.
1 pkt Tomato, McCullom's Hybrid, 10cts.
1 pkt Musk Melon, Irondequoit, 15cts.
1 pkt Onion, Danvers Yellow Globe, 5cts
1 pkt Mangel Wurzel, (Beet), Golden Giant, 10cts

Select one or more that you would like to grow and enter for a prize. Be sure and state, in your order, that you intend entering for competition. Write JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, Rochester, N. Y., for Vick's Floral Guide, which will give full particulars.

THE BIRTH OF SNOW.

Athwart high heaven's glistening, golden walls,
Expiring summer's soft and saddened sigh
Sweeps mournfully, and Zion's domeless halls
Hurl to and fro the season's drear, death cry.
Cold from the dying summer god's broad chest,
The breath that bore that last, sad sigh was sent,
And chilled throughout the halls of Heavenly Rest,
And to the scented, balmy air discomfort lent.
Each seraph then the dirge of summer softly sings;
Each angel closer clasps his robes of milky white,
And from the multi-million shapely, shivering wings
Chaste clouds of pearly plumage take their flight;
Down through the soundless, quaking voids they go,
To fall upon the quivering earth afar, as snow.

Improved Passnger Service.

Under the new time schedule of "the North-Western Line," C., St. P., M. & O. Ry., all passenger trains of this line make the trip between St. Paul and Chicago in less than 14 hours.

The Pullman and Wagner Vestibuled Limited, leaving St. Paul at 7:30 p. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13½ hours and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 25 minutes.

The Daylight Express leaving St Paul at 7:45 a. m. makes the trip to Chicago in 13 hours and 50 minutes and from Chicago to St. Paul in 13 hours and 45 minutes.

This is the only line running all its trains in less than 14 hour between St. Paul and Chicago, and while this time is quick trains don't have to run at as high speed to make their times as on other lines, because this is shorter than any other line.

In addition to these facts this is the only line by which connections are assure in Chicago with all fast line trains from Chicago to the East and South in the morning and at night.

Note.—Fares by this line are always as low as by any other.

LOVE AND RAIN.

The rain was beating a rataplan,
Drop—drop—in the street;
And all the way not a woman or man
Or even a copper on beat!
But he and I, in a friendly door.
Were having a friendly chat;
We never had met in our lives before,
But little we recked of that!

The rain swept down like a lancer's charge,
Swish—swish—in the mire;
There was water enough to float a barge,
And never a cab to hire!
And he was excessively kind, you know,
And civilly tried to explain
How the wind—or something—would come and blow
The rain to the clouds again.

The rain was sounding a slow recall,
Drip—drip—in the flood,
When he muffled me up in my fleecy shawl
And guided me through the mud.

* * * * * * * *

That shower has blown by for many a day,
But in fancy it drenches me yet;
And just for the sake of old times we say
That our wedding day, too, shall be wet.

ELIZA'S LEGACY.

THE one light, burning steadfastly, in old John Holden's window seemed one unwinking eye of fire, keeping watch over the lonely meadows and violet-sprinkled woods.

"Dead at last," said old Squire Starworthy. "Well he had an awful long illness. I should think Eliza must be worn out, taking care of him. Are you going over there Will?"

Young Mr. Willoughby Starworthy was drawing on an elegant pair of dove-tinted kid gloves—a slender young man with soft brown hair, and a complexion where cold cream and rose-water had done wonders.

"I thought of it, sir. Eliza must be lonely, and—we've always been pretty good friends, you know."

"I know—I know," said the Squire, winking graciously. "Eliza's growed up as tall and pretty as your mother's white lilies, and folks do say that old John Holden had money enough saved up to buy half the parish.

Mr. Willoughby Starworthy wisely pretended not to hear the last sentence spoken by his sage parent; but then Mr. Willoughby had long ago viewed the question in all his lights and bearings.

"Eliza Holden's a nice girl—I always liked Eliza," pondered the youth, switching a slender stem of hazel across his polished boots; "and then her uncle's property—it's worth considering—it is, upon my word and honor. There she stands at the gate now; but who is that with her? David Jennifer, as I live! Now what brings that tall hulking, brown-faced, farmer fellow here, I'd like to know?

"Mr. Starworthy."

The fresh carnation mounted in Eliza Holden's lovely round cheek as the young exquisite held out his hand, murmuring some choice consolatory phrase, and the shy sparkle of her downcast eyes evinced her unspoken gratification. David Jennifer saw it with a pang. All the patient years of devotion that he had laid at pretty Eliza's feet—all the love of his true heart—were they so little in the balance, as compared with Willoughby Starworthy's handsome face and sentimental whisperings? Ah! even so goes the world, honest David!

"Good-bye, Eliza—I see you've better company," he said, simply holding out his toil-worn hand. "I'll come to your uncle's funeral to-morrow."

And he went down the road, while the steadfast light in the late Mr. Holden's corpse-chamber seemed to watch the two young men with that same unwinking eye of fire.

"I thought you had forgotten me, Mr. Starworthy," Eliza said, with the long black lashes almost touching her crimson cheek.

"Forgotten you, Eliza! My darling, did you suppose that were a possible thing?"

He pressed her hand gently as he spoke, mentally wondering if old John Holden had made a regular will, or left the stringent New-England law to guard his testamentary intentions.

The afternoon sunshine was reflecting the narrow panes of the western windows in squares of rippling gold against the smoke-embrowned wall of the old family room, with its wood-colored wainscoting, and tall clock, and yawing chimney throat—the neighbors in their Sunday clothes were sitting stiffly round in the straight-backed chairs; for old Mr. Holden had been laid among the silent sleepers behind the gray church tower, and the will was to be read at last.

Eliza—the only living relative of the stern old man whose sole remaining hold on earth was but a memory now sat by the window in her simple mourning dress, very quiet and lovely. Mr. Willoughby Starworthy leaned over the back of her chair with an air of calm proprietorship that stung to the quick honest David Jennifer, who stood by the door watching every shade of color that fluttered across pretty Eliza's cheek—every unconscious motion of the rose-red lips.

"'To the Orphan's Fund in this town, one thousand dollars; to the Babtist Church of Carsville, one thousand dollars—to my beloved neice, Eliza Mariana Holden——'"

Willoughby bit his lip to still its convulsive quivering, and a deep red stain came to his cheek, as he watched the lawyer's calm, impassive face.

"'This house and farm, with all the appurtenances, fixtures and furniture thereunto belonging.'"

"Is that all?"

The words broke almost unconsciously from Willoughby Starworthy's dry lips

"All," returned the lawyer, composedly folding up the paper. "Allow me to congratulate you, Miss Eliza—a very nice old place, although somewhat dilapidated for lack of the proper care—and at least thirty acres of excellent arable land!"

"Well, I never!" quoth Mr. Avery. scratching his head, meditatively,

"Folks s'posed John Holden was worth fifty thousand dollars, at the very least!"

"Folks' as you know, my good friend," said the lawyer, affably, "are frequently mistaken in their estimate of other people's wealth."

"And so Lizzy hasn't any property, after all?" said Mrs. Avery, a sharp-eyed little female with a brown wig, and a cinnamon silk bonnet, worn slightly awry. "What will she do, Mrs. Fenton?"

"I don't know," returned the matron addressed, with a keen glance through her owlish silver spectacles; "I suppose she'll marry Squire Starworthy's son."

Mrs. Fenton's voice, sharp and shrill rang through the room like the warning note of a bugle. People looked oddly and uneasily at each other. Eliza colored to the roots of her beautiful silky hair; and Willoughby Starworthy advanced with outstretched hand.

"My dear Miss Holden, it pains me deeply, I do assure you, to be compelled to say adieu under such melancholy circumstances; but I have already out-stayed the time I had alotted to myself. I believe the evening train leaves at five—pray accept my most heartfelt condolence—and—and—if ever I can be of any service to you, do not hesitate to command my services."

He held Eliza's hand a moment in his own, then bowed himself politely out of the place. And the next moment the girl felt a warmer, more earnest clasp closing over her cold fingers, and a voice whispering in her ear, "Don't cry, Eliza—he's a scamp, who never was worthy of the merest glance of your eye. Eliza, darling, I'm only a rough farmer; but I've health and strength, and, please heaven, my wife shall never want. I've loved you since we were children together—will you let me work for you, Eliza?"

For a moment Eliza's head dropped on honest David Kennifer's big shoulder; and, forgetful to his whispered entreaties, she did cry very heartily. And when the little assemblage broke up in the level sunshine of the March afternoon, it was generally understood that pretty Eliza Holden was to marry David Jennifer.

"She couldn't do a better thing." said Mrs. Avery, sagely nodding the brown wig.

"I think Lizzy won't repent the choice she's made."

Eliza did not repent it.

"Sell the old place, if you like, David," said Mrs. Jennifer, pushing the flossy black curls from her pretty forehead, as they stood side by side where the March crocuses had long since faded beneath the richer bloom of June's luxuriant roses; "but keep the furniture, for Uncle John's sake."

"But it's so old-fashioned, Lizzy!"

"That's the reason I like it, David," pleaded the blooming young wife. "No, I won't part with that portion of my legacy, whatever comes to pass."

"You shall not, darling," returned her husband, warmly. "Your will is my law, little wife, remember that!"

Eliza stole her arm softly into David's, and crept closer to his side with an unspoken fondness that was very precious to the rough, strong man.

The scene of our little story shifts—vanishes, like the gliding phantasmagoria of a dream. The gnarled appletrees and shadowy elms of New England give place to the dark forests that bend along the turbid current of the Mississippi—the brown farmhouse is transmogrified into a cozy little log cabin, with patches of deep red chrysanthemums and orange marigolds growing rankly in the rich forest soil, and woodbine clinging in frost-touched wreathes of scarlet around the rough-hewn logs.

Within, it was bright and homelike enough. A great fire roared up the wide clay chimney—a year-old baby lay on a braided rug in the merry sunshine, with two or three bright-eyed little ones noisily engaged in "tending it; and Eliza Jennifer, as pretty as ever, though plumper and more matronly, was laying the round pine table for the evening meal. The round table where Uncle John Holden's mug of hard cider was wont to maintain its evening state—and Uncle John's tall clock ticked busily in the corner; and the baby had just been taken out of the very clumsy wooden cradle that had rocked Eliza herself into the sunny dreams of her own babyhood. For through all the changes and mutations of a western settler's life, David Jennifer had not parted with his blooming wife's legacy.

"We're poor folks," said David stoutly; "and we've wanted money more than once—I won't deny that. But we must be pretty badly off before I'll let the old furniture go."

David was leaning against the chimney-piece on this particular October night, watching his wife's movements with as pleased a pride as if he had been married ten days instead of ten years, when suddenly Eliza paused.

"Davie! didn't I hear a tap at the door?"

David strode across the floor and opened the door. Mrs. Jennifer was right. A tall, lank traveler stood without, carrying a very consumptive little carpet-bag.

"Could I be accomodated for the night, sir? I've lost my way trying to find a short cut between Parhampton and Roscius, and——"

"Walk in. stranger—walk in," said David, with hearty hospitality. "There's plenty of——Why. bless my soul, it's Will Starworthy! Eliza! wife! it's Squire Starworthy's son!"

Apparently the guilty flush that had died Willoughby Starworthy's face on the memorable March afternoon of ten years ago had not yet faded out; but Eliza Jennifer, secure in her bright, matronly happiness, greeted him with smiling welcome.

"Why, who would have thought of seeing you here. Mr. Starworthy?" she asked, blithely.

"Well," returned that gentleman, whose habiliments were a little rusty, and his linen a little frayed; and his hat not so fresh as it had been, "times are pretty hard down East, and I've an expensive family, and—and—I thought I might better myself out here. But I must confess I haven't found the road to fortune yet."

As he spoke, he looked at Mrs. Jennifer's velvety brown eyes, and round cheeks, and raven black hair, and thought—rather disparagingly, it must be owned—of his own angular, thin-lipped helpmate at home.

"Perhaps I should have done better to marry Eliza Holden, after all," he thought within himself.

Nor did he see fit to alter his opinion when the simple evening meal was over, and Eliza sat with her beautiful baby in her arms, and her little one playing round her knees, while David looked on as triumphantly as if he knew that his old rival was envying him.

"That's right, David," said the lovely young matron; "put on a large log, for——"

The sentence was terminated in a hysterical scream; for as the heavy mass of gnarled chesnut thundered down on the hearth with a crash, the old clock in the corner reeled, staggered, and fell.

Fell across the clumsy cradle, shivering it into crushed and shapeless pieces. Instinctively the little circle round the fire sprang up, huddling close together.

"Oh, David!" ejaculated Mrs. Jennifer— "the clock—Uncle John's clock!"

"And the cradle, too!" groaned David, as, with Mr. Starworthy's aid, he slowly upreared the disjointed skeleton of the old clock, whose worn hands had travelled their last circlet, and began to gather up the splintered fragments of the stained cherry cradle.

"Turn it on its side, squire," he said. "Lucky that Eliza had the baby on her lap, wasn't it? Here, I'll do it. Hallo! what—the—mischief—does all this mean?"

For, as he turned the heavy wood on its side, there was a jingling as if every rusty nail had turned into a chime of tiny bells—a rain of tarnished gold pieces on the floor, from between the board into which the massive rockers were screwed and that which formed the bottom of the cradle, each wrapped in a crumpled banknote to deaden its tinkle!

"I'm wide awake, ain't I—and this isn't a dream!" questioned David Jennifer, as, kneeling on one knee on the floor, he stared round at the amazed faces of the group beyond. "Eliza, it's your Uncle John's legacy come at last! We're rich, my girl—we're rich! And to think how we've rocked the cradle these ten years, and never found it out!"

David Jennifer was right. For ten years the forty thousand dollars had swayed back and forth, to the sound of Eliza's low cradle songs, and made no sign that it existed. Now the spell was broken.

Willoughby Starworthy glared from the heaped-up wealth toward Eliza Jennifer with a face as baffled and wrathful as that of Tantalus might have been. Oh, blind, blind! Oh, deceived—duped at last!

Well was it that old John Holden slept quietly under the shadow of the gray church spire, unconscious of praise or blame. Willoughby Starworthy could almost have dragged him from the grave to wreak his vengeance on the senseless bones that no longer had aught in common with the world above.

Willoughby Starworthy—poor, struggling, mated with a sharp-faced shrew! David Jennifer—married to the only woman his rival had ever really cared for, with a fortune at his command!

"Truly," thought the dilapidated young squire, "there is such a thing as even-handed justice in this world!"

The mission of John Holden's clock was accomplished now. It had ticked softly on until the hour had come which the strange old man had perhaps anticipated upon his death-bed; and now it was silent forever.

Eliza had come into her legacy at last!

Rats Can Climb Cables.

Did you know that a rat is a good acrobat? No? Well, it is, as an incident which occurred in a well known business house the other night will prove. There is an elevator in the establishment, suspended by a wire cable an inch in diameter. One night last week, while the employes of the place were at work, their attention was attracted by a moving object on the cable. An examination showed it to be a rat rapidly making its way up from the basement to the top floor by the most industrious "shinning."

Some time ago one of the men about the place reported that he had seen a rat working its way up the cable, but he was laughed to scorn by his incredulous associates, but the truth of the operation of last week was established in the mouths of two or three witnesses, so that it cannot be successfully disputed.—Youngstown Telegram.

A Georgia Teacher's Trials.

"I tried, not long ago to impress upon my pupils the necessity of acquiring knowledge. You must make yourself familiar with books,' I said; "in fact you must swallow books.' Of course, I spoke figuratively; but that night the father of one of my pupils called to see me in great distress. "Tom he gasped, 'have done swallowed a book, an' I'm feared he gwine choke to death! Yo' better come 'n' fish it out o' him!" I went in a hurry. Tom, a poor fellow too ignorant to be anything but a literal soul, had chewed up and swallowed part of a Webster's primary dictionary. I sent for a doctor, and it required two hours of his most skillful work to save Tom's life. Since then I have been very careful not to speak figuratively when advising my pupils to acquire knowledge." — Atlanta Constitution.

ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

Not That He Loved Her Less, but He Loved His Habits More.

I had become strangely interested in the old guide. A silent man with stalwart frame, thick gray-hair, and firmly-set lips, whose smile intensified rather than lighted the pensive sadness of his face. His words were few, and it was his custom when not engaged in active duty about the camp to sit aside and smoke his pipe while his thoughts seemed to be far away.

I had managed to secure enough of the old man's confidence to obtain a friendly word from him now and then, and I determined, if possible, to hear the story which I was sure he could tell.

With this object in view, I pleaded surfeit of sport one day, and remained at the camp when all the others. save the old guide, had gone out with rods and guns.

I succeeded in striking up a conversation, and with infinite tact and much patience I had induced him to speak of personal matters, and at last I asked him squarely if he had ever loved a woman.

The old man sat with his arms resting on his knees, his pipe in his hand, and his eyes gazing far away. He cleared his throat, and in the stillness of the forest he related this brief story:

"I did love a woman once," he said. "an' I waited on her stiddy for a long time. I was a free, wild chap them days, an', though she loved me as much as I loved her, her folks kep' naggin' at her to give me up. I was rough, they said, an' not fit to marry a girl like her.

"Well, it went on that way, as I say, for a long spell; in fact 'till I begun to hint that it was about time we two came to a definite understandin', an' I guess she felt the same. I was seein' her home from a little sociable one night—lovely night; I remember jest how we walked along in the moonlight till we got pretty nigh to her house, an' then she turned to me kind o' sudden like and says, says she, 'Jim, I've been wantin' to ask you a few questions for a long time."

"Her voice was kind o' trembly, an' I knowed somethin' was comin'.

"'Well,' I says, 'whatever you may ask, you'll get straight true answers, anyway.'

"'I thank ye for that, Jim,' says she, an' then after a minute she says: 'Jim, you know my folks don't like yer.'

"'Most assuredly they don't,' I says.

"After a little while she says:

"'They say you smoke.'

"'I do,' says I.

"We walked on a few steps, an' then she says:

"'They say you chew tobaccer.'

"'They're right,' I says. 'I chew tobaccer.'

"'An' they say Jim,' says she, 'that you drink.'

"'I do,' says I, 'when I feel like it.'

"'They say you swear, too,' says she.

"'Yes,' I says, 'vigorously, on occasion.'

"'Well,' says she kind o' quick. 'I don't know as I'd orter marry a man with all them 'complishments.'

"'Then,' says I, 'you'll have to look further, cause I've got 'em, an' I turned 'round and went home, an' I never called on her agin, 'though she'd had me in a minute, I knew she would, an' be'n glad to git me.'

The old man's pipe was in his mouth, and that pensive smile was on his face.

"Is that all?" I asked.

"That's all," he replied.—Detroit Free Press.

Street Scenes In the Far East.

Everybody has heard about the dogs and donkeys of Oriental cities, how dogs roam about without owners, and how the donkeys bear patiently their many burdens and get only scanty thanks in return. But all Eastern streets abound in novel and fascinating sights—bright gowns, tiny shops, veiled women wearing wooden sandals, gaunt camels swaying along with rude bells tinkling. From the first the energetic peddlers are conspicuous. If the traveler approaches the Levant by way of Constantinople he plunges at once into their favorite haunts. The first night in this great historic city will not be forgotten, for the howling of the hungary street dogs, is hardly silenced before the coming of daylight brings out a multitude of these noisy vendors, and then sleep is out of the question. One would think they were trying to arouse people in the next street, to have them all ready for making purchases. Some are shouting in Turkish and some in Greek, advertising the excellence of the good things that they have in the high baskets on their backs or on diminutive mouse-colored donkeys. We look down from the hotel window and watch them as they pass along or stop for bargaining. There are loads of tempting white grapes, rosy peaches, and a profusion of fresh vegetables evidently just in from the gardens along the Bosphorus, or those bordering the Sweet Waters beyond the Golden Horn. In all the towns along the Asia Minor coasts these scenes are repeated, with perhaps a trifle less noise. At Smyrna in early Autumn, the mina swarms with sellers of the luscious sugar-melons, and a little earlier all the ports of the Greek Archipelago echo with "Sweet, fresh figs!"—Frank Stiles Woodruff in April St. Nicholas.

Benevolent.

Even the kindest-hearted of us sometimes say things that, without explanation, sounds rather queer,

It was one of the best of women who said to her husband. "What a pity it is that none of our neighbors are sick now!"

"Why?" was the surprised query.

"Because, if they were, I could send them some of this nice jelly," was the complancent answer.—Youth's Companion.

GEORGE'S SOAP BUBBLE.

The Boss Liar Tells of a Curiosity Money Couldn't Buy.

A party of gentlemen were enjoying an after-dinner cigar and talking about Atlanta men who tell good stories and crack good jokes.

The conversation was enlivened by choice quotations, by way of illustration, says a writer in the Atlanta Constitution.

And thereon hangs this tale.

Dr. Sid Holland furnished an entertaining subject of illustration. One of the stories on him ran thusly:

Two gentlemen were whiling away the time en route from West End to Atlanta on the hay-burner, by seeing which could tell the biggest lie. At one of the sidings, where the mules were allowed an extra long rest, Dr. Holland got aboard.

"Howdy, Sid," said the gentlemen. We're seeing which can tell the biggest yarn. Won't you take a hand?"

"I'm a truthful man myself," replied the doctor.

"Well, we'll put the dinner on it. The man who gets left on the story must set 'em up."

It was agreed, and as luck would have it, Sid, led off with the first tale.

"I've got a relic out home that beats the world," he began. "It's an heirloom in the family and money wouldn't buy it. I've been offered fortunes for it, but always refused to part with the precious thing.

"Talk about relics, it's different from anything I ever heard of. I—".

"Well, what is it?" asked one of the gentlemen, both becoming worked up at the doctor's description.

"I heard of the fellow who had a piece of Eve's fall dress, and about the man who toted a chip off Adam's tombstone in his pocket, but mine tops 'em all."

Both gentleman were worked up to the highest pitch of expectancy by the time the doctor reached the climax.

"But what is it, what is it?" they exclaimed, impatiently, as he paused to brush a sunbeam off his shirt front.

"What is it?"

"A soap bubble George Washington blew when he was a boy."

The two gentlemen looked at each other, glanced up at the doctor, then changed the subject.

OLD HOLIDAYS.

A Falling-off In the Observance of Some Holidays.

A curious phase of the development of society is presented by the decay of certain holidays which once were observed with faithfullness and interest, but which have now become either merely names or empty days of historical association. For many years it has been the costom to speak of Fast Day as a time of especial disregard and to call New England people to account for its evident diversion from its first intentions. But Fast Day is no more peculiar in its lapse from popular enthusiasm than many holidays once distinguished with the people's interest and respect and now merely names upon the calendar. May Day was once a time of great importance and signifiance to all English-speaking people, and its celebration was elaborate and public. It inspired some of the most charming poetry in our literature and was by all means the great spring festival. Its loss from actual observance is an interesting fact of history. When it was believed that witches and fairies held high carnival on the 31st of October, Hallow E'en inspired serious festivites; many customs both local and general in England, lived for a time in the New World in various holidays and then fell into disuse. Of peculiarly American holidays, Washington's Birthday and Fast Day, continue to be set aside for remembrance, although they are not marked by especial observance, and have a use chiefly in recalling interesting historical facts and in affording a brief recess from everyday labor.—Boston Journal.

Hygiene.

It is useful to have a note of the first appearance of a word in our language. At the end or the first volume of the third edition of Southey's "Letters Written During a Journey in Spain" occurs a translation of the "Rules of the Royal College of Surgery at Madrid, founded by Carlos III., 1787." Here we find that the second professorship "shall be of Physiology and Hygiene,"," (page 303.) To this word the following note is attached: "I do not understand this word; perhaps it means the doctrine of health." Southey was a great reader, and had a verbal memory to be envied. It is obvious that he had never met with hygiene before.—Notes and Queries.

THE NORTHWEST.

A Summary of the Important Events of the Week in the Northwestern States.

Minnesota, Wisconsin, Iowa, North and South Dakota News in a Nutshell.

MINNESOTA.

Edwin S. Bronson and Miss Inez Danforth were married at Stillwater.

The residence of J. W. Wheeler, a prominent farmer, residing near Stillwater, burned. Loss, $1,500; insurance, 600.

The Brainard fire department has re-elected Dan McIntosh as chief for the ensuing year.

Bishop Gilbert of St. Paul confirmed a class in the Episcopal church at Northfield, the other day.

C. F. Spencer of Montevideo has purchased the Atwater Press and has assumed charge of the paper.

Chief of Police O. McFall of Anoka, has resigned his position and accepted one as yard master in the prison at Stillwater.

Mrs. M. E. Capron has filed formal notice of a suit against the city of Stillwater for $5,000 damages, for injury received by tripping and falling on a defective sidewalk.

The funeral of August F. Poehler, of Henderson was conducted under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, assisted by the Sons of Herman.

The grippe is prevalent in Rochester and Olmsted county to an alarming degree. Several leading citizens are seriously ill, and the disease proved fatal in the case of Owen McNiff, an old citizen.

Charles Reardon a convict at the state prison, died of pneumonia. Reardon was serving a three year's sentence for assault in the second degree. He was sentenced from Winona, Oct. 5, 1889.

Mrs. Samuel Burkhardt, a resident of Wabasha since 1855, died at her home recently of old age, being in her ninety-second year. She was the mother of Senator Henry Burkhardt of Wabasha.

Work has been commenced on the new opera house at Detroit, just two weeks from the date of the fire which destroyed the old one. Contractor John L. Bjorkquist has the job for $18,200. He has a large crew of men at work.

The district court has convened at Glenwood. There is considerable excitement owing to the grand jury investigations as to liquor being sold without license, some forty witnesses having been summoned to appear and testify.

District court convented at Waseca to try the case of the county against the bondsmen of Charles McKenna, defaulting county treasurer. It will be remembered that McKenna decamped, leaving the county several thousand short, and the country is endeavoring to get it from his bondsmen.

E. Kendall, Belle Plaine's city justice, drove to the Minnesota river to water his team. It being very high and the ice was moving freely. It is supposed the horses made a rush to turn around, but got tangled. They were found floundering in the mud and water nearly perished from cold, but the old gentleman could not be found.

The organization of the lumbermen's union was prefected at Stillwater. The union aims at preventing a 10 per cent discount of time checks when cashed in the spring, and provides a sick and death benefit to members. A petition is being prepared asking mill owners to cut down the number of hours for a day's work from 11 to 10.

John Sheldon of High Forest was driving over the old territorial bridge near Salem, which was submerged to the depth of a foot by high water, when, becoming frightened, his team backed off from the bridge into the Zumbro river, throwing him underneath the wagon box. The team valued at $400, was drowned, and Mr. Sheldon barely managed to save his own life.

The Goodhue County Farmers' club, in order to ascertain fully the advantages offered here for the successful cultivation of sugar beets, has offered a series of prizes to those in this country who engage in this culture for experimental purposes. A large number have already signified their intention of doing so, and it is expected that more will follow their example.

The Red River presbytery met at Warren. James Compton was elected moderator. Dr. George Pollock of Fergus Falls was elected delegate to the general assembly, which meets in Detroit, Mich., in May. Rev. J. H. Johnson of Western was elected alternate. A. P. Frank of Warren was elected lay delegate and James Compton alternate. An overture was sent to the general assembly asking it to examine into the heterodoxy of Prof. Buggs.

There is great disappointment by Republican politicians at Brainerd over the attempt to defeat the Brainerd city charter amendments that had been put through the legislature by Representatives Stivers and Hemstead. Gov. Merriam was labored with to veto the charter but in vain. The delegation that went from here for that purpose returned to-day, saying the governor could not be moved to interfere. The Democrats and Knights of Labor score quite a victory by the charges secured.

At the municipal election for the city of Wabasha, the citizens' ticket was elected without opposition. The newly elected officers are as follows: Mayor, Simon E. Drury; recorder, R. E. Stearns; treasurer, M. A. Odink; assessor, R. E. Sterns; justice, R. E. Stearns; alderman First ward, C. C. Hirschy; alderman Second ward, Henry Schwedes; alderman Third ward, C. J. Haines; constable First ward, Robert McClarney; constable Second ward, Robert Whiting; constable Third ward, Charles Greenwood.

NORTH DAKOTA.

At the city election at Jamestown Mayor Fuller and Treasurer Webster were re-elected. George Purchase was elected magistrate, and Alfred Steele, Dan Buckley, James Hayes and W. H. Fletcher, aldermen.

Manager Gottschalk of the Fargo opera house, was tried on the charge of assaulting Walter Doheny of Grand Forks, and acquitted. The trouble grew out of Doheny getting the wrong seat and refusing to give it up.

Fire totally destroyed Peoples & Shield's livery stable and contents at Mandan. Thirteen horses were cremated. Racek's harness shop, the adjoining building, was a total loss. He saved about half his stock. Both parties are insured.

Seeding is well under way in the vicinity of Church's Ferry especially on the high land. The ground is thoroughly moist to the depth of four feet. Many farmers who spent the winter elsewhere have returned more fully satisfied with this country than ever before.

At a largely attended mass meeting held at Bismarck it was resolved to ask ex-Senator Pierce to urge upon the secretary of war the importance of retaining at Bismarck the headquarters of the engineer in charge of the improvements on the upper Missouri.

Papers were served on representatives of J. J. Hill at Fargo, to show cause why a proxy should not be given to Edwards to vote the stock held by Hill at the election of directors, as ordered by the court. It is thought that this will further complicate what already seems a fifteen puzzle to those seeking control of the Argus.

A larger acreage of wheat will be sown this year than ever in the vicinity of Mandan, and already a good deal has been done in this direction. In some parts of this country the farmers sowed their wheat in January and some in the fall. The ground is now in excellent condition, moist and in good shape to work.

Public Examiner Wallace has issued a circular notifying any man whom it may concern, that after April 20 all violators of the state banking law will be dealt with according to law. Some private bankers, in order to evade assessment for 1891 taxes, are neglecting to comply with section 27, requiring incorporation, and the circular is directed against them.

A Minto special says: The weather is delightful now. There has been plenty of moisture and a great deal of mud this spring. This, in connection with the fact that the ground was thoroughly soaked last fall, will put the soil in the best possible condition for a crop. Seeding will begin two or three weeks later than last season, but the prospects of a good crop are better for that. The plowed fields are drying off fast under a hot sun and warm wind. It is thought some farmers will commence seeding this week.

Col. E. S. Nettleton, engineer in charge of the government irrigation investigation in the plain region, was at Jamestown consulting with Senator Casey and made a preliminary survey of the season's work. He has gone south. An irrigation station for the purpose of determining what can be done will be established here. Some investigations will be made this year with a view to ascertaining the practicability of irrigating the Jim river valley from the Missouri. The plan is thought to be feasible if the Missouri is tapped somewhere to the north. Col. Nettleton stated that from May 15 to Oct. 1, the greater part of the time of the commission would be spent in the Dakotas.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mitchell's brick manufactory has been removed to Spencer, Ia.

Canton citizens are working to secure a flouring mill.

Miner county is short $1,178.65 on last year's seed grain accounts.

The Odd Fellows of Olivet have arranged to at once erect a two story brick building 22x50.

Reports from various parts of the state indicate improvements in prices of land, due to irrigation agitation.

The town of Bryant, Hamlin county, is offering a bonus for a good attorney to locate there.

Citizens of Parker are taking the preliminary steps toward building an opera house.

A large amount of scientific apparatus has been received from Philadelphia for the use of Watertown schools,

A spring has been discovered at Sturgis, the water of which will cause hair to grow on the baldest of heads.

The citizens of Pierre have been holding a mass convention to urge the resumption of work on the Aberdeen-Pierre railroad.

John Whitmayer recently disposed of three quarter sections of land ten miles northwest of Scotland for $4,100.

Citizens of Sanborn county are kicking because the commissioners do not publish the reports of their proceedings in full.

Wm. Manger, with the aid of one man, cut 18,000 feet of saw logs and 200 cords of stove wood on the Missouri near Elk Point during the past winter.

In the circuit court at Huron, Judge Campbell overruled the motion for a new trial for Fred Hundley, found guilty of manslaughter in the first degree.

Frank Schwartz, in digging a well midway between Bangor and Bowdle, Walworth county, found gold of placer character about nine feet below the surface in gravel and cement.

State's Attorney E. B. Karns has instituted suit against Spink County for the collection of his salary. The county board cut his salary from $1,000 to $700 since his election and he sues for the former amount.

State Engineer Baldwin has already located twelve artesian wells and has applications for twenty more. He believes there will be 100 artesian wells put down this year under the Melville law.

Pierre laborers are not satisfied with the wages paid them and a general strike is contemplated. They claim the necessaries of life are not in proportion to their salaries. The Journal thinks the move unwise.

Frank Grover, a farmer living three miles north of Faulkton, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a shotgun. Dependency is supposed to be the cause of the act. He leaves a widow and two small children.

Fred Hundley was sentenced to fourteen years at hard labor in the penitentiary. On June 5 last, Fred and his father, Hon. Z. T. Hundley, were putting down a carpet when they got into a difficulty over some trivial matter and Fred shot his father dead. Deceased at the time was editor o the Herald-Democrat and chairman of the state Democratic central committee.

Charles H. Herrick, a young unmarried farmer of Vermont City, Edmunds county, committed suicide in his shack, by cutting his throat with a jack knife. In February last Herrick was arrested and bound over on the charge of attempting to defraud the government by affixing a canceled 2-cent stamp to a letter and mailing same. It is believed this trouble unbalanced his mind, and that while temporarily insane he took his life. None of Herrick's neighbors believes that he knowingly perpetrated the offense.

Prof. Albert E. Foster of Sioux Falls has been arrested on the charge of bigamy. The charges against him are that in Hamilton, Ont., he married a young lady by the name of Carrie Windom. Two years afterward he married a lady in Peru, Ind., who is known as Florence No. 2. In 1889 he appeared in Newport, Ky., where he gained entrance to the best circles, and married the daughter of Cephas Knight, a prominent and wealthy merchant. Last December he came to Sioux Falls. His arrest was caused by the father of No. 3. A requisition has been applied for and he will be taken to Newport, Ky., for trial.

WISCONSIN:

Three children are drowned at Birch Lake Wisconsin.

The village of Shrocton, Wis., has been almost totally destroyed by fire. Total loss, $30,000.

The farm residence of John McKee, near Delavan, was burned with most of its contents.

Sammy Clemmons, a son of Capt. Clemmons, of Berlin, is believed to have perished in a snow-slide in Idaho.

The Indian delegation left Black River Falls for Washington to try to secure a part of the principal of their trust fund.

A porcupine that weighed above twenty-five pounds was killed in Janesville. Its quills were from 1½ to 3 inches long.

Mrs. Timothy Wooden, a pioneer resident at Grafton, died at Englewood, Ill., where she had been residing with her daughter.

Dr. Wm. F. Smith, the Chicago oculist who died recently, was, it is said, to have been married to Miss Lizzie Merrill, of Manitowoc.

The German Reformed church building at Waukesha, formerly occupied by Carroll college is being torn down to make way for a new structure.

Reports from all over the state indicates that the ground is in good condition and that farm work is in full blast. Much small grain has already been sown.

George A. Barry of Eau Claire received his commission as register of the United States land office, succeeding L. P. Hotchkiss, resigned.

The Northwestern Lumber company, of Eau Claire, opened the sawing season recently by starting its Porterville mills. Other mills will start early.

The thorne presented at St. Paul's Episcopal cathedral at Fond du Lac is in place. It is richly carved, is 17 feet high and cost the donor, Mrs. E. C. Davis, of Boston, about $1,200.

The bondsmen of ex-County Treasurer Sever Serley of Chippewa Falls paid $15,000 the amount at which they compromised with the county board in full settlement. Serley will be tried for embezzlement next month.

Officers and employes of the Southern Minnesota division of the Milwaukee are at La Crosse looking for houses. It is settled that the entire plant, shops as well as general offices, will be moved here. La Crosse business men have urged the removal of the offices as a matter of business convenience, but never asked more than that. They are very much pleased with the promised change.

About 325 persons are now in the line of filers at the land office, at Ashland. An attempt was made and was successful in one instance to drug the guards, stationed by those in line to keep out infringers. A bottle of whisky containing some drug was offered them. Only one of the guards took a drink, and he was soon unconscious. The men feel very indignant over the affair, and are now fully confirmed in their belief that a rush will be made on them before the 17th.

The Winnebagos, after nearly two weeks of delay and contention, and after agreeing on and then disagreeing on at least a dozen different delegations, at last sent the following delegates to Washington: Big Hawk, Red Cloud, Green Cloud, Jim Eagle and John Staca. The financial trouble was settled and the matter will be dropped. From what can be learned the mission will be fruitless so far as receiving aid beyond the interest on their trust fund, which amounts to about $27,000 annually. That the Indians are sorely in need of more aid is beyond any doubt, but such aid will have to come through congressional enactment, which will not be possible until the next congress assembles.

IOWA.

Cattle in the vicinity of Sioux City are dying in great numbers for want of hay. The short crop of last year is exhausted, and cattle can be bought for a mere song.

At Davenport, the bell clothing store was burned out early. It was owned by Max Weber of Chicago. A stock of shoes owned by E. E. Murray & Co. was also destroyed. Loss, $35,000; fully insured.

A sale of 135 lots for the benefit of the German English college took place at Charles City. The premises bid upon that number amounted to $3,459, or nearly $25 per lot. The sale was then adjourned to April 18, when the balance of the lots will be sold. Work is expected to commence upon the college buildings shortly.

It is officially given out that the warehouses and other property of the St. Louis & St. Paul Packet company, between and including St. Louis and Davenport, together with the packet Gem City, have been sold to the Diamond Jo line. This means the final abandonment of the upper Mississippi river by the St. Paul line as the only seaworthy boat remaining in its possession is the St. Paul, which will probably be leased by the Diamond Jo line.

Adolph Arndt, a farmer living in Newark township, near Fort Dodge was arrested on information of a river land squatter. This is a revival of the celebrated river land trouble. Arndt purchased land from which the informant had been evicted. The latter now causes his arrest as the matter is still pending in the courts, and until decided, squatters will probably be entitled to hold the land.

There was great excitement in Dubuque over the resignation of Alderman Babcock, of the Second ward, who had previously stated that he would take this course if Dennis Smith, independent candidate in First ward, was elected alderman. Mr. Babcock is an Englishman, landlord of the Merchant's Hotel and a democrat. Smith is an Irishman, also a democrat, and the Irish people are indignant over the action of Ald. Babcock.

Beer and whisky are still flowing freely over the bars of the thirty saloons recently enjoined through the efforts of the state temperance alliance in Webster county. The decrees have been issued, but Sheriff Adams has refused to serve the papers unless the fees are paid in advance. State's Attorney Baker, of the Alliance, has threatened the sheriff with criminal proceedings for refusal to perform his duties if he persists in refusing to serve like injunctions. He has persisted, and matters are now at a standstill.

"August Flower"

I had been troubled five months with Dyspepsia. The doctors told me it was chronic. I had a fullness after eating and a heavy load in the pit of my stomach. I suffered frequently from a Water Brash of clear matter. Sometimes a deathly Sickness at the Stomach would overtake me. Then again I would have the terrible pains of Wind Colic. At such times I would try to belch and could not. I was working then for Thomas McHenry, Druggist, Cor. Irwin and Western Ave., Allegheny City, Pa., in whose employ I had been for seven years. Finally I used August Flower, and after using just one bottle for two weeks, was entirely relieved of all the trouble. I can now eat things I dared not touch before. I would like to refer you to Mr. McHenry, for whom I worked, who knows all about my condition, and from whom I bought the medicine. I live with my wife and family at 39 James St., Allegheny City, Pa. Journalistic Enterprise in Paris.

Most new inventions especially journalistic inventions come from America; but it is to the versatile Parisians that the credit of the very latest thing in journalism is due. The Compagnie Generale des Voltures is on the point of starting a paper, entitled Paris-Voitures, which is orignal in more ways than one. Noisy news-vendors are to give way to automatic machines. Every cab is to be furnished with one of these; you put a 10-centime piece in the slot and you draw out a Paris-Voitures. The paper is to contain the bills of the theatres, illustrated notes, and "tips" for the races. As if this were not sufficient inducement to the ordinary boulevardier to make the double investment in the cab and the paper for the company's benefit, the happy purchase of the paper is insured against any accident that may happen in the course of the drive. This device is not now heard of for the first time, but it may prove reassuring to the cautious foreigner, who is alarmed at the reckless driving of the Paris John. By a purely orignal contrivance the holder of a Paris-Voitures is to be entitled to a discount of 10 per cent. at the principal shops mentioned in the paper. Lastly, in the spirit of true utilitarian philosophy, business is to be combined with philanthropy, the automatic machine company which undertakes the distribution promising to devote 10 per cent. of its profits to founding a cabmen's refuge.—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Mistake Somewhere.

"Got fine boy here," telegraphed Spriggins to his wife's mother, after the arrival of his first son and heir.

Six hours later he was surprised to see his mother-in-law walk into his office, tearful-eyed and sad of face.

"O, Joseph," she gasped, "isn't it too perfectly dreadful?"

"Dreadful? I think it's grand!" said Spriggins, in the vaulting pride of young fatherhood.

"O, Joseph! How can you say so! Is Mamie alive?"

"Why, certainly, and doing splendidly." "I'm surprised to hear it: I supposed I'd find the poor girl dead! It's the awfulest thing I ever heard of!"

"Why," said Spriggins, resentfully, "we thought you'd be tickled to death."

"Tickled? I've cried ever since I got the telegram. I wonder you can be so calm, and I'd like to know what poor Mamie is to do! Oh it is awful! I just sat with that telegram on my lap and cried all the way here!"

The telegram fell from her trembling hand as she spoke. Spriggins picked it up and read:

Prince of Meissonier's Pictures.

Meissonier had the distinction of obtaining the highest price per square inch for his work which has ever been obtained; even the £30,000 paid for the "Angelus" of Millet sinks into insignificance before the sums which, not once but a dozen times, were paid for his canvases. Even the reproductions of his works have followed suit, and the proofs of one only just issued are selling at sixty guineas apiece. As a sample of the prices obtained, M. Delahante, who bought Meissonier's picture "1814," depicting the retreat of Napoleon's army from Moscow, paid £3,600 for the work, and it was ultimately bought by M. Chauchard for £34,000. The millionaire American bought pictures of Meissonier at his own price—sometimes £12,000—and a number of his most famous works are on this side of the Atlantic.

No Soap.

It is stated that soap in India is regarded almost in the light of a natural curiosity, for it is rarely if ever to be obtained of a shopkeeper there. Of course it is sold in the largest towns; but the amount used by the natives must be very small, seeing that the total consumption of soap in India last year was only 5,000 tons. This means that the amount used by each person for the year was considerably less than one ounce.—Chamber's Journal.

Official Paper of the City.

JAS. MEEHAN, JR. Editor and Prop.

Now that the senators have been robbing the people at the rate of five dollars per day during the long winter days, they have, at the opening of spring, commenced to steal senate files.

Senator Keller never did a more noble act than when he introduced the resolution to expell John W. Arctander from the floor of the senate. A man who would lobby in the interests of the Employers' Liability act is either a knave of a hired scoundrel.

President Harrison's trip across the continent may redound to his political benefit and '92 chances, but it smacks too much of a political tour. Presidential junketing tours have been disastrous of late—people, at sight of the man they voted for, become disgusted.

Senator Hompe got a retrenchmen hump on himself and voted for monopoly when Senator Leavitt's printing resolution was postponed indefinitely. Hompe is desirous of going to congress when the Kittle has boiled away. It would be well for the people of this district to educate the people concerning this Judas. Hompe upholding a monopoly and trying to pose as a representative of the farming classes. Our own gasoon—vote with him.

Judging from the present outlook the acreage seeded this year will far surpass that of '90 There is not only activity among the regular farmers who along with their own holdings haye leased as much land as their help will enable them to cultivate, but business men and others who can possibly secure the required help are speculating on the crop of this season, feeling confident that the moisture in the ground assures a good and bountiful crop.

How He Earned the Money.

"There is more in the old saying, 'A friend at court.' than many people imagine," remarked a physician who is now enjoying a lucrative practice in this city. "At least I have found it so. Let me give you a bit of personal experience. I 'studied medicine' under difficulties, and was compelled to resort to pretty much every expedient in the shape of employment to keep my head above water while a student and meet my tuition fees. But I got through at last, only to find myself, however, confronted with the necessity of paying a lump sum bordering close upon $100 for the expenses of graduation. What to do I was at a loss to determine. But eventually a bright idea struck me.

"I had a friend who was an officer in one of the courts. I went to him, stated my dilemma, and asked him to get me summoned as a juryman. He did so, and for nearly two months I did duty in that capacity. How it was managed I did not inquire, nor do I know to this day, but the fact remains that my services were in constant demand. My name was drawn with a regularity that would have been monotonous had it not been that each day's jury duty brought me two dollars nearer the amount I was in need of and was working for. When I gave up the job I had something over and above the sum I required, and my future was assured. 'Trial by jury' is a great institution."—New York Times.

Mulcting Wagner.

Wagner, when a young man, wrote a sonata which had a fair success, but in after life he made every effort to suppress it. Going to the publisher he said: "Have you any copies of that miserable thing still unsold?" "Yes," was the reply, "I have quite a number of them in stock." "Send them to me at once, with a bill," said the composer. A thousand copies were soon afterward delivered at his door. The bill was a big one, but it was paid, somewhat grudgingly, and Wagner thought he had done with the thing. What was his surprise, then, at receiving two or three months later on another consignment, this time of five hundred copies.

"I thought you had only a thousand of these things," he protested. "That was all I had in stock," explained the dealer; "but these have been returned by my agents, to whom I wrote that you wished to have the sonata suppressed." Wagner winced; but there was nothing for it but to pay the bill. And thereafter, whenever business was dull with this crafty publisher, a few hundred copies of the sonata would be struck off on shop worn paper, and delivered at the composer's door, with a memorandum to the effect that they had just come back from remote places where they had been sent for sale.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Could Prove It Too.

"During the war," said Andy, "father, who was a conscript physician, came across a half witted young fellow named Garrett Hendrix. Dr. Calhoun examined him and found that he would not do to enlist. So he gave him a certificate and sent him back to the farm to do what he could toward help making a crop.

"By and by another conscript officer came along and got hold of the youth.

"'Come along to town with me,' said the officer. 'You'll have to be enlisted in the army.'

"''Tain't no use'n takin' me, cap'n,' said the boy.

"'Come along, I say.'

"''Tain't no use'n takin' me; I can't serve. I'm er fool, an' I've got the papers to prove hit.'"—Atlanta Constitution.

SECRETS OF VOUDOO.

THE SACRED RITES HAVE BEEN WITNESSED BY WHITES.

Great Secrecy Is Maintained by the Negroes in the Performance of the Practices Relating to the Superstition. Where Voudooism Is Practiced.

The superstitions more or less current among the negroes of Louisiana, under the general name of voudoo, are without doubt relics of savagery brought by the ancestors of the civilized negroes from Africa. The voudoo ceremonial has never been described in detail by any writer on the subject, because, for the most part, there is no regular routine or form of the rites, which, whatever they may have been in the beginning, have doubtless become confused and mingled with various superstitious customs, some of which were derived from the whites themselves, and were preserved from the mediaeval times when even the most enlightened people of Europe believed in witchcraft and the practice of magic.

Voudoo rites, as practiced in Louisiana, have usually been conducted in secret, but they are commonly believed to consist of prolonged and violent dancing by persons of both sexes, sometimes with little or no clothing. Tales are told of scenes of wild debauchery which occurred at these dances, and from the frequent statements that living snakes are used in some of these exercises it would appear that a sort of serpent worship makes up at least a part of the groundwork upon which the rites are based.

In the West Indies, but most particularly in Hayti, these survivals of negro savagery are quite common, and the rites are described as revolting in the extreme, embracing serpent worship, the most abandoned debauchery, with human sacrifices and cannibalism. Sir Spencer St. John, in his work on the "Black Republics of the West Indies," has related at length accounts of these matters, which appear to be established as facts by testimony entirely credible. His narratives of the voudoo practices in Hayti are detailed and circumstantial, and while all the testimony is conclusive as to the African origin of these superstitions the writers who have paid most attention to the subject have not been able to trace the myths to the particular tribe and localities from which they were derived.

DERIVATION OF THE WORD.

The first writer to give any apparent accurate circumstantial account of the African superstitious rites is Major A. B. Ellis, a British officer, who, it seems, has made a study of the negro tribes in their ancient Africa. In The Popular Science Monthly he prints an article in which we find some interesting matter. He gives the following as to the derivation and definition of "voudoo:"

The word vodu belongs to the Ewe language, which is spoken on the slave coast of West Africa, between the River Volta on the west and the kingdom of Porto Novo on the east, and extends inland, as far as it is known, about 100 miles. It is derived from the verb vo—to inspire fear—and is used in just the same way as English speaking people used the word "fetich"—that is to say, it is used as a descriptive noun "god," and also an adjective in the sense of sacred or belonging to a god.

Thus any native god may be described as a vodu, and his image, paraphernalia and sacred tract of bush called vodu. A priest is termed vodu-no—"He who stays with the vodu." The word is not an epithet of any particular god, it is a general term, and it is, therefore, incorrect to say that "it is the name of an imaginary being of vast supernatural powers residing in the form of a harmless snake."

No doubt the python god, worshiped by the inhabitants of the southeastern districts of Ewe territory, may very correctly be described as a vodu, but it is not more a vodu than Khebioso, So, Legba, Bo, Huuti, Wu and other gods of the Ewe pantheon. The expression "vodu worship" means, then, "god worship," which is a rather comprehensive term.

AFRICAN AND AMERICAN VOUDOO.

The Whydahs, a people of the Ewe nation, are well known worshipers of a python, or serpent god, and they, about the year 1729, were wholly subjugated by the Dahomeys and sold into slavery. Many of them were carried to the French West Indies, where they maintained their religion. Some of these Whydahs were brought to Louisiana, and hence the snake cult which is found here. But many more tribes, which were not snake worshipers, were also reduced to slavery, and some of their number were brought to America, so that their superstitions were mingled with those of the others.

The Whydahs had a very elaborate serpent cult, maintaining temples where bands of young girls ministered and took part in the dances and other exercises. These female attendants were organized as a sisterhood, known as Kosio. The name of their snake god is Danh-gbi. Says the writer quoted above:

The Kosio of Danh-gbi usually appears with the bosom smeared with palm oil, but their distinguishing mark is a necklet called adunka, made of the twisted filaments of a sprouting palm leaf. On ceremonial occasions they wear a fillet of the same material, with anklets, armlets and neck strings of cowries.

As is the case with the women attached to temples in India, this life is not considered dishonorable, because it is regarded as a part of the service of the religion. The kosio are, indeed, not considered as responsible for their actions. It is the god, say the people, who inspires them at such times.

The voodoo rites as practiced in Louisiana are far less brutal and atrocious than those in use in Hayti, but they are savage and demoralizing. There is no statute against them here, but the dances have been stopped when characterized as disorderly assemblages. It has been supposed that these superstitions will be exterminated by civilization, but such a result has not yet been attained. It is to be doubted if superstition is ever eradicated from human nature. It is claimed even that the negroes are returning to their savage myths. This is an interesting question.—New Orleans Picayune.

Chicken Feathers.

Uncle Jasper—No, sah: Dat's de 'culiarity 'bout dat dress. De feathers is dar, sah, but you can't see 'em.—Cloak Review.

Very Bad Form.

Daughter (after the theater)—That play was so interesting I couldn't do a thing but just sit and listen to it.

Fashionable Mother—It was abominable, the way you watched that play. People must have thought we were from the country.—New York Weekly.

RED LAKE FALLS,

f531may Polk Co., Minn.

State of Minnesota, County of Polk } ss In Probate Court, Special Term March 17, 1891.

In the Matter of the Estate of Peter Bischoff, Deceased:

Letters of administration on the estate of said deceased being this day granted unto Joseph Bischoff of said county.

It is ordered that all claims and demands of all persons against said estate be presented to this court, for examination and allowance, at the probate office in Crookston on Wednesday the 12th day of August A. D. 1891, at 10 o'clock a. m.

It is further ordered, That six months from date hereof be allowed to creditors to present their claims against said estate, at the expiration of which time all claims not presented to said court, or not proven to its satisfaction, shall be forever barred, unless for cause shown further time be allowed.

Ordered further, That notice of the time and place of the hearing and examination of said claims and demands shall be given by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to the day appointed for such examination in the Red Lake Falls News, a weekly newspaper printed and published at Red Lake Falls, in said county.

Dated at Crookston the 17th day of March, A. D. 1891.

By the Court,
C. M. BENSON,
Judge of Probate.

Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:50 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. ECHOES OF THE RAPIDS

A COUNTRY SONG.

An evening so clear
  I would that I were,
To kiss thy soft cheek
  With the faintest of air.
The star that is twinkling
  So brightly above,
I would that I were
  To enlighten my love;

I would I were heaven,
  O'erarching and blue,
I'd bathe thee, my dearest,
  In freshest of dew.
I would I the sun were,
  All radiance and glow,
I'd pour all my splendor
  On thee, love, below.

If I were the waters
  That round the world run,
I'd lavish my pearls on thee,
  Not keeping of one.
If I were the summer,
  My flowers and green
I'd heap on thy temples,
  And crown thee my queen.

If I were a kiln,
  All fire and flame,
I'd mantle and girdle thee
  Round with the same.
But as I am nothing
  Save loved mased Bill,
Pray take of me, make of me,
  Just what you will.

Jas. McCaffrey, after spending a couple of weeks here and at Crookston attending to business affairs, returned to his home at Augusta, Wis., Tuesday evening. Mr. McCaffrey is a man whom to know is a pleasure, and we are only sorry that he does not make arrangement to reside here permantly.

"Our next issue," wrote the editor of a contemporary, "will be exceedingly interesting, as it will contain the names of all our delinquent subscribers." But when the time came to send out the next issue it was discovered that there were no delinquent subscribers. They had all paid up! Such is the power of the press.

Ed. Jefiers, manager of the Black River Horse company, is showing one of the finest stallions ever brought to this part of the country. It is a bright bay, an imported clydesdale. The horse company being organized throughout the country are a good thing and will soon show effects in greatly improved horse flesh.

The city papers are all right if you want them, but it is the local paper that that advertises your schools, your churches, your numerous societies, sympathizes with you in your affiction and rejoices in your prosperity. In short, it is your local paper that mentions the thousand and one items in which you are interested during the year, and which you find in no other paper.

Shade trees are found lining some streets in every town or village that dares lay claim to culture riches or beauty. Residence streets lined on each side with tall majestic trees are an indication of the age and antecedents of a town. If you would beautify your property you can not do so in a simpler or more pleasant or more profitable way than by planting shade trees on the premises and along the fence and sidewalk. It will in a short time add greatly to the worth of the property, to say nothing of the beauty. It would be a good investment to employ a man a week for this purpose. Our schools should observe Arbor Day. The schoolboard should see to this. For private, it is often desirable to plant fruit trees as in course of time they become a source of profit as well as convenience.

Saturday was Miss Kittie Pirath's 7th birthday anniversary, and the important event was celebrated fittingly by her and her little friends. Miss Kittie was assisted by her sister Carrie and together they succeeded in entertaining the little guests to the unbounded satisfaction of all. After they had enjoyed themselves horoughly, they were invited to a repast which many older might have envied. Here Mrs. Pirath presided, and her easy grace and kindly smile soon caused all restraint to fly. She was assisted by Mrs. J. P. Harren. Those present and a list of the presentations are given below: Martha Perron, Henrietta Zaiser, Aggie and Marguerite Rodgers, Lurene Schreiter, Lucile Falardeau, Bessie Hunt, Elinore Findeisen, Maude Findeisen, Josie Kaus, Victoria Paul, Rosie Harren, Gertrude Hennemuth, Ettie Hennemuth, Una and Ina McClatchie, Rachel Taylor, L llie Zutz, Rosie Paradise, Albena Lemieux, Katie C al, Agn s Garceau, Mamie Boyle, Bertha and Clara Zaiser. Obituary.

Mrs. Amanda Watson—beloved wife of Dr. John Watson died Sunday evening April 12.

A painful illness of over a years duration culuminated in death. The kindly spirit of deceased was wafted as upon the wings of an angle to its Maker, the last moments being of perfect repose; in fact so silently had the end come that those in attendance could scarcely notice the change. As the New year's sun shone forth on the 1st of January, 1890 she said she expected never to see another. But the long dreary year of heroic, patient suffering passed, and the first rays of the 1891 sun shown through her bedroom window, lighting up the scene and falling benignly upon the pale face of the sufferer, calling forth a smile of hope and joy. She had seen another new years sun! One month passed, another and and another, but on April, 12th 1891, her waiting soul bade farewell to the suffering body;—and white angles carried it to heaven!

Dr. and Mrs Watson have been residents here for about ten years. During this time she has been sowing the seeds of kindness, charity;—bendiction upon every living thing that knew her, and is now gathering the fruits in heaven; none who new her, not even the pure white flowers that in her last days of suffering could still claim a share of her solicitude—the bond of fraternity strong between the white gleam of their petals and the purity of her soul—but will feel a lonesome oppresion follow her absence; will see the vacancy with a pang of grief. The flowers may live and blosson, but less pure or white than when in sympathy with her the friends may live and live and laugh and be merry, but oft in lonesome solitude long will come, her memory;—and tears will hardly cease to flow ere life's brief span is bridged and all who are gone may meet again. The intensity of sorrow; the many words of praise expressed by not only the friends but by the acquaintances cannot but be a consolation to the bereaved mother and the dutiful husband whose assidious and constant care tended to prolong the life of the discessed—indeed the sympathy of the community was never more gratuitiously extended. A just reward for the suffering of Mrs. Watson will be a joy in heaven. Her soul was well propased for its journey, the reward of a life well lived is hers.

Her maiden name was Amenda Coutching—borne April 22nd 1848, near Auborn N. Y. She was educated at Mt. Holyoke Seminary in Massachussetts. Coming west she entered Ann Arbor university and graduated in the medical department. March 16th 1881 she was married to Dr. John Watson at Utica N. Y. In the fall of 1882 they removed to Red Lake Falls and have since resided here.

Funeral services were held in the house—the Rev. Mr. McCormack officiating. The remains were taken to Minneapolis for interment. Thus has gone from our midst a lady beloved by all,

The Bjoin Opera House Opening.

The Crookston new grand opera house was opened Monday night. Editor W. E. McKenzie read a poem in reference to the occasion, Halgor Steenerson made a speech mayor McKinnon read an address. The Hess opera company was than given full control of the entertainment. Miss Fransecca Guthrie, who has become quite famous if not popular as an American prima donna, is the star of the troupe. The company advertise 50 people, but only twenty were engaged in the production of "Fausi" at the opening Miss Gauthric is a finished artist but probably lacks the attributes of a genous, which in these days of elaborate art seem to be almost requisites to talent and cultivation in gaining the popular approval and well as affection. But "Faust" does not abound in opportunities for artistic display on the part of the star, and this may account in a measure for the failure of Miss Guthrie to come up to expectations. Her voice is full and powerful, but not of unsual range, it would appear, unless she were credited with the lower tones which were always defective. She is a brilliant actress. The Hess Opera company may yet become famous for embracing one of if not the finest baritone in America. Mr. William Martens first made his appearance at the Metropolitan theatre of New York, whence he was taken for his present position. He does not understand English but sings it; studied music but two month in his life, and sings with effect of the finest polish. Art seems to have outlived its usefulness in his case and nature unaided shows what heights may be attained by the human voice. Without the slightest effort he carries his hearers into ecstacies of enjoyment. The tenore is good, not extra, but compares favorably with Miss Guthrie, The troupe as a whole give a strong presentation, and when not too particular an evening of unusual pleasure be spent before them. It is well known that Miss Guthrie has a hankering after Emma Abbott's shoes. The opera house itself is a credit to Crookrton and Polk county if need be. We have already given a description of it in these columns. It is built on the mordern plan and has all mordern appurtenances. Its seating capacity is about 800, and it is estimated that the receipts the first night were in the neighborhood of $1,700.

Caution!—There have recently been issued several cheap reprints of the 1847 edition of Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an edition long since superannuated. These books are given various names,—"Webster's Unabridged," "The Great Webster's Dictionary," "Webster's Big Dictionary," "Webster's Encyclopedic Dictionary," etc., etc.

Many announcements concerning them are very misleading, as the body of each, from A to Z, is 44 years old, and printed from cheap plates made by photographing the old pages.

ACCORDING to a writer in the San Francisco Chronicle there are 170,000 more men than women on the coast, while there are 70.000 more women than men in Massachusetts alone, and several of the other eastern states in proportion. Here is a chance for a wideawake railway passenger agent to get in some effective work.

KING GEORGE, of Greece, having accumulated a fortune of about $6,000,000 during his reign, is going to get in out of it and let his son run things in Athens while he enjoys his ease at a castle he has purchased near Copenhagen. THE defeat of the Parnellite candidate in the North Sligo election, in spite of the aid given him by the Tories, shows how strongly the current is setting against the former leader, and attests his shrewdness if not his courage in evading the personal appeal to the Cork constituency which he himself proposed, but afterward declined.

THE report comes from India that in the British assault on Fort Thobat Lieutenant Grant had only eighty men with him and that they drove out 900 of the Manipuri garrison. This is a strong story, and would hardly go down if we did not know what has been done in India before. Odds do not count there when business is really pressing.

TOUCHING the talk of war, the London Spectator ridicules the notion of Italy declaring war against one of the greatest powers in the world—"a power capable in six months of buying and building a fleet that would block every port in Italy. American ingenuity would be so stimulated to outdo itself that it would turn every steamer that could float into an improvised ironclad."

ALL the Greeks in New York city, whether naturalized or not, are reported to have met and formed a battalion of 350 men, and will forwith offer their services to the United States government in case of war with Italy. As the Greeks have about as many vices as the modern Romans and employ similar methods oi warfare, it might be a good idea to organize this band into a Mafia-hunting contingent and turn 'em loose.

FOR stories of large circumference the Georgia papers are unrivaled. The Abbeville Times reports: "An old bachelor of Abbeville was miraculously saved from drowning last Sunday. In attempting to wade a creek he got into swimming water, and, as he could not swim, went down and clutched the first object that he came in contact with under the water. Fortunately it was a monster turtle of the loggerhead variety that he seized. The turtle, strange to say, swam with the man to the shore. His escape was miraculous."

LABOR CIRCLES

Brickmakers to the number of 1,200 went out on a strike at Trenton, N. J., refusing to accept a 20 per cent. reduction in wages.

The electrotypers' strike in Boston has been satisfactorily settled, and soon every union electrotyper will be in his old place. The union will maintain its apprentice laws and the employers have promised to make satisfactory arrangements in regard to wages.

Nearly all the firms in Chicago employing lathers have agreed to pay the increased wages demanded by the strikers, and the men are returning to work.

A strike of all the switchmen employed by the Missouri & Burlington, in Lincoln, Neb., some sixty-five in number, was inaugurated.

In Philadelphia, as a result of the lockout of the puddlers the men in the finishing department of the Pencoyd Iron works, to the number of 400 have struck work.

Great preparations are being made by the St. Louis central trades and labor unions for the proposed great May day demonstration and demand for shorter hours and more pay.

At Lynn, Mass., the morocco workers have abandoned their strike, which began last August and affected 15,000 men at one time. The strike is a total failure. This is practically a deathblow to the Knights of Labor in Lynn.

In Chicago about 400 lathers have gone out on a strike for an advance in wages, and if their demands are not generally granted those remaining, making about 1,000 in all, will stop work. It is thought that the employers will give in.

The spinners employed by the Jesse Eddy Manufacturing company, Fall River, Mass., recently made a demand for an increase in wages from $1.25 to $1.35. The company refused and the spinners struck. The officials at the Cornell mill refused to take back the weavers who struck several days ago.

POLITICAL.

The result of the late election at Detroit is held in doubt by the slowness with which the returns come in, but it is pretty generally conceded by all save the Democratic managers that the Republicans have returned their candidates by about 5,000 majority.

All over Nebraka municipal elections were held under the new law, which embraces the Australian plan of voting. Reports from nearly every city and village in the state indicate that the law is one of the best ever devised. Returns so far show general resumption of power by the Republicans where party lines were drawn. In most of the towns the question was between license and no license, and the vote mainly resulted in favor of a license.

Surveys are now being made by the Canadian Pacific in the Rocky mountains for the purpose of diverting its line some 150 miles south of where it is at present located.

It is stated at Winnipeg that the Northern Pacific has offered to sell out its whole system in Manitoba to the Canadian Pacific railroad. There is a probability that the offer will be accepted.

The Northern Steamship company, which connects solely with the Union Transit company, now forms a through canal and lake line from New York to West Superior, Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Stillwater and all points west, northwest and southwest.

The competition among the fast freight lines to secure a shipment from Topeka of thirty cars of flour to London and European ports have resulted in a cut under the regular rates. One line, a lake and rail line, cut nine cents. Then the Empire line slipped in and met the latter cut by the all-rail route. It captured the business. The fast freight line men say this is only a sample of cut rates to the seaboard, the regular rate being the exception.

AT the annual election of the Southern Pacific company the old board of directors were re-elected, as follows: C. P. Huntington, Leland Stanford, Colonel Charles F. Crocker, S. T. Gage, A. N. Towne, J. Stubbs, W. E. Brown, W. V. Huntington, Thomas E. Stillman and Thomas H. Hubbard. The selection of this board of directors insures, it is stated, the re-election of President Huntington. The latter presented a report of the year's work, and spoke favorably of the year's business and of prospects during the coming year.

The Colorado house has unanimously passed the senate bill appropriating $100,000 for the purpose of making an exhibit of Colorado's resources at the world's fair. The bill will go to the governor, and undoubtedly will be approved.

One hundred and sixty-two ostriches at the California ostrich farm near Anaheim were sold at private sale recently for $6,000. The birds were assessed at $11,000, and are claimed to be worth $30,000. The buyers are a local company of capitalists and speculators.

SEVEN DISTRICTS.

How the State is to Be Redistricted When the New Craig Bill Becomes a Law.

Tables Showing the Population of the Counties in the Districts and the Total Vote.

One of the most important pieces of legislation which has been accomplished by the present legislature is the redistricting of the state into congressional district, to conform to the act of congress by which Minnesota is to have seven instead of five congressmen. This bill has not yet become a law, but its form has been agreed upon and it will probably be passed without a dissenting vote. The basis of the bill is the population according to the census of 1890. The accompanying map gives a clear idea of the districts as they will be under the new regime. There is no change in the First district, except that Waseca county is added to it. The Second district has Chippewa county added, but loses Waseca, Sibley and Le Sueur counties. The Third district loses Chippewa, Kandiyohi and Swift counties and has added Le Sueur and Sibley. The identity of the Fourth and Fifth districts is lost entirely. Hennepin county is put into a district by itself. Ramsey has added to it Washington, Chisago, Isanti, Kanabec, these constituting the proposed new Fourth district. The irregular appearance of the Fourth district is accounted for by the fact that the Anoka people objected to being placed in this district, claiming that their interests were more nearly identical with those of the Sixth district than those of the Fourth.

VOTE BY DISTRICTS.

The following table shows the total congressional vote in 1890, by congressional districts as proposed:

First District	34,500
Second district	34,270
Third district	36,834
Fourth district	28,946
Fifth district	31,544
Sixth district	34,817
Seventh district	35,754

From this table it will be seen that the reapportionment, on the basis of congressional vote, is not nearly so equal as it appears by the population basis. The widest variation between any two districts in population is only 3,905, while in congressional vote there is a variation of 7,888.

THE GAME LAWS.

They Will Probably Undergo a Very Thorough Reconstruction.

Below is given a synopsis of a bill—H. F. No. 996—introduced by the special committee on game and game laws, which has been recommended for passage in the house, and will in all probability pass both houses and become a law. As will be seen, it makes some radical changes in the game laws of the state. The main provisions of the bill are as follows:

Section 1 provides for the creation of a board of game and fish commissioners, of five members, who shall serve without compensation, to be appointed by the governor, for the term of six years each.

Section 2 provides for the appointment of the members in such a manner that only two of the board shall retire every two years.

Section 3 provides that it shall be the duty of the said board of game and fish commissioners to propagate and distribute food fishes and to keep up the supply thereof in the various waters of the state, and to secure the enforcement of all the laws of this state for the preservation, propagation and protection of the game and fish of the state. They shall appoint some person, a resident of the state, as game warden, who shall act as secretary and business agent of said board, who shall hold his office for the term of two years; and said board shall have power to appoint deputy game wardens, who shall be residents of the state, in number not exceeding four, and who shall hold their offices for the like term of two years: and said board may at any time remove any of said wardens and appoint another in his place for the unexpired term. The compensation of said warden and deputy wardens shall be fixed by the board, and said board shall further have the power to appoint at any time a special game warden for any county in the state, for such period of time as they may in their discretion determine.

Section 4 provides for the collection of statistics, specimens, etc., and for the compilation of an annual report.

Section 5 makes it the duty of the board to select locations in different parts of the state for the establishment of stations for breeding fish, for the purpose of stocking the waters of the state with good fish; they shall conduct such experiments at these stations as they deem best to serve the interests of the state; they may institute and prosecute actions and proceedings in the name of the board; the board shall employ a superintendent of fisheries, who shall devote his entire time to the work of fish propagation and distribution under the direction of the board. The salary of the superintendent of fisheries shall not exceed the sum of $2,000 per annum. All property owned or leased by said board shall be exempt from taxation.

Sec. 6. No person shall at any time acquire any property in any game or fish within the State of Minnesota, or subject any of the same to his own dominion or control, save only by killing the same within the periods and by the means permitted by the laws of the state, and, except as permitted by such laws, the game and fish within the state be and remain the property of the state.

Section 7 permits killing woodcock between July 4 and Nov. 1; prairie chickens or white breasted or sharp-tailed grouse, quail, pheasant, partride or ruffed grouse during September and October; wild duck, wild goose, brant, snipe or other aquatic fowl from Aug. 25 to April 25. Possession of such game is considered prima facie evidence of killing the same.

Section 8 prohibits use of traps, snares and similar devices, or decoys except for ducks, wild geese and brant. All birds must be shot with a gun.

Section 9 prohibits hunting with dogs or hounds any elk, deer, moose, buck, doe, fawn or antelope at any time, and prohibits killing such game except during November. No person shall take, kill or worry any moose, reindeer or caribou within five years after passage of this bill.

Section 10 prohibits killing such game except with a gun.

Section 11 provides for punishment of any person, firm or corporation having in his possession the animals named during the close season.

Section 12 applies similar penalties to railroad and express companies shipping such game during close season.

Sec. 13. No person shall enter growing grain, nor hunt nor shoot on private property without obtaining permission.

Section 14 allows any person to kill any dog while such dog is in pursuit of game contrary to this act.

Sec. 15. Game wardens are permitted to burn or destroy fish houses, traps or net lines found in use during the close season.

Section 16 prohibits killing mink, muskrat, otter or beaver between May 1 and Nov. 1 following, unless such animals are destroying private property.

Section 17 prohibits taking speckled, river or brook trout except from April 1 to Oct. 1 following.

Section 18 prohibits taking fish in counties where now prohibited or during the months of March and April.

Section 19 prohibits use of any device for catching speckled, river or brook trout except hook and line. No person except a fish commissioner shall take fish except whitefish and fish in Lake Superior except by angling or with a spear.

Section 20 prohibits breaking up nests or taking eggs of woodcock, snipe, quail, partridge, ruffled grouse, prairie chicken, pheasant, plover, wild duck, grouse or brant.

Sec. 21. No person shall kill, cage or trap any whippoorwill, night hawk, bluebird, finch, thrush, lark, linnet, wren, martin, swallow, bobolink, robin, turtle-dove, cat-bird, or any other harmless bird not elsewhere mentioned in this act, except black birds, sparrows and wild pigeons.

Sec. 22. No person shall sell or keep game or fish during prohibited season.

Sec. 23. Parties having game or fish prohibited during close season, shall turn the same over to a fish or game warden or to constable.

Sec. 24. Game warden or officer of the law may seize game or fish taken during close season.

Sec. 25. Prohibits wanton destruction of game at any season.

Sec. 26. Any participant in the violation of the law may turn state's evidence.

Sec. 27. Fishways shall be under the control of the commission.

Sec. 28. Fishways shall be put in by any one building dams across streams where fish go up during the spawning season.

Sec. 29. Commissioners may order changes in such fishways, and they shall be kept open from April 1 to Oct. 1 following.

Sec. 30. Prohibits catching fish within 400 feet of of any fishway.

Sec. 31. Fines collected under the act shall go to the credit of the board, in the state treasury.

Sec. 32. Authorizes the board to buy animals, fish, spawn or eggs for stocking fields or waters of the state.

Sec. 33. Appropriates $10,000 to carry out the provisions of the act.

Sec. 34. Sections 103, 104, 105 and 106 of chapter 6 of the General Statutes of 1878, and chapter 20 of the General Statutes of 1878, and chapters 205, 206 and 207 of the General Laws of 1889 are hereby repealed.

Sec. 35. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

The act provides appropriate penalties for the punishment of misdemeanors as stated in the various sections.

A CLEVER LAWYER.

Walter Besant Tells a Lawyer's Clever Trick.

Has this story ever appeared in print? If so, I have never seen it, and I tell it as it was told to me. A certain young Russian, of good family, fell in love with a village girl, whom he wished to marry. His father, objecting on the ground of social disparity, made arrangements by which the girl was betrothed to a young peasant of her own class. Now, it is the custom in some parts of Russia for the bridegroom and his friends to begin drinking early in the day of the marriage, so that when the time comes for the church ceremony the groom has often to be led to the altar and supported by a friend on either hand. This happened on the morning of the marriage of the girl. The bridegroom was led to the altar supported by two men, of whom one was the young gentleman himself.

Now mark his craft and subtlety. When the time came for joining hands, he put out his own hand, the groom being too far gone to notice anything, and so was joined in matrimony to the girl. The certificate of the marriage had already been written in the register before the ceremony, a precaution obviously necessary. The wedding over, the young noble took the girl from her people at the church door, drove her away and took her to Paris, where they lived together in love and amity for several years. Then the father died, and it became necessary to return to Russia, and, if possible, for the sake of the children, to get the marriage duly acknowledged. This business was intrusted to a lawyer, who visited the village and saw the register. He returned, stating that it was impossble, because the marriage was entered in the books as between the rustic and the girl. Being, however, assured that something must be done, he returned, got possession of the register, and clumsily erased the name of the rustic bridegroom. This done he—at this point you ask what he did, and everybody says, "Filled in the other name." No he did not; he wrote again over the erasure the name of the village swain. Consider this for one moment. You will acknowledge that he was a very clever lawyer, indeed.—Manchester Times.

ONE WOMAN'S QUESTIONS.

They Sufficed to Make Six Men Risk Their Souls.

A woman wearing a mackintosh and carrying an umbrella stood at the ticket window at the Barclay Street Ferry the other day. Six men were behind her in line. A boat was due to leave in about two minutes.

"Do boats leave here for Hoboken?" she asked, and the man inside answered "Yes."

"How long will it be before the next one leaves?"

"About a minute," was the reply.

"Does the boat go straight to Hoboken?" asked the woman.

"Yes," said the ticket seller.

"How long could I wait in Hoboken before there was another boat back?" asked the woman, while the men behind her grew nervous rapidly.

"As long as you please," said the patient ticket seller: "they are going and coming all the time."

"Could I get from Hoboken to Jersey City without coming back here?"

"Yes; street cars run regularly," was the answer.

"Would it be quicker to go by a car or come back and take a ferry to Jersey City?" she asked.

"I don't know," was the answer. Then the ticket seller asked impatiently, "How many?"

"How many what? asked the woman.

"Tickets. How many tickets do you want?"

The bell was ringing for the boat to move, and the men in line were swearing.

"I don't wan't any tickets," she said. "My sister lives in Hoboken, and if I thought I had time to go and see her and call on my brother's folks in Jersey City I was going over tomorrow."—New York Times.

An Apt Reply.

A certain queen of Hanover once upon a time when traveling, stopped at an inn called "The Golden Goose." She remained two days to rest herself and retinue, and receive such entertainment as was needed, and for the same was charged three hundred thalers.

On her departure the landlord besought her with obsequious deference to favor him with her patronage on her return.

"If you desire that, mein lieber Mann," replied her majesty, "you must not again take me for your sign."—Harper's Bazar.

A FIGHT FOR BLOOD.

Bloody Fight at Bradford, England, Between the Police and Militia and Thousands of Strikers.

Many of the Strikers Seriously Injured by Bayonet Thrusts, Several of the Policeman Also Hurt.

LONDON, April 14.—Ten thousand of the striking weavers at Bradford assembled at that place to-day for the purpose of protesting against the action of the municipal authorities in forbidding the meeting which the strikers had arranged for yesterday.

The police vainly tried to disperse the gathering, but their repeated charges on the crowd proved futile. The riot act was read, and the military were then summoned. The soldiers upon their arrival at the scene joined forces with the police, and a combined charge was made upon the ranks of the stubborn strikers.

A fierce struggle ensued, but the strikers were unable to resist the increased force, and were compelled to retreat before the bayonets and batons. The police used their batons very freely, and many of the strikers were injured.

A score of arrests were made. All the prisoners had gashes on their heads from stones or police batons and many police were injured, but no one had bayonet wounds. Detective Martingale received six cuts on the head and his horse was killed under him by a stab.

It is probable that the strikers will attempt to hold another meeting to-morrow and that the scenes witnessed to-day will be renewed.

WILL BACK THE MINERS.

President Gompers Says the Strike for Eight Hours Is a Foregone Conclusion.

PITTSBURG, April 14.—Samuel Gompers, exponent of the eight-hour work day and leader of the forces of the Federation of Labor, is in the city. Mr. Gompers said today:

"I find that wage workers in cities west of the Mississippi are organized in greater proportion than those in the East. At many points the demand of workers for the eight-hour day has been conceded or has been adjusted by conference. In Chicago and Columbus carpenters have arranged their differences amicably.

"As for the miners, their strike is now a foregone conclusion. It will be a strike which will astonish the operators. They asked very little of operators—no advance in pay at all—and it seems strange that the latter should adopt such arbitrary and unbusiness-like tactics. They talk of money necessary to carry on such a controversy; we've got it and will get more, and all that is necessary."

Mr. Gompers will hold several important conferences while here. Upon one of these depends considerably the future attitude of the leading strikers in the coke regions.

A special from Scottdale says there was unusual activity all along the line to-day owing to the fact that the Frick and McClure companies had decided to begin operations at all points possible. Some twenty eviction notices have been served at the Trotter plant alone, and, in view of the fact that fully 200 notices have been served throughout the region, it is thought trouble will come when the warrants are carried out, as the strikers will certainly not go peaceably. Great mass meetings have been held at Bessemer and other points to-day and at each resolutions were adopted to remain out until the end.

MURDER AND PILLAGE.

IQUINIQUE, April 15.—What is occurring in this unfortunate port is something unheard of, and it leads one to believe that no civilized beings live here. Vagabonds are robbing, plundering, murdering, violating women and committing all classes of atrocities, while incendiaries are also engaged in their operations of destruction and pillage.

The triumph of the rebels on the 7th was decisive, and Balmaceda's troops were knocked to pieces. After losing all their cannon, rifles and ammunition, only a few officers and soldiers escaped. The people, who are without work, are suffering fearfully, and hundreds of them have abandoned the nitrate works, only carrying bottles of water, and, accompanied by their families, have wearily trudged across the desert down to Iquique, on the coast. The scene is of a nature which hardly finds an equal in the history of war and revolt, and is due to the nature of the country and the class of work there carried on. Many have died on the way to Iquique, and their bones will mark for many a day the roads to the now abandoned nitrate producing factories.

MURDERED BY INDIANS.

Two Unknown Emigrants Killed by Indians in Idaho.

BLACKFOOT, Idaho, April 14.—Great excitement was caused to-day by a discovery that Indians have killed two unknown white emigrants who were camped at a water tank one mile below this place.

Nothing could be learned as to the cause of the tragedy. There were no eye-witnesses. The bodies of the emigrants were found dead at the tank, and a number of Indians were seen taking to the hills east of here. An uprising is feared. Indian Agent Fisher, who was at Pocatello, was telegraphed for and came up on a special train. Deputy Sheriff Ross left immediately for the scene and took charge of the bodies, leaving an armed posse on guard.

Business is suspended and the citizens are up in arms. About 100 armed mounted men have left the city to overtake the guilty parties. Should the Indians refuse to surrender trouble is sure to follow, as the posse are determined men. Not an Indian was to be found in the city an hour after the affair. The governor and adjutant general have been telegraphed to in regard to the affair.

Went Away With a Widow.

ST. CLOUD, Minn., Special, April 14.—Quite a sensation was caused here to-day when it became known that Henry Branch, proprietor of the Grand Union hotel and a man of considerable wealth, had eloped with Mrs. Hart, a widow. Branch took with him about $4,000 in cash, and before he left made numerous debts with clothing merchants. He leaves a wife and a family of grown-up children.

Passed Through a Cyclone.

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., April 14.—Two sleeping coaches running from the City of Mexico, San Antonio and Washington, D. C., via the Mexican National, have reached here in a dilapidated condition. The Mexican train to which they were attached passed through a cyclone and hail storm near Torreon, Mex., Saturday night. So large were the hailstones that the headlight of the engine and every pane of glass on one side of the train of cars were smashed as if they had been struck by rocks. Several persons in the day coaches were injured, and a Mexican at Torreon station was killed.

MAY BE TRIED FOR HERESY.

Rev. Charles A. Briggs' Address Referred to a Committee.

NEW YORK, April 14.—The spring meeting of the New York presbytery was begun to-day, and the nomination of representatives to the general assembly, to be held in Detroit next, was proceeded with. Rev. Charles B. Briggs, D. D., of Union Theological seminary, was nominated as representative, and with others was elected without any opposition.

Rev. Dr. Birch, of the Bethany Presbyterian church, offered the following:

"Whereas, the address of Rev. Dr. Charles A. Briggs, Jan. 20, 1891, on the occasion of his inauguration as incumbent of Edward Robinson chair of Biblical theology in Union Theological seminary, has been criticised as containing statements contrary to the teaching and spirit of the confession of faith, a committee be appointed to which said address shall be referred, with instructions to report at the meeting in May what action, if any, may be appropriate in relation thereto."

The resolution was unanimously passed. Since the time of Prof. Briggs' inauguration the hottest kind of a theological dispute has been conducted in presbyteries and in the columns of religious newspapers. In debates Prof. Briggs has received some very hard knocks and considerable abuse. Dr. Briggs has not, however, been without his defenders. There is no question in the minds of many Presbyterians that there are ample grounds for an investigation. To this end are quoted such passages from Prof. Briggs' address on "The Authority of Holy Scriptures" as:

"I shall venture to affirm that, so far as I can see, there are errors in the Scriptures that no one has been able to explain away, and the theory that they were not in the original text is sheer assumption, upon which no mind can rest with certainty. * * * We find there are errors of transmission (of the Scriptures). There is nothing divine in the text—in its letters, words or clauses. * * * The Bible, as a book, is paper, print and binding, nothing more."

LOOKS RATHER DUBIOUS.

Indications That the Western Traffic Association Will Go Under.

CHICAGO, April 14.—There is considerable speculation as to whether the Missouri Pacific will be represented at the meeting of the advisory board of the Western Passenger association to be held here to-morrow.

Jay Gould is in the Southwest, and has not signified his intention of being present, while Vice President S. H. H. Clark is in Portland, Or. These are the only two officials that, under the agreement, can represent the Missouri Pacific in the advisory board, and the indications are that the meeting is to be ignored by that company. If this proves to be the case, it can mean nothing less than the dissolution of the association at an even earlier date than was generally believed.

Charges of rate-cutting recently against the Missouri Pacific were to be answered at the next meeting, and it is concluded that Gould has no intention of submitting to the rulings of the board.

THEIR BOAT CAPSIZED.

Two Citizens of Prairie du Chien Drowned in the Mississippi.

WINONA, Minn., Special, April 14.—Two gentle from Prairie du Chien were drowned in the Mississippi river a short distance above the city Sunday. Four Prairie du Chien gentlemen left in two boats with a camping outfit, heading for the island above the city.

In the first boat were W. J. Kennedy, alderman of the First ward, and Joseph Ducharme. In the second boat were William Deary, an employe of the Milwaukee road, and William Nelson, a barber. The gentlemen in the First boat, on looking back after a time, could not see their companions, and on going back to find them ran across the upturned boat. The boat is supposed to have been capsized by the heavy waves. The bodies have not yet been recovered.

DEFYING THE LAW.

Alien Labor Imported by Large Concerns in Omaha.

CHICAGO, April 14.—Special Immigration Agent Lester arrived here to-day. He is preparing a voluminous report for Secretary Foster.

"I have just returned from Omaha," said he, "and I can promise you a sensation in ten days. I have been making investigations there and have evidence that the contract alien labor law has been and is being grossly violated. Certain large concerns there that employ a large number of men have been importing alien labor in direct defiance of the law. It will be a big surprise, as the concerns implicated are known all over the world and have a reputation for honesty that has been unquestioned. There are also several other cities where investigation has proved that the law is being violated, but in no place are the cases so flagrant as in Omaha."

MURDERED BY BURGLARS.

Wanton Shooting of a Maryland Man and His Wife.

LANCASTER, Pa., April 14.—A terrible murder occurred in Cecil county, Maryland, near the Lancaster county (Pennsylvania) line early this morning. Granville Richards and wife were aroused by the presence of two men in their room. On Mrs. Richards arousing she was shot in the neck, and Mr. Richards, upon going to her rescue, was shot twice in the stomach. Both will die. The two murderers escaped. Mr. Richards is connected with the customs house in Baltimore.

Died During His Honeymoon.

WILMINGTON, Del., April 14.—Count Lewenhaupt, who married Miss Bayard April 2, died this morning of typhoid fever, after two days' illness. Count Lewenhaupt was a member of a noble family of Sweden, but having chosen to make his home in the United States preferred to be considered as a private individual, and, it is said, requested his friends to drop his title when addressing him. He was a very popular man in society circles, and his marriage with Miss Bayard was considered an extremely happy one. Interment will be made in the Bayard family vault in Old Swede's Episcopal churchyard.

Two Buildings Burned.

ELIZABETH, N. J., April 14.—The First National bank and the Arcade buildings were destroyed by fire to-day. The Arcade contained the postoffice, district court room, telephone station and a large number of stores and offices. The mail was saved, but a large number of stamps and postal cards were destroyed. The total loss is $250,000. There were several narrow escapes from death.

Nearly Killed a "Searcher."

BURLINGTON, Iowa, April 14.—An open revolt against the prohibitory law occurred in this city to-day. A county constable named Green, who has been a searcher in connection with a justice court at Mediapolis, cam to Burlington, and with three deputies, began to search the place of one Hirschberg. Before he had finished reading his warrant he was surrounded by an organized band of about forty, well known liquor dealers, who administered a terrible beating to him. Green's skull was fractured, his nose broken and one eye nearly destroyed. His three deputies deserted him at the first blow, and escaped from the crowd.

MINNESOTA SOLONS.

Condensed Proceedings of Both Branches of the Minnesota Legislature.

What is Being Attempted in the Way of Legislation by Our Lawmakers.

Monday, April 6.

SENATE.

Two solid hours of the morning session were spent in the consideration of general orders, with Senator J. W. Peterson of Goodhue in the chair.

The report of the special senate committee on state's prison investigation was handed in at the opening of the afternoon session by Senator Sanborn, chairman of the committee. It was ordered printed without reading.

The remainder of the afternoon was spent on general orders. There was a discussion on Maj. Reeve's house bill providing for armories for the national guard. The bill puts the construction of armories jointly in the hands of the officers of the city or town where the company is located and the officers of the national guard, but the expense of course is to fall upon the public. The militiamen in the senate fought for the bill strenuously. Senators Tawney and Davis, as old officers and friends of the national gvard, elaborated upon the usefulness of the militia and the value of the soldier boys in case of war or not. Messrs. Crandall and Keller were inclined to make sport of the bill and the militia companies, and the opposition developed so strongly that the friends of the bill were willing to draw off and "report progress."

HOUSE.

The house met at 2 o'clock to-day afternoon after its Sunday rest, and by way of making up lost time and striking a balance with its conscience adopted a resolution offered by Mr. Cross, which provides that commencing to-day and until the end of the session the house shall meet every morning at 9 o'clock and sit until 12:30, meet again at 2 and sit till 6 p. m., and meet again at 7:30 and sit until the house in its wisdom sees fit to adjourn. The resolution was carried by a vote of 34 to 11.

The house relegated the senate baking powder bill to the realms of futurity. It was introduced into the house, and Mr. Penney moved to have it sent to the judiciary committee. Mr. Capser thought the temperance committee could handle the bill in better style. On the motion of Mr. Cross the house sent the bill to the committee on game and game laws.

Tuesday April. 7.

SENATE.

Senator John Day Smith's bill providing for the method of filling vacancies in boards of county commissioners was lost apparently through a misunderstanding of its effect, and Mr. Smith soon after secured its reconsideration.

The bill authorizing the refunding of moneys paid at tax sales on state and school lands was passed by a vote of 30 to 14, after a debate on technicalities, in which Senator Donnelly led the opposition.

The Currier bill from the house providing for the assessment and taxation of telegraph and telephone lines was passed without any objection.

At the close of the calendar Senator Sanborn, for the state prison investigation, presented a supplementary report on the subject of the discount on the twine-binding machinery. Criticism had been made on this point in the morning discussion, and it was one of the points which Donnelly included in his term "whitewash." Senator Sanborn said there was no desire to cover up anything.

When general orders were taken up and Senator McHale's anti-tights bill was reached its author, to the surprise of the senate, moved its recommendation and took the floor in its support.

Senator Lienau put in an amendment providing that all statues should wear petticoats, but he was promptly squelched.

Senator Keller thought the bill was about the only remaining thing that the senators should kill before packing up their waste baskets and going home.

Only one voice said "no" when the bill was recommended for passage.

HOUSE.

The house was engaged almost exclusively to-day in passing bills on the calendar, and thirty-one bills were sent on their way rejoicing. After the routine proceeding attendant upon the commencement of the day's session had been disposed of, petitions and reports of committees read, the task of disposing of the calendar commenced and continued without intermission until noon, and was resumed after dinner and occupied the afternoon until 4:30. The list of bills passed is as follows:

Mr. Ringwald's bill relating to the salaries and terms office of town clerks of Ramsey county was lost owing to there being but a scanty house; 58 votes were cast, 56 in the affirmative and 2 in the negative, the negative voters being Messrs. Bell and Searle. Senator Allen's bill, S. F. No. 315, was ordered to be placed in general orders.

The house then went into committee of the whole on general orders, with Mr. M. Walsh of Hennepin in the chair.

Wednesday, April. 8.

SENATE

During the morning session the senate adopted resolutions appropriating $589.30 for the expenses of the state prison investigation and giving the doorkeepers full pay at $5 per day from the beginning of the session. They were appointed at $3. The resolution passed by a vote of 33 to 8. Repeated attempts have been made to get through the senate a resolution providing for a second edition of the manual, but heretofore they have failed. Yesterday morning Senator Davis renewed the war and finally his resolution was adopted.

The Hennepin senators had a little altercation over the house bill putting several county officers on a salary instead of the present fee system. This was an issue in the last campaign, and the Democrats sought to evade direct conflict with their own platform by passing the bill, but making it take effect Jan. 1, 1893, at the close of the terms of the present Democratic officials. Senator Morse and John Day Smith objected to Senator March's recommendation that the bill pass and it went back to the delegation.

A couple of bills were introduced at the close of the calendar and then adjournment was taken until this morning.

HOUSE

The house had its first tilt yesterday over the senate measure known as the Davis interest bill. The bill was reported back by the committee on banks and banking. There were two reports upon it, one signed by Messrs. Capser (the chairman of the committee), Dearing, M. Walsh and Lloyd, recommending that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and the other report simply returning the bill to the house without recommendation being signed by Messrs. Lyman, Haller, Gilmore and Carlton.

The minority report of the committee on state university and agricultural college was presented. It is signed by Messrs. Greer, Coburn, Starks, Coates and Zelch, and reports adversely on the proposition to separate the college from the university.

On the request of the governor Mr. Harwick was given leave to introduce a bill authorizing the board of supervisors of Sherburne county to appropriate money for building a town hall. The bill was passed under a suspension of the rules.

Thursday, April, 9.

SENATE.

Two bills occupied the attention of the state senate during the greater part of the morning session yesterday. The first was Senator McHale's anti-tights bill, which was passed by the rousing majority of 37 to 12.

During the committee reports of the morning the bill fixing the salaries of the city officials of St. Paul was reported back and passed under suspension of the rules.

The afternoon was spent on general orders with Senator Mayo in the chair.

Senator Sevatson made a strong argument for his bill fixing the liability of common carriers and providing that railroads must furnish cars for shipment of grain, shall weigh and receipt for the same and be responsible for the delivery of full weight (less a slight percentage for natural waste), and providing penalties for enforcement. Mr. Tawney thought the bill was not practical and Senator Crandall agreed with him, but Mr. Sevatson carried his point, and the bill was recommended for passage.

HOUSE.

The committee on reapportionment made a report unanimously recommending Senator Craig's bill providing for the division of the state into seven congressional districts, to pass.

The committee on banks and banking reported to indefinitely postpone two bills relating to usury and interest.

Mr. Feig asked to have his bill, H. F. 1086, relating to the adulteration of coffee and honey, recalled from the judiciary committee and placed on general orders, claiming that his bill was being withheld by the committee.

The railroad committee reported back the anti-scalpers' bill without recommendation.

Senator McHale's anti-tights bill reached the house during the afternoon, and after being read Mr. Wilson moved that it be referred to the committee on printing.

The calendar was then taken up, and, there being forty bills thereon, it occupied the remaining part of the afternoon session. The most important of the bills passed was Mr. Tripp's bill, H. F. 141, to prevent crimes against the elective franchise. The bill had been pretty well discussed and amended and it passed with but little discussion

Mr. Long's bill, H. F. 688, to establish the hours on public works by making eight hours constitute a day's labor, was passed.

Friday April. 10.

SENATE.

The afternoon was devoted to general orders, with Senator McHale in the chair, and the bill repealing the law taxing mining products and exempting mining lands was the chief attraction on the boards. Senator Tawney spoke first, and made an admirable summary of the workings of the present law and the whole mining situation.

Senator Davis considered Mr. Leavitt's bill as an effort to break down the mining interests of the state.

At last the committee voted to indefinitely postpone by a vote of 24 to 18. Then the committee arose and Senator Leavitt moved to amend the report by recommending the bill to pass. Senator Donnelly tried to get in an amendment changing the present law by raising the tax on mining products from 1 to 5 per cent, but lost it by a vote of 20 yeas to 24 nays.

Senator Leavitt's motion to amend by recommending to pass was then carried by a vote of 24 yeas to 22 nays cast

HOUSE.

A portion of an hour was consumed in discussing a resolution offered by Mr. Starks providing that bills introduced at the request of the governor take the regular course and be not passed under suspension of the rules in future. There was a substitute for the resolution and an amendment, both recommending a method of dealing with local bills, but after a sharp lecture from Mr. Diment, who told the house that the only way to expedite business was to quit arguing and go ahead, the whole matter was laid over.

Mr. Wacek offered a resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of three to investigate as to whether or not the services of several of the clerks of standing committees can be dispensed with. The resolution was adopted.

Another bill killed was H. F. 667. Mr. Wahlund's bill to provide for a census of children of school age. It was defeated by a vote of 38 to 36, and Mr. Boyd gave notice to reconsider.

Mr. Lomen's bill relating to town plats, as amended by the judiciary committee, was also defeated by a vote of 38 to 46.

Saturday, April 11.

SENATE.

In committee of the whole Senator Leavitt's bill to repeal the mining tax law with several amendments tacked to it was recommended to pass.

At the opening of the session Senator Donnelly occupied twenty minutes of valuable time in pushing a resolution intended, as he said, to facilitate business. It suspended certain rules. But the sage could not persuade the senate that his plan was a good one and came out second best.

About two hours of the afternoon session were consumed in committee reports and first and second reading of bills. A large number of local bills were passed, among them Senator Stevens' bill putting the Ramsey county abstract office on a fee basis and providing that it shall be regularly inspected by the county attorney.

HOUSE.

There was a long debate over H. F. 573, Mr. Searle's bill to regulate the convict labor at the state reformatory at St. Cloud. The bill is for the purpose of relieving the quarry industries of that section and the stone cutters from being injured by competition with convict labor. Mr. Searle spoke in favor of his bill, and declared it was to meet the wants and wishes of his constituents. Messrs. Capser, Linnemann and Coates, from the same county (Stearns), also favored the passage of the bill, and Mr. Searle moved that it be recommended to pass.

Mr. Currier moved to increase the number of convicts allowed to be employed in stone cutting to 40 per cent.

After considerable discussion Mr. Diment offered a substitute as a compromise making the number 33 per cent.

Mr. Keyes thought it no matter how few or how many convicts were employed on any class of work, they would always be in competition with some interest.

On a division, Mr. Diment's substitute was adopted, and the bill was so amended

He Got a Holiday.

Chicago Herald: When I was about eleven years old I one day rebelled against going to school. I preferred the hook and the line and the babbling brook, and I said to father—a farmer—at the dinner table, "Can't I stay out of school this afternoon?"

"Oh, yes," he answered promptly, to my no small surprise.

I ate my dinner with keen anticipations of a jolly afternoon; but as we rose from the table father said, "Come with me. I need a little help in picking up the fallow ground!"

When the trees of the forest were felled they were cut into logs, rolled together and burned, after which it was necessary to pick up the charred sticks, and make smaller heaps for another fire. When father said, "Come with me" I knew what he meant, and I went.

At night I was black as a negro and sour as a lemon, and the next morning I said, "Father, I think I would rather go to school to-day."

"All right," he answered; "go ahead;" and after that I was careful not to ask for a holiday without some very good reason.

MISS BRISTLE'S LOVER.

The Fraudulent Count and the American Heiress.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ—Miss Bessie Bristle of Chicago; Count Bologna Macaroni of Rome, Italy.

SCENE—Parlor in the Bristle mansion.

Miss B. standing in centre of room holding a card.

Bessie Bristle—The Count! The Count! And at this hour in the morning! Goodness me! Doesn't he know anything? The Idea of his calling in the morning and me in this here horrible rig! Why shoot the luck! I hain't got on nothin' but this old neggeljay wrapper and my boots ain't laced and my face is all shiny. I know! I can fix that, though. [Takes powder bag and small mirror from her pocket and rapidly goes over face, leaving powder in splatches in her hurry.] And the shoelaces? Well, I know the reputation us Chicago girls have on feet, but I can keep mine under my dress. I guess. [Reads card.] "Count Bologna Macaroni, Loggia del Vatican, Roma." Wow! Ain't that great? And won't I paralyze the girls when I get him! Well, I guess yes. Mrs. Count Bologna Macaroni. Isn't that swell? I should say so. But—jimminy! that won't be it. A married woman isn't a Mrs. in Italy—she's a—a frau. No, that's Dutch or German or Milwaukean or something. Let's see. Where is my Italian language, anyway? What did I study it two years at Vassar for, dreamin' all the while of the day when I should catch on to a Count or a Vis Count or a Discount, or whatever they call them nobilities over there? Let me see! Let me see! Mademoiselle? No, that's the Spanish for Mrs.—Signor, Senorita, Senora? Senora! That's it. That's a bull's eye. That's what they'll dub me. Not Mrs. Bull's eye Macaroni, but Senora Countess Bologna Macaroni. Ain't that sweetly swell? But I don't care what they call me so long as I catch that Count. Wonder why he doesn't come in. I told the maid when she brought his card to show him right in here. I just wonder if he's just primping and twisting that filmy mustache in front of the hall mirror. [Tiptoes to the door as though peeping into hall.] Them foreigners are awfully vain. Huh! If I had such a slender and sickly upper lip adornment as his I'd call it "down in front" or "fuzz straight" or—er——Great greasy vaseline! Here he comes. [She turns as though having heard his approach, and, bowing and smiling, goes to meet him, the Count daintly taking the tips of her offered fingers and kissing her hand with great gallantry.] Oh! Good morning, Count! I'm so glad to see you. I thought it was one of the girls.

Count—Goota morn,' Missa Bris'! Goota morn.' It not one ofa da girls deesa time. It one ofa da boys. Ha! You see I catcha on queeck lika da measles. Da younga men in deesa place ver' slick—ver' nice—dey taka me toa da club—giva me da greata entertain' —dey maka me one ofa da boys. You looka da ver' sweet deesa morn.'

Bessie—Flatterer!

Count—No! no! Me no giva da flat' —me giva da straighta goods.

Bessie—The idea! Why, we girls of the Four Hundred(I'am the three hundred and ninety-ninth) always sleep very late in the morning and I'am barely up yet.

Count — Noa dif—noa, dif.' You hava da neck lika da snowa drift ona da Alps—you hava da teeth lika da piano keys—you hava eye lika da hazel nut—youa cheek hava da color lika da sun when him set ona da Bay of Naples—you hava da finger like nicea long, slender banan.' You hava da breath sweet lika da 'Mericano Beauty rose when him costa da two dol's each. Oh[forgetting himself]. you pleasea me da ver' much. When I looka up and seea you—when I playa da org'—

Bessie—Org!' Org!' [Aside—I believe he's a molar—I mean grinder (organ grinder) after all, and not a genuine Count. I musn't make a mistake. No Count doesn't count. I want a Count that counts. I'll find out what he is—Chicag' never gets left on Counts or World's Fairs.) My dear Count what do you mean? Are you musical?

Count—Sura, sure! (Aside—Va! Bada break! Mya tongue maka one slip ofa da lip.) I playa da org' in mya land, in da Italiano opera, and when da sweeta notes rolla forth—when da music enter mya soul, I get one far-off look ina my eye—one vision stand before my face—one dara, sweeta, face, with da angel eyes, with chestnut hair, soft lika da cobbaweb, with expression sweet, lika da Raphaello Madonna. Oh! caro mio, datta face belonga not in Italia—datta face belonga not in heaven—noa angel hava one face lika dat—it belonga in Chicag' —it belonga to you. Oh, if Satan owna datta face I would to him giva far it my owna soul. Oh, sweetaheart —Bessa Bris'—I lova you, I lova you. I know I notta worthy to touch your shoealace—buta——

Bessie(spreading dress out over her feet—Why Count—yes, you are[Aside] —Shoot the shoelace!] Please, dear, good Count, go on. You may fix the shoestring [he goes down on one knee and tremblingly fusses with the string] but please, please finish your remark. You were saying—?

Count—I lova you—be mya wife!

Bessie—Oh! [clutching her heart] but Countie, dear, this is so strange—so sudden. You cannot mean it. What! I, the poor wearer of no noble name, to bear a title and a coat of arms? This?—all this? And richer far than all the rest, your love; your precious, Romeoish Claude Melnottish love: pure, undefiled and unmercenary. Oh! —ah, it is a dream—a morning treasure-trove too honey sweet to be dispelled by the thought that papa may not give assent.

Count[drawing back]—Not giva da cent? Not giva da cent? Your papa? Him not giva da cent? (Aside—Va! Dat breaka me alla up!) Why, sweeta maid, your fath' one richa man.

Bessie—But, Count, you do misunderstand. Papa, of course, is very, very rich, and he would help us on to very tidy housekeeping, I've no doubt —but by assent I mean, dear, his permission to our marriage.

Count—Oh, sura, dat da ver' mucha dif'. You gave me one scare to make me think him losa his gold—buta, still, if him do losa him forutne, so mucha da bet'—dat giva me one chance to lenda him some.

Bessie—O sweet, O noble Count. This proves you love me for myself—myself. Oh, dear, delightful thought that thus a noble, titled man, of high intelligence, of manly beauty and surpassing grace, loves me for me alone—loves me—loves me—me only; and because of me, he loves! And we shall dwell——"

Count—In da land of da golden sun. In Boccaccioland where da fragranta spices filla da air, where da graceful macaroni grom—da land ofa da sunbeams—da land of da Capulets—da land of Tito and Romoia, of Romulus and Remus, of Cato, of Cæsar, of Dante, of Machiavell, of Titian, Michael Angelo—da land ofa music, where da birds warble da sweeta sonatas alla da year—da land where to live isa to love. Oh, sweetaheart, in my whitea castle bya da sea your life shall pass lika one sweeta dream of Paradiso.

Bessie—Sweet love, you paint a heaven for me in the contemplation of which my senses swoon. But hark!—my maid's knock at the door. [Goes to door.] What? A telegram? [Returns toward Count, opening message meantime.] But I believe I would prefer Chicago. Wouldn't you, dear?

Count—Any place ina da world with you, sweet pet. Buta—why Chicag'?

Bessie—Because, in Chicago, if we found we were not well mated, that we were not compatible—if our love grew cold, we would easily—oh, so easily—become divorced.

Count—Divorce? Divorce? Oh, deara one—you breaka my poor heart. [Bessie reads telegram and starts.] I lova you da tooa much—da tooa much—noa power in alla da world can ever make me want divor'——

Bessie—O God!—oh, misery! This telegram—quick! quick!!—water! And I just on the verge of glory! [Count brings water and revives Bessie from apparent faint.]

Count—Whatta da mat'? Whatta da mat'?

Bessie—Horrible! Horrible! But you will not forsake me, dear. I'm sure of that. [Smiling as through tears.] My poor, poor father!

Count—What? Railaroada smash? Your fath' gitta killed? Tooa bad! Tooa bad!! Dat maka me weep da redda hotta tears lika da teakettle. But you have da one gooda friend. I sticka to you lika cinch—I—

Bessie—Listen, dear, I know you love me truly, and that I count upon —but hear this dreadful news! [Reads]. "Pack up all your small valuables and meet me at the depot in one hour. I am cornered in a corner in wheat. Loss total. Creditors get all except what I can get away with. Your father,
P. I. G. BRISTLE.'.

Count (making for the door)—Gr-r-eata Scott! Grea whiz!! Wow!!! I maka one nar-r-r' escape. I goa back to my biz'—grinda da org'—sella da banan'—shina da shoe—doa da an't'ing—runna da barb' shop. [Exit.]

Bessie—Next! Ugh! I wish I hadn't let him touch me! Well that settles it! Charley gits a "yes" to-night without no further monkey business. [Curtain.]

The Tenors Were Terrified.

Some time ago, five "leading" vocalists, engaged for a tour through South America, met for the first time on board the ocean steamer in which their births had been taken, and in the course of coversation made the discovery that they were all tenors and members of the same company. Unable to conjecture what object the impresario could have had in view in providing himself with five tenors, they respectfully demanded an explanation of such unwonted lavishness in their particular line.

"Do not trouble yourselves, gentlemen, about my arrangements," replied the enterprising manager; "I know what I'm about perfectly well. Depend upon it, I shall want you all five. You will see, soon after you get across, that three, if not four of you will die of fever, and I shall be dependent upon the survivor, whoever he may be, for all first tenor parts. Experience in tropical and sub-tropical tours has taught me the necessity of providing against accidents of this description. Besides, please to consider what a splendid professional prospect I am opening out to at least one of your number. Gentlemen, I wish you a very good morning!"

Settling a Duel.

An amusing story used to be told of a wag who accepted a challenge to fight a duel. On the appointed day he sent word to his opponent to chalk on a board an outline of his (the challenged party's) figure, and if the challenger hit it he would consider himself wounded or dead, as the case might be.

This story may possibly have been originated from one talk of a certain irascible inn-keeper named Bardwell.

He was often at variance with his neighbors, and once he and a guest, having quarrelled, agreed to fight a duel. At the appointed hour the adversary appearred, armed with a gun. Bardwell loved a joke, and being very busy, said to him:—

"Tom, I'll tell you what I'll do; you go up and set up a board about my size and shoot at it, and if you hit it I'll acknowledge myself killed, and invite the whole crowd to dinner."

The ludicrous proposition made everyone laugh, and thus ended a farce.

TWO LOVERS.

Father and mother were dead, and Eddie and I—poor little 10-year-old Eddie—were orphans, all alone in the world.

To be sure we had an aunt, my father's sister, living in New York, and an uncle, mother's only brother, far away in England; but Aunt Somerville was rich and very proud. During papa's lifetime she had not cared to be intimate with us. I was not going to seek her after his death. She had not even attended the funeral, but had written a cold, informal letter instead, in which she asked no questions as to how we two were to be provided for, but washed her hands of all responsibility in the politest manner possible. As to Uncle Edward Gray (after whom Eddie had been named) I had never seen him, but mother had always spoken of him with so much tenderness and affection that I felt sure he was good and kind, and would gladly have appealed to him for protection and advice, in the first loneliness of my bereavement, if I could only have discovered where to write to him.

Papa had left us the pretty cottage we lived in, and after the funeral was over and everything was settled I found we had nearly $100 in money besides. And I was engaged to Alfred Carson, had been engaged to him for more than a year, and Alfred was prospering well and was the kind of a man who was sure to get rich some day, so there was no fear for Eddie or me.

This thought for the sure and safe provision of the child's wants reconciled me to the idea of my intended marriage as nothing else could have done. There should have been nothing needed to reconcile me to an engagement I had made of my own free will and wish, but there was, certainly was.

I had formed an engagement when I was little more than 16—too young and giddy to know my own heart rightly. Alfred had been visiting some neighbors of ours and had fallen in love with me. He was handsome and had that air of superiority to us young country folks which a knowledge of a city and city life somehow gives. Of course he was my first sweetheart.

His preference, very plainly shown, flattered me extremely; my girl friends envied me—I admired him: his high ways and fashionable clothes and experienced, world wise air and manner—in short, I believed myself deeply in love: and when, with my consent, he spoke to papa, and papa found him in every way a desirable match for me, we were formally betrothed, with the understanding, however, that we should not be married until I should reach the age of 18.

In the mean time Frank Snowden—dear old Frank, who had been my favorite chum and playfellow and champion when I was a little child—came home from Europe, where he had been sent to be educated and where he had remained for seven years. "Old Frank" I called him always, because he was so much older than myself, I being but 10 when he went away, while he was 17, and now, while I was just turned 17, he was near 25. I thought myself the happiest girl in the world when Frank came home.

For a time, that is—for a time. Alfred was in the city; he wrote to me quite frequently, but he had not paid me a visit for nearly three months. Somehow I did not seem to miss him, or to care for his long absence, or to think about the matter at all.

Frank and I went together everywhere. No one said anything to him about my engagement—it was not generally known, indeed; and besides we were such old friends; almost like brother and sister, probably no one thought anything of our intimacy. I intended to tell him myself. Each time we met I resolved to tell him, but something always kept back the words. I felt ashamed, afraid, grieved about it, but all the same I kept the knowledge from him. It was not fair to such an old and valued friend, I knew; it was not quite fair to Alfred either, perhaps, though I cared less about that, and still, while every day I resolved to give him my confidence, every day I deceived him anew, until at last something happened that brought out the truth in spite of me.

It was on a certain summer afternoon that I had walked down to the postoffice to mail some letters for papa, and bethought me to ask whether there were any for me. Just as I made the inquiry, who should come up but Frank, and having imprisoned both my hands in his own, took the missive the postmaster held out and handed it to me. It was from Alfred, and as Frank's eyes involuntarily caught sight of the masculine handwriting a look of surprise and resentment crossed his face. He released my hands, and walking along by my side bent upon me a sternly questioning glance, beneath which my eyes fell guiltily and I felt my cheeks burn red.

"I wasn't aware that you corresponded with gentlemen," he said presently, in an icy tone.

I couldn't answer. I hadn't a word to say. My heart swelled up in my throat and almost choked me. In that one moment I realized the mischief my half unintentional deceit had done; in Frank's angry, jealous eyes and cold, indignant tone I saw and heard the truth that he loved me; and the swelling joy of my own heart at the discovery—even in the midst of my shame and fear—told me another and still more startling truth—that I loved him.

If we had been in any private place I think I should almost—upon the impulse of the moment and under the influence of my penitence and love—have gone upon my knees to him to ask his pardon, but we were in the main street of the village.

When we had turned into a quiet, shady lane he said, not quite so harshly as before:

"Will you tell me who sent you that letter?"

I've often thought since how curious it was that I never once, in my innocent soul, disputed his undoubted right to question me or dreamed of further deceiving him. There had been no word of love between us, and I was the promised wife of another; but I stood like a criminal before his lawful judge, and prepared to give an account of myself to the only man whom my heart acknowledged as her master.

"The letter is from Mr. Alfred Carson," I said almost inaudibly. "A—a—gentleman—to whom I"——

I had intended to say bravely, "to whom I am engaged," but catching a glimpse of his stern, pale face my courage failed, and I substituted, "to whom I—write occasionally."

"In-deed!" with a concentrated bitterness, "to whom you write occasionally." His angry eyes fairly blazed with scorn as he repeated my words. "And pray by what right do you write to him? I love you. You know that, I presume?"

He paused impatiently, and I murmured breathlessly, "Yes!" I did know it—now, and couldn't have helped owning it to save my soul!

"Yes, and you love me! You know that, too, don't you?" Again he paused, and again I murmured "Yes" in spite of myself.

"And, knowing this, how dare you 'write occasionally' to him or any other man? Do you think I shall permit my future wife"— Again he paused, looked at me a moment, glanced quickly up and down the lonely lane, and caught me in his arms. "Forgive—forgive me!" he murmured, as I wept and sobbed on his bosom. "You made me so angry—so jealous, pet, and I never knew what it was to be jealous before. What a brute I was to get into such a passion! You do love me, don't you? There, don't cry any more—read the fellow's letter and then answer it and tell him you're engaged to be married to me, and that'll end the busines!"

A strange love making—a lordly sort of wooing. But I found no fault with it. I never dreamed of gainsaying a word he said, except where it was necessary for me to set him right; that I did honestly, though with a heavy heart.

"I wish I could tell him so," I said sadly, disengaging myself from his embrace and standing sorrowfully before him. "But that's impossible. I have been a foolish, miserably thoughtless girl and have brought suffering upon myself and him, and, worst of all, on you. You'll hate me when you know the truth, Frank. Long before you came back I was engaged to Mr. Carson—seriously—and with papa's consent, and—and—we're to be married—in about six months"——

My voice broke down, and I hid my face in my hands. He never answered a word.

Presently the silence became unendurable, and I looked up.

"Speak to me, Frank!" I cried, terrified and heart stricken. "If it is only to reproach me, speak to me!"

"Do you mean this?" he asked slowly.

I could only sob and weep for answer.

"You have been playing false to the man you are to marry and making a jest and a fool of me—of me, who trusted and loved you!"

He paused for an answer, but I made none. His tone grew deeper and more angry.

"I am glad to know the truth at last. I have been deceived; you are not the girl I thought you—not at all the sort of woman I should wish to marry. Mr. Carson need fear no rival in me—I don't envy his prospects. And as this interview is not of the pleasantest, and I might if I remained longer forget that I am talking to a young lady—good afternoon."

And raising his hat, with a slight, quick bow, he turned and disappeared down the lane, while I sank down among the long grass and weeds, weeping bitterly and feeling as if all the happiness and brightness of life were over, and all its care and pain and misery just begun.

I felt quite sure of it two months later, when, after a brief and sudden illness, poor dear papa died. "Don't put off your marriage, child," had been his earnest and often expressed wish, and he had even written Alfred to the same effect before he died, and "keep little Eddie always with you," he whispered almost with his parting breath. So that when Alfred's letter came—kinder and more affectionate than usual (he had been rather a negligent correspondent of late), in which he regreted his inability to attend the funeral, but spoke of papa's wishes as to our marriage, and announced his intention of coming down in a fortnight to make all necessary arrangements, it was with a feeling of sorrowful relief that I reflected: "I shall be able to obey papa's wishes at least. and Eddie's happiness will be secured, even though I have destroyed my own."

I had seen Frank only once since that wretched afternoon, and that was at my father's funeral. A gentle hand had taken mine, and a strong arm had supported me tenderly as I stood, almost convulsed with grief, beside the open grave. In my misery I forgot our estrangement, and as he led me back to the carriage and took a seat beside me I cried out impulsively, "Oh, Frank, my heart is broken!" and leaned my head upon his shoulder and wept and mourned there as if I was a child once more and he the old time champion and comforter.

He went with me home and remained till all the rest had gone. Then when we were alone he said to me:

"I leave this place to-morrow, Lilian, and I wanted to be sure, before going, that you are not in any want or difficulty. You are very young to be left without protection or advice, and if there is anything that I can do to serve you I should be glad to do it, for—for old friendship's sake."

I raised my eyes to his face and as I saw how it had changed—being older, graver, paler and more worn, and thought of how it was I—I who loved him, who had caused his suffering—suddenly the dear features swam before me and I could no longer see him for the mist of my repentant tears.

"If you could forgive me for the wrong I did to you," I cried.

But he stopped me:

"We will not even speak of that. It is over. Let me forget it if I can—think of me today as your old friend—a most true one—and believe that I wish to serve you if I can. May I know what are your plans for the future?"

"I have none," I answered in a burst of misery. "Poor papa had plans for me and left expressed wishes for me, which it is of course my duty to obey, if only for Eddie's sake." I rose and took Alfred's letter from my desk. "Mr. Carson's letter will explain if you will read it," I said. "It is nothing private."

He shrank at first as if from poison, but changed his mind and took it from my hand. "You don't keep it in your bosom or next your heart," he remarked quietly.

"No!" I cried, almost involuntarily, "I don't keep even the writer there, much less his letters!" Then, as I felt my face crimson under his searching eyes, I added, "So much the worse for me, since he is to be my husband," at which he turned his eyes away and read the letter.

"He says nothing about Eddie," he remarked, returning it. "What will you do with him?"

"Do with him?" I looked up, quite startled; "keep him with me always—it was papa's dying wish."

"But your—your husband may object."

"Then he will never be my husband," I answered, hotly. "Eddie is a delicate child; he would pine and sicken among strangers; I will not marry any man who wishes to take him from me!"

He was silent for a time, considering; then he said, "I don't see that I can serve you in any way at present, nor perhaps ever; but I will leave you my address in the city. If ever you need a friend send to me—not otherwise. Now, good-by."

He held out his hands. I gave him mine, and we stood for one moment looking into each other's eyes. He was leaving me, the man I loved perhaps forever. A thought flashed through my heart—I would not lose him! I put the card he had given me into my bosom. "I shall need it some day," I said.

He caught me in his arms. "Good-by," he said; "never send for me unless you really need me; I could not bear to see you that man's wife! Not that I envy him, for you don't love him; you are treating him worse than me! Good-by forever!"

After he was gone I cried a little while, but less bitterly than before. There was a gleam of hope in my heart that comforted me. That evening I devoted to dear little Eddie; next morning I wrote a long, long letter—the longest and most serious I had ever written in my life—to Alfred Carson.

I waited for the answer with feverish impatience; I went down to the postoffice every afternoon. One afternoon as I was returning, dispirited and sad, from a fruitless quest I saw him standing in our garden waiting for me. He had brought me in person a reply.

* * * * * * *

One month later saw a change indeed. I rented the cottage—it made me too sad to stay there without papa—for $80 a month; and with that sum in my possession, together with what remained of my hundred dollars, came over to New York and took two nice little rooms for Eddie and I to keep house in.

Then I took Frank's card of address, and wrote upon it my own and the words, "I need you," and put it in an envelope and sent it to him. That very evening he came.

He was evidently very much surprised and puzzled. "What does this mean?" he said, almost before he greeted me. "What are you doing in town? Why have you sent for me?"

I answered very quietly and demurely. I managed to appear calm and self possessed, though my heart beat as if it would choke me.

"I have sent for you because I need a friend, Frank. I want you to put me in the way of getting something to do. The rent of our cottage is not enough for us to live upon, though it helps, and—my marriage is broken off."

He sat down beside me instantly and took my hand—an expression of indignant scorn was on his face.

"Poor child!" said he; "and was this the fellow for whom you threw me over? Wouldn't take charge of the poor little boy, I suppose—the mean, contemptible scoundrel!"

"Whatever are you saying!' I cried, laughing. "You are not talking about Mr. Carson, surely; he has behaved most kindly."

"Kindly! What do you mean? Hasn't he broken his engagement?"

"Certainly not!" with emphasis. "But he has generously released me—at my own earnest entreaty—from a promise which I ought never to have made, and which it would have broken my heart to keep. He wasn't at all unwilling to set me free," I went on while Frank's arm stole around me, "when I explained to him that I had never really loved him."

"Did you happen to mention to him that you did love somebody else?" Frank asked demurely, while he drew me closer to his breast and my head sank on his shoulder.

"Yes," I whispered.

"And did he ask you who his rival was?" he queried.

"No," I said; "I don't believe he cared to know."

"I care," whispered Frank, bending over me. "There was a time when I thought you such a vain, thoughtless girl that I persuaded myself your heart was not worth having, but you have done just what was right by both your lovers, and shown yourself both brave and sincere. Such a girl deserves a good man's trust, and however indifferent Mr. Carson may be to your regard, I know how to prize it. Tell me, my darling, who is it that you do love?"

"You, Frank!" I whispered, and hid my blushes in his arms.

Poor papa's wishes were fulfilled to the letter, for my marriage was not postponed after all, and I kept Eddie always with me. We have both lived very happily under dear "Old Frank's" protecting love and care, and though I have been his wife for many years, I have never had cause to regret the choice I made between my two lovers.—New York News.

SUICIDE NOT HIS MOTIVE.

An Odd Proposition That Failed to Arouse an Attorney's Sympathy.

"Huh!"

Everybody seated at Edwin Corbin's table in the cafe instantly gave his whole attention to that talented young attorney from whom the ejaculation had come. It was his signal for informing those about him that he had a story to tell. Corbin is noted for his originality.

"Had an odd proposition made to me a few afternoons ago," he began. "I am used to listening to schemes. A considerable part of my business is putting such as may possess any worth upon a legal footing and giving them a start. Many a wild eyed one has been presented to me. This one would travel in the wild eyed class. I had received a note in the morning from the proposer. He was an old acquaintance of mine and the son of a prominent ex-governor. When he came at the appointed time he sat down and for several moments didn't speak.

"'The truth is,' he said after a while, 'I don't exactly know how to begin. I feel a great deal like the Irishman who, to get a good start, ran three miles to jump over a hill and then walked over it.'

"I bade him collect his thoughts," said Corbin. "He thanked me and did so.

"'I have a scheme,' he finally began, 'and if you are willing to go into it you can make $5,000 upon a small outlay and run absolutely no risk.'

"I told him the proposition seemed promising, and asked him to proceed.

"'Well,' he said, 'I am just sick of living. I've got absolutely no use for this earth.'

"I could understand by the bitterness of his tones that he was suffering from a severe case of the blues, but I motioned him to proceed.

"'Two nights ago I took what I had been told was a fatal dose of morphine,' he said. 'And let me tell you, Corbin, never have I been so surprised in my life as when on the next morning I woke up and found myself alive. When I recovered from my astonishment I was so mad I swore. There I had gone all through the hard part of suicide and failed after all. But I might have expected it, for I have always had the worst luck that ever fell to the lot of a mortal.'

"'I learned this morning that I had made a mistake in the dose and I procured another, a correct one this time, to take again,' he went on. 'Just then a thought occurred to me that possibly I might do a good deed while shuffling off the mortal coil and this is it: I haven't any money. But you have. Now I want you to pay the premium on a ten thousand dollar life insurance policy which I shall take out. The policy will be taken out in your benefit and you will receive the whole amount. But I want you to give $5,000 to my sister. You can keep the other five. Will you do it?'

"'How do I know you will carry out your part of the contract?' I asked, not a little nonplussed by the scheme.

"He looked hurt to think I should doubt him, but he assured me solemnly that he would certainly succeed this time. I tried to argue him out of the idea by showing him that no insurance company would pay a policy under such circumstances. But he was obdurate. Then I began to ridicule him by laying stress on the risk I ran in my not being assured that he would kill himself after I had paid the premium.

"'I will prove it to you that I shall,' he exclaimed.

"'How?' I asked.

"'Any way you like,' he replied.

"'Well, I'll tell you what you do,' I said. He jumped to his feet ready to give me proof. 'Go out into the hall, and when an elevator starts to go up you slip under it before the door is closed and drop to the bottom of the shaft. If you do that I'll believe you are in earnest.'

"Immediately he saw that I was making fun of him, and with an oath he grabbed his hat and rushed out of the office."

"Did you run after him?" some one asked.

"Not a step," replied Corbin.

"Why, he might have done as you said."

"No, he wouldn't," said Corbin. "He was blue. No doubt about that. But he was blue because he was busted. It wasn't suicide he had in mind. He simply wanted to work my sympathies for a tenner."—Chicago Post.

They Missed a Good Dinner.

Cold type cannot reproduce the flavor of the inimitable stories which a young business man of this city tells of a boarding house of days gone by where he took his meals for a season. The one which he tells with the keenest relish concerns the daily stew at noon time, of which the young men grew desperately tired. As a last resort a council of war was held upstairs one noon, and a youth was detailed to the back yard, by way of the kitchen, to look after a bicycle, and at the same time report as to the prospects of a stew for dinner.

The spy returned reporting a pile of soup plates on the kitchen table. With one accord the young men marched out to one of the down town eating houses and had a meat dinner. At tea the landlady took occasion to express her regret for their absence from the midday meal, informing them that she had a nice roast of lamb that day for their especial benefit.—Springfield Homestead.

She Pitied the Horses.

A sweet faced, elderly woman was encountered in a Broadway car the other day to whom the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals should send a medal. The car stopped in the middle of a block to take somebody on. Before it could start she rose, signaling to the conductor her desire to leave. A young woman with her remonstrated: "This is not our street, aunt," she said. "No, but we are within a block, and it will save the horses starting again." So they left. Everybody who gives the matter any thought or observation knows it is the strain to get a heavy car under way which wears upon the animals drawing it, but there are probably not many people who thus considerately seek to lessen the necessity at the expense of extra personal effort.—New York Times.

Walking in the Righteous Path.

Little Imogen's father is a minister, known far and wide for his goodness and benevolence. When Imogen was three years old she ran out of doors one day where her father had been walking through the snow. At once the little maid began trying to put her small feet in the large footprints. Her mother went to the door and exclaimed: "Why, Imogen, what are you trying to do?" "Oh," the little maid replied, "I'm walking in the steps of righteousness."—Boston Gazette.

Consternation.

A cyclist happened the other day to ride his machine through an out of the way village, when a little lad, seeing the phenomenon as it whisked past, rushed into the house in great alarm and cried:

"Mother, come out quick; there's a knife grinder gone mad!"—Exchange.

Miss Josa Prenevault is back from her visit with her sister at Lambert.

Mr. W. Lemay, of Lambert, is teaching his school quietly yet, in spite of all opposition.

Mr. W. went to the nest and when they saw him coming they flew away; he tried to catch them on the fly but missed them. How can you catch them anyway, Mr. W?

Miss Eda Champoux, the charming young lady of Badger Creek, visited the Falls Monday.

No choice.

Result of ballot for health officer for two years: J. F. Holmes received four votes.

Result of ballot for health officer for one year, W. A. Schreiter received four votes.

Result of second ballot for health officer for three years: Dr. John Watson received two votes and Dr. I. Lemieux two votes.

On motion council adjourned to meet in two weeks.

H. B. DAVIS,
Recorder.

Literary Note.

A story of unusual power and strange plot will begin in the May COSMOPOLITAN and run through three numbers: The story of a man, who three times in his life undertakes to paint Jesus. As a young painter full of health and life, full of jy, he puts on his canvas, a Greek deal of strength and beauty; just as the picture is on the point of completion, he learns to love a beautiful woman who returns his passion. After weeks at her feet he returns to his studio one day, and is filled with disappointment when he gazes upon the face of the Christ. Inspired by love he sets to work upon the image of a new Christ, who would be a God of Love. Again his picture is completed when the second great change come over his life. She whom he adores turns from him to give her love to the Prussian officer whose Greek beauty had been the model for his first picture. He must set to work again, and paint not only the beauty of the Divine Perfection, and the love that embraced all mankind, but the Sorrow of the Man God who suffered for our sins. The illustration are something unusual. Boyesen's story, illustrated by Wenzell, so well known through the pages of "Life"; Forbes' story, by Frederic Villiers, another famous war correspondent and artist, and Tourgee's story by Zogbaum. In addition to its strong fiction, this number contains a beautifully illustrated article on the Cleopatras of the Stage: another on New Philadelphia, for which the drawings were made by Harry Fenn. Some wonderful flesh-light photographs illustrate theunder ground workings of a Leadville Silver Mine. Kennels and Kennel Clubs, and Dr. Koch and his Lymph, by one who went to Berlin to study the subject, are two articles with numerous illustrations. (Price 25 cents. Cosmopolitan Aub. Farming a Sure Road to Prosperity.

Here in Polk county in northern Minnesota, when the fine days of spring come, when every breath drawn on any golden morning is as a balsam, when all rejoice and bask in the bright but not too fervid sun, when the modest little meadow lark catching up the beauty goes soaring and singing in the air, and myriad of other feathered creatures answer till the air is full of music, when dormant nature rouses from her sleep and the leaves and grasses bid each other a [illegible] happy new year—we here in Polk County, the very garden of rural paradise, are in the midst of beauty and blessings few appreciate. The farmer wakes from his winter reverie, looks after his implements, and soon is plowing the deep rich loam and seeding the grains that are to grow and produce more. Some years ago this Valley from one end to another was but unbroken land and not many years have elapsed, but we behold an altered scene, with thousands of homes, and inhabitants; thousands of schools and country churches which cities of no mean importance dot it here and there.

All this land was taken under the land laws and much of it cost its honest landlord nothing more than a few dollars for the filing. Is it worth anything now? Indeed, the husbandman whose faculties have not been dormant, who has labored faithfully, may answer with a smile that it is. Every 160 acres taken ten years ago or less, broken and worked prop erly, improved by decent barns and granaries and houses, is worth a comfortable sum, ranging from $1,000 to 2, 3, 4, 5 and up. This accumulation of capital was accomplished while the family lived comfortably. Perhaps in the early days schools were scarce and poor. But they are improving and now no place in this Red River Valley does a farmer's child need go without that fundamental instruction which was in several cases the extent of the education of illustrious ex-presidents. The ground once broken, the home once built, no one can gainsay the fact that the diligent, prudent farmer is on the high road to prosperity if not riches. What a difference between him and the common laborer. They both toil, perhaps years, for their daily bread, but while the city laborer sees his hard earned wages vanish at the demands of a relentless landlord, for groceries, fuel, oil and dress, the farmer watches tranquilly his broad fields, sees the waving grain, a surety of bread, hears the satisfied grunt of the prospective ham and bacon, drinks rich milk that yet tastes of sweet meadow buttercups, gathers eggs that still are warm; spends not his last dollar for clothes of latest cut,—and all this time the farmer's land is improving, growing in value every day. All that is necessary is perseverance and pluck. The days of poverty (though the term is hardly admissable) soon pass and herds of cattle, horses, sheep and swine grow up to swell the value of his possessions. The bountiful earth yields an ever increasing supply of cereals and roots; nature aids him and while yet his city fellow workman trudges on in his ceaseless weary round, living from hand to mouth, he is an independent free holder, with the least anxieties, the least troubles, the least mental discipline of any man on earth. All through this Valley are farms yet to be had for small considerations—the remnants of shiftless proprietorship. Come, then, ye disconsolate, to the Red River Valley, where grow the finest crops, where failure is unknown, where bleet meek sheep, neigh sleek horses, herd fine cattle; where live and love and prosper the happiest people on earth.

How to be a Happy Old Maid.

To have so much to do that there is no time for morbid thoughts.

To never think for a moment that you are not attractive, and to make yourself look as charming as possible.

To be so considerate of the happiness of others that it will be reflected back to you as from a looking-glass.

To never permit yourself to grow old, for by cultivating all the graces of heart, brain and body, age will not come upon you.

To believe that a life-work has been mapped out for you; that it is near you, and to do that which your hands find for you.

To member that the happy old maid is the one remember of a family who, not having any other claims on her, can be God's own sunshine to those in sorrow or in joy.—From the Ladies Home Journal.

Hekla's Passengers.

New York "Sun" April 7th, '91.

Aboard the Thingvalla Line Steamship "Hekla", that arrived at this point on Sunday, there were 700 Scandinavian immigrants, healthy, harty pithy, and light haired young people of both sexes. They were bound for the West, even for Dakota, where they will take up land and begin a new life as American farmers, raising grains, fruits, and cattle for their own nourishment and for the service of mankind. They were well and warmly dressed as they marched ashore, and they looked as if they possessed all necessary sense, reason, and practical qualities. There were among them no paupers, or felons, or lunatics, or contract laborers, or persons afflicted wtih lathsome diseases and it was hardly necessary for the inspection agent at the Barge Office to take a look at them in order to see that they belonged to the class known as "desirable immigrants."

They had come to America as hundreds of thousand of other Swedes and Norwegians have come during the past forty years; they have struck out West to take landas those others did, and they are pretty sure of enjoying the prosperity that so many of their countrymen already enjoy here. To them let bountiful nature give good crops, fine breeds of cattle, and pleasant long lives.

Now, if all our other immigrants from Europe, including those from Itaiy, Poland, Hungary, and Russia, were as spirited as these Scandinavians, and would follow their example, how much better it would be for them than crowding into cities, struggling for daily hash and spending years in complaining.

Vick—Michigan.

It has been decided that the $1000.00 prizes offered on Vegetables by JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, will be contested for at the fair to be held at Hillsdale, Michigan Septr. 28-Oct. 2, 1891. At the Illinois State Fair last year over 200,000 people witnessed this exhibit, which filled a tent 60x90 feet, and it was conceded on all sides to be the chief attraction. There were over 1000 entries, coming from every State and Territory in the Union, besides several from the Canadian Provinces.

The managera of the Hillsdale Fair have already arranged for a large extension to be added to the same tent that was used at Peoria, making it 120 feet long, and eveything will be done to make this the largest and grandest exhibition of the kind ever seen. There are four prizes on each of the following eight varieties of Vegetables—first $65, second $30 third $20, fourth $10, making in all $1000, which is very large andliberal:

Cabbage, for the largest and best 3 heads All Seasons.

Celery, Golden Self-blanching, 12 plants, largest and best blanched.

Potatoes, best peck, Vick's Perfection.

Tomatoes, largest and best 12, McCullom's Hybrid.

Musk Melon, largest and best 3 Irondequoit Melons.

Onion, largest and best 12 Danvers Yellow Globe.

Mangel, largest 1 Golden Giant.

The cost to enter for the prize is so small we cannot see how the Messrs. Vick make any profit; for instaice, one packet of either of the following will entitle a person to enter the competition.

1 pkt Cabbage, All Seasons .....10 cts
1 pkt celery, Golden self-blanching, 10cts
Potatoe, Vick's Perfection, 1 lb, 30cts.: 3 lbs, $1; peck, 50c; bus., $1.60; bbl, $4
1 pkt Cauliflower, Vick's Ideal....50cts.
1 pkt Tomato, McCullom's Hybrid, 10cts.
1 pkt Musk Melon, Irondequoit, 15cts.
1 pkt Onion, Danvers Yellow Globe, 5cts
1 pkt Mangel Wurzel, (Beet), Golden Giant, 10cts

Select one or more that you would like to grow and enter for a prize. Be sure and state, in your order, that you intend entering for competition. Write JAMES VICK, SEEDSMAN, Rochester, N. Y., for Vick's Floral Guide, which will give full particulars.

FOR RURAL READERS.

SOME INSTRUCTIVE POINTS FOR THE AMERICAN FARMER.

The Farmer's Horse and How to Raise Him--Plant Carrots--Overfeeding Fowls --The Cruel Check Rein.

It is seldom that the farmer raises a horse with the intention of wearing him out. The greater part of the horses raised on the farm are worked till they arrive at a salable age and then sold to go to some of the large cities. I would say, then, the farmer's horse would be the breed or kind of a horse that he could do his farm work with and sell the most readily and for the highest average price. This being the case we will have to adopt one of the many draft breeds. As to which of the draft breeds is best calculated for the farm and at the same time commands the highest price I will leave for the reader to decide for himself. For my part I would prefer the Clydesdale.

To raise a good horse we must have good stock to breed from, and then follow with plenty of good feed and good care. But we do not all have good mares to breed from, and many of our farmer's, more especially those who are just starting in the business haven't got the means to purchase an approved brood mare. Under these circumstances we must use the best we have, breeding to the best horse we can find. Don't breed to an inferior or low grade horse just because he is $5 or $10 cheaper, or rather lower in price, as the service of a good horse is cheaper at any reasonable figure than an inferior horse for nothing. There are few neighborhoods where there is not a good draft stallion, and if we would only patronize the good ones there would be more of that sort and fewer of the inferior sort. But we must not only breed from the best, but we must judiciously feed and care for the young stock. Give plenty of bone and muscle producing foods, warm shelter in cold weather and plenty of pure water. Don't forget to handle the colts; tie them up, teach them to have confidence in you—in short, be on general good terms with the colts and you will have no trouble when you come to put them to work. Raising good horses is both a pleasant and a profitable business, while the opposite is true of raising inferior ones.

Treatment of Sick Animals.

American Dairymen: It is not always easy for a farmer to determine just what treatment is best for a sick animal, while educated veterinarians are sometimes in doubt what course to pursue. It is not strange that farmers who have had no opportunity to study the symptoms and treatment of disease are perplexed when they find some of their animals are sick. There is one thing, however, that is always safe to do. That is to isolate the effected animal at once, If the disease is contagious it is a matter of great moment. If it proves to be only a simple malady, the removal of the sick creature from the others can do no harm, while it will give better opportunities for care and nursing and will greatly hasten recovery. If the disease is contagious, prompt removal may prevent its spread. Oftentimes whole flocks of sheep or herds of cows have become diseased, when the immediate removal of the animal first to be effected would have entirely prevented the spread of the disease. In marked cases of sickness a competent veterinarian should be called as soon as possible. But the first thing to be done, whether the case appears to be severe or mild, is to put the sick creature into a stable by itself and make it as comfortable as possible.

Weather Vanes for Farmers.

American Cultivator: Where a bright, well kept weather vane surmounts the barn or other convenient out building it gives an air of neatness, thrift and prosperity that really makes the farm more valuable. The weather vane never is put upon an old, dilapidated and unpainted barn. That is another point in its favor, for the painting and repairing of buildings are jobs that most farmers are equal to if they would only try, and in doing this they would develop powers that will be neeful to them on other lines. The weather vane has its practical as well as its sentimental side. Nearly half the talk at most breakfast tables is about the weather, and a vane seen from the window enables the family to talk intelligently on this subject. The direction of the wind may be learned otherwise, it is true; but we sincerely pity the man whose common means of learning how the wind is blowing is to sift coal ashes near the back corners of the house. The wind in such places is too variable to be depended upon, and at each change is apt to suggest unedifying thoughts, if not unreportable expressions.

Plant Carrots.

Plant some carrots this year, if you have never done so before. Some of them you will probably be able to sell at from 50 cents to $1 per bushel, according to their scarcity and your location. What you can not sell will make an excellent and profitable addition to the feed of the horses, cows and colts through the winter. A few pounds fed to the cows each day will go far toward making the fine "butter color" that it is so desirable, yet often so hard to attain in the winter. Experienced cultivators get eighty bushels per acre. If you can grow half as many they should not cost more than 10 cents per bushel, and will be worth very much more than that as an addition to the feeding ration. Sow the seed rather thickly in drills, and thin out with a narrow-bladed hoe, so as to leave the roots about three inches apart. The latter method will not give as nice, smooth roots for market, but will give as good a yield, quite as valauble for feeding, and will greatly reduce the labor of thinning. Use the stump-rooted or half-long sorts, as the labor of digging is not so much as the care with the longer varieties.

Butter Should be Brine-Salted.

There are two strong reasons why butter should be brine-salted while it is in the granular condition, says Hoard's Dairyman. First, that the influence of the salt may disengage the caseous matter from the fat, so that it can be easily washed out; and second, that the granule, of butter may be enveloped in strong brine, and the salting nearly done, so that far less working of the butter will be necessitated, than is the case when there is considerable caseous matter left in it, and the salt is all to be worked through it, to make it as evenly distributed through the mass as possible. But it takes more salt? True, for the first time butter is salted that way; and subsequently, too, if the brine that comes away is thrown away. But if it is saved and clarified by standing, it will not take much more salt that way than by the old method. But even if it does take more salt it pays.

Overfeeding Fowls.

Many beginners in poultry-keeping fall into the error of overfeeding their fowls. Even a little overfeeding continued for some length of time is far more injurious than underfeeding. It causes indigestion, resulting in a drooping, morbid condition of the whole system and finally enlargement of the liver and sudden death. Fowls thus overfed will give but few if any, eggs, are subject to the attack of any malignant disease floating in the air, and are a decided loss generally. Fowls should be fed moderately, and it is always an excellent plan to scatter their dry feed in the hay or straw litter in the yard or on gravelly places, where they will be compelled to scratch for it. This will insure a reasonable amount of muscular exercise for their legs and body, and help them as much as anything else to keep them in a healthy condition, and profitable development.

The Cruel Checkrein.

Do away with the checkrein. The head should be free from restraint and carried naturally. The horse will not tire so quickly, and the convenience at watering troughs is great. A horse looks as well with head in natural position, and often better, and is far more comfortable. A horse with head free can draw a load more easily and increase the leverage by lowering his head. A tight check will almost bring on paralysis in the neck, and it must be exceedingly painful to keep the muscles and cords strained to one tension all the time. It is cruel.—Youth's Companion.

Dairy Items.

It is the quality of the butter that fixes the price.

In butter-making it is sometimes more in the dairyman than in the breed.

Cleanliness, industry, and common sense are most important facts in successful dairying.

Shade and pure water in summer and warm, comfortable quarters in winter are essential to success in dairying.

When mixing bran with the feed for milk cows it will be a good plan to scald well, as this tends to cook the feed.

Dairymen should push the point of improvement by lessening the number of cows and increasing the yield per capita.

By raising calves only from the best milkers, bred to thoroughbred milking strains, dairymen could, without increasing the investment either in time or labor, add fully one-half to their income.

There is one dairy ration that may be used to advantage everywhere and under any circumstances or conditions. It costs nothing, but yields much pleasure and profit, simple and compound. It consists of gentleness, kindness—to be given in large quantities, morning and evening, and especially at milking time.

Farm Hints.

As a rule the peach bears too much top. Thin it out.

Try and make two bushels grow this year where one grew last year. Culture will do it.

Not one farmer in a hundred knows as much about grass as he should. Make a study of grass this season.

Dairy, poultry and potatoes make a first rate combination for a small farm—anywhere from ten to thirty acres.

Try and induce the young people to make close observation of the birds and "bugs."

The farmer who raised a superior animal or product need not search for a market. He can find it at his door.

A farmer should be a good judge of butter if he wishes to avoid sending an inferior article to market. There are farmers who honestly sell their butter and guarantee it as good, when in reality they disappoint their customers unintentionally.

BRIGHT SPARKS OF WIT.

HUMOROUS READING FOR YOUNG AND OLD.

Two of a Kind, Almost--The Accommodating Drummer--A Different Kind--The Height of Inquisitiveness.

Two of a Kind--Almost.

He passed down the aisle of the car to the seat occupied only by a man wearing a weed on his hat and there halted and sat down, and every passenger thought it a funny thing that two men, each a widower, should thus be brought together. At least one of the widowers also thought it funny, for after a bit he turned and queried:

"Your wife dead?"

"Yes."

"So's mine. Yours die of fever?"

"Yes."

"So did mine. Loving, faithful, and economical?"

"Yes."

"So was mine. Broke you up, didn't it?"

"Yes."

"So it did me. Couldn't eat nothing for half a day. Have a big funeral procession?"

"Yes."

"So did I. Counted thirty-one buggies and wagons. Got a gravestone up yit?"

"No,"

"Neither have I. Death is an awful sad thing, ain't it?"

"Yes,"

"But we must make the best of it. We cannot help the dead by mourning. Got your eye on a second wife?"

"No, sir!" was the indignant reply.

"How long's your wife bin dead?"

A year."

The other picked up his valise from the floor and vacated his seat and as he started for the car ahead he said:

"Stranger, I thought we was two of a kind, but I diskiver that I'm wrong in my figgers. One of us tells the truth, and the other is a gaul darned liar, if I die for it! Good day!"—New York Sun.

The Accommodating Drummer.

When a drummer has made up his mind to sell a merchant goods, the merchant might as well make up his mind to buy. A Dallas merchant refused to buy any whisky from a St. Louis liquor drummer.

"It's not worth while showing me your samples," said the merchant in a very determined manner; "I have no cellar to store any wine in; even if I wanted to buy."

The drummer put up his samples, and disappeared. Half an hour afterwards he burst into the merchant's counting room, his face radiant with joy.

"Allow me to congratulate you. Everytning is arranged."

"What's arranged?"

"All about the cellar. I have hunted you up a cellar, and rented it for you at $40 a month.

A Different Kind.

"It always sort o' makes me feel sad and down-hearted to read about the prodigal son in the Bible," said Farmer Silkens to his male offspring, who was home on his summer vacation.

"Y-a-a-s."

"Yaws," echoed the old man, as his lips curled contemptuously, "he came back and says honorably and flat footed, 'I've done wrong an' I want another chance.'"

"Y-a-a-s."

"Yaws; he didn't come back to the farm pizenin' the very butterflies with the smoke of his siggereets an' say, 'Pops, ole boy, I'm dead broke; couldn't you let me have a twent' to keep up my end with the fels at the club?' Not much he didn't."

And the old man heaved a sigh and went out to feed the hogs.—San Francisco Wasp.

Very Alarming.

Clara (with emotion): "George, are you sure you will always love me?"

George (fervently): "While life lasts, my own."

Clara (suppressing a tear): "George, if trials and tribulations should come?"

George (amazed): "My heart is yours alone, my love, and always will be."

Clara (sobbing): "George, are you sure, perfectly sure, that nothing—nothing at all could cool your affection."

George (thoroughly alarmed): "My gracious! What's happened? Has your father failed?"

Clara (hysterically): "Worse—far worse,"

George (much relieved): "Tell me all, my angel; I can bear it."

Clara (with an heroic effort): "George, I've got a—a boil coming on my nose."

The Market was Manipulated

Visitor—Your little boy doesn't seem to be very cheerful. Isn't he well?

Broker—Yes, he's well enough; but he is feeling pretty blue just now. You see, there was a great drop in leather this morning.

Visitor—Bless me! You don't mean to tell me that child knows anything about the market?

Broker—Well, perhaps not generally speaking, but you see the particular leather that dropped this morning was his mother's slipper.

The Height of Inquisitiveness.

A traveler went to a hotel, and was about to enter his name in the strangers' book when an insect, that shall be nameless, crawled over the page. To throw down the pen, pick up his luggage, and rush madly from the scene was the work of a moment, exclaiming as he went—

"I have had some experience of these creatures in my lifetime, but when they come looking in the strangers' book to see what room a traveller is going to occupy—that is more than I can stand."—Nurnberger Blatter.

Modified Views.

Mr. Nocaste (hotily)—"It's a shame, an outrage, a menace to American institutions, for one man to have a million dollars. Think of the harm he can do with it. Think of the power he wields."

Mr. Fortymillion—"That's so. I guess I'll have to change my will. Having no relatives, I had concluded to divide my wealth among my friends and acquintances, and as I left you a million——"

Mr. Nocaste—"Em—er—a good deal depends on the man, you know."—New York Weekly.

A Touchy Editor.

Some editors are very touchy. One of them was a column short, so told a member of his staff to write an article of that length.

"What shall I write about?" asked the member wearily, for he wanted to get home.

"Oh, write an article on 'Great Plagues,'" replied the editor.

So the member sat down and straightway wrote an article entitled "Great Plagues: Editors." Result—instant dismissal.

Didn't Belong to Them.

Conductor of street car picked up a coin—Has any gentleman dropped a coin?

Chorus of passengers—Yes! Yes! I have!

Conductor—Was it a $5.00 gold piece?

Chorus of passengers—Yes! Yes? it was!

Conductor displaying the coin—Well, then, I guess this $10 gold piece don't belong to any of you, and I'll keep it.—West Shore.

A Queer Story.

"I heard a queer story about that mountain over yonder from our native driver to-day."

"What was that?"

"A young lady and gentleman went out for a walk on that hill; they went up higher and higher, and—never came back again."

"Dear me! what became of the unhappy pair?"

"They went down on the other side."

A Family Affair.

Rich Uncle—"You might as well stop mooning about Miss Beauty. She hasn't been in love with you after all. She's been after the money she thought you would inherit from me."

Nephew—"Impossible! Why do you think so?"

Rich Uncle—"I have proposed to her myself and been accepted.—New York Weekly.

Not That Kind.

Mrs. Youngwife: "I want a nice ham, please."

Shopman: "Yes, ma'am. I can strongly recommend this one; it's well cured."

Mrs. Youngwife (in alarm): "Oh, don't give me one that has had anything the matter with it, even if it is cured now! Let me have a perfectly healthy one, please!"

Truth is Mighty.

Big man (savagely)—"Did you say I didn't know enough to last over Sunday?"

Big man hastily, —"Never mind. It's true."—Street and Smith's Good News.

A continued story is rendered the more readable by "leaving off in an interesting place," but this very comman literary procedure may be overdone. One instalment of a story recently published in a French newspaper, for instance, ended in the following startling way:

"Upon hearing this, the young girl, rendered hopeless and indifferent to the world, allowed herself to fall negligently from the fifty-story window.

"(To be continued next week.)"

This situation was evidently borrowed from a continued story once written by Artemus Ward, entitled, "The Fair Inez." In it the heroine was left, at the end of one instalment of the story, falling from the top of a tall tower to the earth. She had dropped about one-half the distance when the story was interrupted, "To be continued in our next."

In the next number a farmer very opportunely passed beneath the tower with a load of hay, upon which the fair Inez fell without injury.

Still another way of continuing a story is to break it off just where it happens to come, without reference to what the situation may be. This method has been satirized by another humorist, who asserts that a story in a German periodical was broken off in the middle of one of the long German verbs. Not all the verb could be got into the first number. The interest of the foreign reader, at any rate, was heightened by his desire to know in what combination of letters the word could possibly bring up.

Looking Out For a Rainy Day.

A recent letter from Europe described the frugality of Queen Christina of Spain, who is laboring under the hallucination that she may one day be brought to proverty, and is consequently scraping together every penny she can. She even borrows small coins of the pages about the place and forgets to pay them, and the other day she was caught selling 14 pairs of her shoes at 4 cents a pair. What a picture of royalty for the snobocracy of America to contemplate! Nevertheless, Christina may be wise in her day and generation, for these be evil times for royalty, and a sudden change from the luxury of a palace to the pinch of poverty is not impossible. Such a thing has happened in Spain before. An ex-queen need never go hungry, however, so long as the dime museum remains a popular institution in America.—Philadelphia Press.

Not Right.

Those who undertake to correct the speech of their fellow-mortals sometimes get unexpected results.

"Bridget," said a young housekeeper, who was somewhat fresh from college, "it would be useless for me to disguise the fact that your ignorance of grammar is very marked. Let me try to correct you. For instance, does it sound right for me to say, 'Bridget, you've been a-settin' in the drawin'-room?'"

"No, ma'am" said Bridget, frankly, but wih evident surprise; "no, ma'am, it don't sound right, but I were only a-settin' there the mather of a half-hour or so wid my cousin Terence, who is just over. Is'pose that second girl has been a-tattlin'."—Exchange.

False Promises.

Of the giganic host of advertised remedies for dyspepsia, not one in ten is effective. A bright exception is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a stomachic without fault, sure, speedy and thorough. Nor is it less efficacious for constipation, billiousness, sick headache, nervousness, debility, kidney troubles and rheumatism.

"Johnson's Anodyne Liniment prevented my death from bronchitis," writes an ardent friend.

"Love is a devouring flame," the poet says, It's a pity it doesn't burn up most of the love-letters that are written, too.

"German Syrup"

A Throat and Lung Specialty.

Those who have not used Boschee's German Syrup for some severe and chronic trouble of the Throat and Lungs can hardly appreciate what a truly wonderful medicine it is. The delicious sensations of healing, easing, clearing, strength-gathering and recovering are unknown joys. For German Syrup we do not ask easy cases. Sugar and water may smooth a throat or stop a tickling—for a while. This is as far as the ordinary cough medicine goes. Boschee's German Syrup is a discovery, a great Throat and Lung Specialty. Where for years there have been sensitiveness, pain, coughing, spitting, hemorrhage, voice failure, weakness, slipping down hill, where doctors and medicine and advice have been swallowed and followed to the gulf of despair, where there is the sickening conviction that all is over and the end is inevitable, there we place German Syrup. It cures. You are a live man yet if you take it. ⑲

CONSUMPTION.

I have a positive remedy for the above disease; by its use thousands of cases of the worst kind and of long standing have been cured. LAURA GRAHAME.

BY VIRGINIA FORREST.

Laura stood where they had left her. Walter's grave adieu, and her cousin's gay farewell, still rang upon her ears; and Grace's warm kisses still burned upon her lips; she returned their farewell with her usual smiling dignity, and stood motionless watching their retreating forms until the trees hid them from her eyes. Gradually the smile faded from her lips, and a look of deep, settled sorrow, clouded her young face; the easy, dignified attitude was lost in the drooping figure and dejected expression. We will leave her thus, lost in painful reverie, and sketch for our readers her previous history.

Laura Grahame was left an orphan when only three years of age; her father died of consumption, and her mother soon followed him to the grave. Mr. Danvers, her mother's brother, adopted the orphan, and no parents' care could be more tender than her uncle and aunt lavished upon the little Laura. Her father owned large estates, which now became the property of the orphan.

When she was about ten years old, her uncle and aunt removed there, with Laura and their only child—Grace, then just seven years of age.

They had been but one year in their new home, when Mrs. Danvers was taken dangerously ill, and the physicians soon pronounced her case hopeless.

It was a darkened room, in which no sound, save the low breathings of the invalid, and the stealthy movements of the old nurse, could be heard. Laura sat by her aunt's side, holding her fevered hand in one of her own cool ones, while the other was pressed upon the invalid's burning brow. A strange feeling of awe, a vague presentiment of evil, kept her silent.

"Laura," said Mrs. Danvers, in a low, quiet tone.

"I am here, dear Aunt Emily. What can I do for you?"

"Nothing, darling. My poor child, you have lost your own mother; and now I, who have tried to fill her place, am about to leave you too."

"Oh, aunt, how can I do without you?" sobbed the child, all her long-restrained greif bursting forth.

"You have been a good, dutiful child, Laura, darling, and a great blessing to me; now, you must be a double daughter to your uncle George, and a dear elder sister to my Grace."

"Oh, if I were but older. I would be her mother, as you have been mine!"

"You are old enough, Laura, to exert a great influence over her. She loves you fondly, and you can, by example and affection, lead her to good or evil. You are serious and thoughtful beyond your years, while Grace is light-hearted and gay—but affectionate and frank. Gently guide her Laura, by love, as I would wish her to go were I here."

"I will, I will, dear aunt! My own gratification and interests shall always give way before her good."

"Poor Laura! you are young enough to still need a mother's care yourself; but I trust her to you. Remember, she has only you and her father!"

Faithfully did Laura keep the promise made to the dying. Young as she was, she understood the obligations it imposed upon her; and, as she had said, her own interests always gave way before her cousin's. Laura's tasks were learned with double diligence that, when Grace needed assistance in hers, it should be ready for her. There was a warm love between these two motherless ones, that nought but death could destroy.

When Laura was about nineteen years old, there came to that part of the country, for his health, a young man, in whom Mr. Danvers was much interested. His father had been for many years Mr. Danvers's partner in a large mercantile establishment; and Walter Elliot, on the death of his own father sought and found a firm friend in his former partner. He was a handsome, intelligent young man, a barrister; but, by too close application to his books, he had injured his health severely, and the physicians ordered change of air. An invitation from Mr. Danvers to pass some months with him, was gratefully accepted; and Walter was expected every day.

It was a bright clear day in the early part of November, when Walter, pale and weary, arrived at his friend's house. Grace was spending a few weeks in another town with Mrs. Ellis, an esteemed friend, Mr. Danvers was taking his daily ride, and Laura was alone to receive him.

The ride, and the exertion of getting from the carriage, were too much for the invalid; and he fainted at the door. Laura, terrified at his death-like appearance, stood watching, while the servants carried him into the parlor, and hastened away to find restoratives. She bent over him, parted the hair from his high white forehead, and assisted in bathing his face, while her whole frame trembled with terror.

When Walter recovered conciousness, the first object that met his gaze was the pale face of his hostess, whose eyes were fixed with deep pity upon him. He tried to thank her, but she placed her hand on his lips, whispering, "Lie still, and don't try to talk; the nurse will stay by you, while I give orders about your room.

Walter's fainting fit was but the beginning of a long illness; he was taken to his room, and for seven weeks did not leave it. Laura insisted upon sharing the fatigue of nursing him; she it was who prepared his medicines and cooling drinks, and, in his delirium, placed the cloths wet with cold water upon his head, while the nurse who liked to reign supreme in the sick-room, sat watching, with a mixture of admiration and jealousy, the fair usurper of her office.

Walter had been delirious for several days: but he lay one afternoon in a quiet sleep, from which the doctor thought he would awaken in his senses. Laura took a book and sat by the side of the bed, to be near when he wished for anything; while the nurse sat by the window. Walter at length slowly opened his eyes, and fixed them upon the fair reader, who, absorbed in her book did not see him. He noted all the maiden's beauties—the rich, black hair banded smoothly off her high, white forehead, the regular features, clear, dark complexion, long, jetty eyelashes, that now drooped over the large, black eyes; the tall, noble figure, tiny hand, and beautifully rounded arm—all were perfect. He lay watching her for some moments; but the nurse, finding he was awake, bustled up to the bed, and Laura withdrew. From that day he grew rapidly better, and many happy hours were spent in that sick room. Laura read to him, sang to him, and long conversations there were between these two—conversations, during which the young girl's heart was gradually passing into the possession of another. What wonder that Walter fancied himself in love with the fair girl, who thus devoted her time and talents to his comfort and entertainment? He found her presence would convert that sick-room from a prison into a paradise.

At last, one afternoon, when the nurse was preparing his evening, repast, he won from the happy, blushing girl a promise to accompany him to his home, in the spring, as his bride.

When Laura sought her room that night, her cheek was flushed, her eyes sparkled, and her heart throbbed quickly with excess of happiness. Fastening her door, she knelt and thanked heaven for the new joy bestowed upon her. Laura's was an earnest, thoughtful nature, and all emotions left an indelible impression upon her heart—she was not one to part with her love lightly—but once given, it could not be recalled.

Walter was now well enough to be out, and Grace was expected home daily.

Laura was seated in her room, working, when her cousin burst in upon her. Let us pause a moment to describe Grace Danvers. She was a most charming combination of blonde and brunette beauty. Her eyes were dark hazel, shaded with black brows and lashes; while her hair was a light yellowish brown, falling in a profusion of shining curls on her shoulders; her features were regular, and her complexion pure red and white; her figure was petite, but most exquisitely rounded, while her hands and feet were tiny as a fairy's.

"Dear Laura!" she cried, as she sprang into her cousin's arms, "I am so glad to be home again! So I hear you have been having a sick knight here while I was gone: long letters from a cousin of mine not a mile off, full of a handsome squire most dolefully ill, reached me. I saw him at the gate; and instead of a pale, interesting youth, he struck me as being in a most stupid state of health. Lost your heart, Laura—eh?"

"Nonsense, Grace! You are wild with spirits. How did you leave Mrs. Ellis and Fanny?"

"Well—everybody well! But here comes Mr. Elliot up the avenue; you must introduce me."

And, bounding across the room, the gay beauty smoothed her curls, arranged her collar more to her satisfaction, and announced her readiness to be presented to Walter.

The young man gave a start of delighted surprise when his eyes fell upon Grace. Her pale blue dress, which was cut so as to leave her falling shoulders and round white arms bare, set off to the utmost advantage her exquisite complexion and golden curls; her drive, and the excitement of coming home, gave an additional tinge of color to her cheeks, and her eyes sparkled with animation. Walter bowed gracefully, and they were soon engaged in a lively conversation. Laura left them together, and went to read the papers to her uncle—her regular evening task.

So it began, and so evening after evening it continued. Laura was obliged to devote two or three hours to her uncle, while Grace and Walter took long moonlight walks, or conversed together in the piazza; or her cousin's clear, sweet voice rose and fell on the night air, in songs, while a manly tone mingled with the strain, and Grace's guitar, accompanied the delicious music.

Day by day Laura's face grew paler and sadder, and Walter felt that there was no bliss to him like Grace's presence; yet neither dared speak of the change. Laura saw that the love between those two was stronger than Walter's love for her had ever been; but she sickened when she tried to speak of it, and he dared not approach the subject.

It was late one evening, when the cousin's had retired to their own room, and Laura noticed how very sad Grace looked. She was pained; for Grace, like Shakspere's Beatrice, had "little of the melancholy element in her," and Laura knew it was some deep grief that could so cloud the young joyous face of her cousin.

"Grace, what troubles you?" she said, drawing the young girl to her side.

"Oh, Laura," sobbed her cousin, "I'm so miserable!"

"Why, darling, what can make you unhappy—come, tell me?"

"I—I—well, I may as well tell you all; perhaps you can comfort me. This evening, while I was walking with Walter, he told me that he loved me——"

"You, Grace?"

"Yes; but he is engaged to somebody else. And oh, I love him so much!"

"He should not have told you if he is bound to another."

"He did not mean to tell me; but he loves me so much that he was compelled to let me know it."

"How can he love you and her too?"—Laura was astonished at her own calmness.

"He don't love her. But he says he was once far away from home, very ill, and she nursed and took care of him—just as you did, Laura; and he fancied he was in love, because he felt so grateful to her, and so he asked her to be his wife. She said she would, and he thinks he is bound by honor to fulfill his engagement. She cannot love him as I do.

"What is her name?"

"He would not tell me; and he asked me never to tell any one what he had told me. But he could not have meant you, Laura—for I tell you everything."

Laura caressed and kissed her cousin, and whispered. "All will be well yet, Grace. Hope and trust!" and then left her.

The next morning she excused herself, on the plea of headache, from accompanying them on their usual ride. She smilingly bid them good-bye, and stood on the piazza watching them off. Carlo, her spaniel, bounded after the horses, turning his head as if to bid his mistress farewell. They were gone! She was alone; still she moved not, There was a fearful struggle in her mind.

"Must I give him up?" she murmured. "She is so light-hearted, that she would get over this. He is mine, mine! But he loves me not!"

Time flew by unheeded by her; she was so absorbed in her reverie that the hours were as minutes. At length she turned and re-entered the house; with tottering steps she regained her room: once there, she gathered all her calmness wrote and folded a note, carried it herself to Walter's room; and then, again in her own chamber, her task over, she fell, without motion or consciousness, on the floor.

When Walter Elliot returned from his ride, he found upon his table the following note:—

"Grace has told me all; you are free!

"LAURA."

When she rejoined them the next morning, she was again calm, dignified, and even cheerful. Walter and Grace never knew the struggle and anguish this had cost our heroine, and Walter said to himself, "She is is too cold to love."

Grace went with Walter to his London home; Laura stayed with her uncle; when he died, she still kept the house; though part of every year was spent with Grace. If you ask her why she was never married, she smiles, shakes her head, and says she was intended for an "old maid," and had to work out her destiny.

Printer's Epitaphs.

One of the oldest epitaphs upon a printer is that inscribed upon a monument erected in St. Mary's Church, Datchet, to Christopher Barker, at one time printer to Queen Elizabeth. It runs as follows:

Here Barker lies, once printer to the Crown,
Whose works of art acquired a great renown;
Time saw his worth, and spread around his fame,
That future printers might imprint his name.
But when his strength could work the press no more,
And his last sheets were folded into store—
Pure faith, with hope (the greatest treasures given),
Opened their gates and bade him pass to heaven.

In a different strain is the next epitaph we shall quote. It purports to be written by the defunct himself, but whoever wrote it showed a pretty turn for making a merry quip of a serious topic. No better idea of death being a release from cares and troubles could be conveyed than in the following lines:

No more shall copy bad perplex my brain,
No more shall type's small face my eyeballs strain;
No more the proof's foul page create me troubles
By errors, transpositions, outs and doubles;
No more to overrun shall I begin;
No more be driving out or driving in;
The stubborn pressman's brow I now may scoff,
Revised, corrected, and finally worked off.

Here is a curt complaint:

Weary of distributing pye,
Pressed out of life, I now must die.
I've cut my stick, my fount is sped,
My case is empty as in life my head.
In fact, my last impression is—I'm dead.

Wild Beasts Far-sighted.

A curious cummunication has been made to the "Academie de Medecine" by M. Motais of Angers, whose works on the various diseases of the eye are highly esteemed. He has closely examined the effect of captivity on the sight of wild beasts, such as lions, tigers, &c., and asserts that all animals in a savage state are far-sighted. The same mark applies to man in an uncivilized state, and even to those who, though civilized, follow avocations which oblige them to remain constantly in the open air, such as sailors or farm laborers.

The same faculty subsists in caged animals when they have been taken after the age of six or eight months; but when born in captivity, or kept in cages when very young, they become near-sighted, which M. Motais attributes to the narrow space in which they are confined, and the training which obliges them to follow the eye of the keeper or tamer to obey his will. The near-sightedness of school children may in his opinion, be ascribed to the same cause—the habit of concentrating the sight on one point, and the fact that the power of the visual organ becomes modified according to the requirements to which it is subjected.—Murray's Magazine.

Queer is a Trade.

We are acquainted with a Cumberland county man of rather slow wits who engaged a lot of pine timber to a certain mill-man. Sledding had nearly gone, but the timber didn't come. About this time the mill-man met our acquaintance and asked him when he was going to get that pine.

"Well, the truth is, Charles, I sold that timber to Berry."

"Sold it to Berry," cried the mill-man.

"What did you do that for? Did he give you more than I offered?"

"No, he didn't give me quite as much, Charles; but I think his judement is a leetle better'n your'n."—Lewiston Journal.

The Cost of a Riding Habit.

"It has repeatedly been asked," writes Mrs. Lucy H. Hopper (from Paris) to the Philadelphia Telegraph, "why the Empress, after the news of Sedan was made public, did not present herself to the guards and the people of Paris and call upon them to rally around her and her son to maintain for the latter the imperial throne. The cause of this singular abstention has been made public. It was because no suitable riding habit could be found for her in which to show her self on horseback to the troops and the populace. There was only one to be found at the Tuileries in the hurry and confusion of that terrible crisis. It was one made for the hunting parties at Compiegne, and was in the Louis XV. style, composed of green velvet embroidered with gold, and necessitating a cocked hat for completion of the costume. It was too theatrical. It would not do. And so the gallant appeal to the public was given up, and with it the last hope for the preservation of the empire.

BECAUSE Germany has just ordered $2,250,000 in gold from this country it is surmised that the kaiser is raising the sinews for war. This is ridiculous. Germany's national debt—317,000,000—is smaller than that of any first-class government in the world, and if she wants to raise the wind for a war she can sell her bonds by the ton any day before breakast.

Remember last winter's siege. Recall how trying to health were the frequent changes of the weather. What was it that helped you win the fight with disease, warded off pneumonia and possibly consumption? Did you give due credit to SCOTT'S EMULSION of pure Norwegian Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda? Did you proclaim the victory? Have you recommended this wonderful ally of health to your friends? And what will you do this winter? Use Scott's Emulsion as a preventive this time. It will fortify the system against Coughs, Colds, Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility, and all Anæmic and Wasting Diseases (specially in Children). Palatable as Milk.

SPECIAL.—Scott's Emulsion is non-secret, and is prescribed by the Medical Profession all over the world, because its ingredients are scientifically combined in such a manner as to greatly increase their remedial value.

CAUTION.—Scott's Emulsion is put up in salmon-colored wrappers. Be sure and get the genuine. Prepared only by Scott & Bowne, Manufacturing Chemists, New York. Sold by all Druggists.

"When slovens get tidy they polish the bottoms of the pans."—When SERVANTS (COPYRIGHT.) are given SAPOLIO they are never tired of cleaning up.

Two servants in two neighboring houses dwelt,
But differently their daily labor felt;
Jaded and weary of her life was one,
Always at work, and yet 'twas never done.
The other walked out nightly with her beau,
But then she cleaned house with SAPOLIO.

THE NEWS.

Official Paper of the City.

JAS. MEEHAN, JR. Editor and Prop.

The legislature expired Monday. The usury bill died with it and the money market of Minnesota is as untrammeled as before.

The wolf trappers may go on joyfully securing their game, since the last legislature appropriated $10,000 a year for bounties.

The work of the alliance-democratic combine should now be relegated to innocuous desuetude or recorded on the statues in fiddlers' green.

Never was Minneapolis so annoyed as when the Chicago Mail spoke of the "Minneapolis legislature." This was indeed an unpardonable error.

Miss Eva McDonald, the shining light among Minnesota girls, manages to keep before the public and is as subtle as Donnelly in the appreciation of newspaper advertising. We are waiting for her book.

The legislature has adjourned. Arbor Day is at hand. Plant only the tree of knowledge, and may it scatter its fruits to the end that the people may never again elect another legislature like the present.

The Duluth and Winnipeg has purchased the right of way through all the Indian reservations and will build unrestricted this summer to the northern boundary, following the survey touching the East point of Red Lake and the west part of the Lake of the Woods. The development of an almost unexplored point of the state will be effected and there is no doubt that large cities will spring up on the shores on Red Lake and Lake of the Woods.

Senator Lommen has, by a great sacrifice on his part, complied with the wishes of his bosses and killed county division. He didn't do this in an honorable way but buckled on the armor of the hypocrite, and reasoning from the broadness of his narrow brain concluded that by a little strategy he could deceive yet satisfy the many petitioners who asked for county division. He knew the remonstrances were not equal to the number of signatures upon the petition requesting division, yet being owned by Crookston he dare not exhibit the moral courage of his convictions—lest he be burned in effigy—a fate common to traitors in Crookston. Accordingly, this brave and loyal representative of the people caught his counterpart, the Hon. Hompe, senator from Red Eye, in the chair, introduced the division bill and with an understanding between himself and the would be congressman of '92 had the bill referred to the senator from Polk. The senator from Crookston chucked it rather nervously into his pocket, concluding the people wouldn't know where it was until it was too late for passage and he would then let it go before the proper committee. Of course the 2,000 farmers who voted for him and whose names were signed to the petitions would not but praise his efforts and he would come home to them with the excuse that it was too late—too many bills ahead. The senator who so many times wished he had remained on his farm succeeded, in his mind, in hoodwinking the farmers and others who asked for division,—but, at the same time, proved himself a tool not worthy to represent a community of Hindoos. Even those who praised him for his little low trickery with the division bill admit that he has done nothing for his district. He is better known and will be remembered for what he hasn't done than for any good that he has accomplished. Polk county must feel proud of her senators—broad gauged, broad minded, comprehensive fellows—and it is a notable fact that most of them are from Crookston. The people at last election thought they had accomplished a grand act by having the skirts of the officials cleared of bossism. How do they feel now? Not one of their representatives has a mind of his own or the moral courage to follow the convictions of right. When the happy days of the millenium shall have arrived, when the dragtoothed politicians shall have been relegated to that hades where they are allowed to chew white clover and froth from their mouths, when the other villages in the county shall cease to hang on to Crookston's apron strings, we may then get a representative who knows enough to do something besides drawing his salary of $5 per day, from the poor downtrodden taxpayers, as long as the law allows him the privilege.

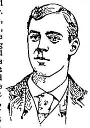
Captain Shaw states that, apart from chimney fires and false alarms in London, there were 2,555 calls to fires in 1890, of which 2,402 were not, and 153 were, attended with serious damage.

THE HERO OF WINFIELD, KAN.

A Monument to Be Erected to a Brave Boy's Memory.

Little did the boys who rushed pellmell from the school gate at Winfield on a recent Friday evening dream that their fun was to end in tragedy. All were wild to get to the ice, for so far south it is rarely that ice forms thick enough to make skating. "Dutch creek is slick and solid," shouted one. In less than a dozen minutes all were gliding swiftly over the crystal surface of the stream. As the number of skaters increased the more venturesome pushed off to where the creek is wider and deeper.

Suddenly the ice began to crack, and the lads in advance sought the shore and called to those in the rear to "look out." But Paul Bedilion, aged twelve, did not heed the warning. The ice gave way and he was precipitated into the water. Thomas Morgan, aged nineteen, came around the bend, and seeing the imperiled child tore off his skates, his coat and his vest and jumped in. He seized the almost exhausted boy, and together they struggled to get out. The lads on the bank made a rope of skate straps and threw it to their comrades. Morgan grasped it, but those at the other end were unable to haul both ashore. Some one yelled to Morgan to save himself, but he spurned the advice, and to cheer his companion said, "I jumped in here to save you, and I will do it or we will go down together."



THOMAS MORGAN.

There was one final supreme effort. The ice broke in their hands, and as they sank back Morgan's grasp on the strap slipped. Even then he could have saved himself alone, but he would not. Calling to his friends on the bank he cried: "I can hold out no longer. Tell Paul's father I did all I could to save his boy. Tell the folks goodby. It is all right with me."

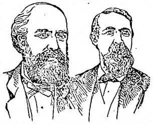
Scarce had the last word been uttered when the waters closed over them, and as the young hero had said, "they went down together."

The funeral of the two boys was held at the same time and place on the Sunday following, and was attended by over 2,000 people. Young Morgan was praised on every side, and thinking that his self sacrifice should be commemorated, the Winfield Courier started a fund to erect a monument in his memory. Already over $600 have been raised, which amount will no doubt be more than doubled, as contributions are daily being received from all parts of the country.

HE'S OLD BUT VIGOROUS.

Ex-Congressman Harrison Canes His Former Political Ally.

Mike McDonald is the millionaire "sport" and primary election manager of Chicago. Carter Harrison, aged seventy, is ex-mayor and wants to be mayor again—but biography is needless. Everybody knows Carter. In all former contests Mike supported Carter; in this spring's municipal contest he supported Cregier. They met by chance, at the very hottest period of the day. Carter called Mike a "traitor." Mike called Carter a "liar"—qualified with certain theological terms—and Carter promptly splintered his heavy cane over Mike's head.



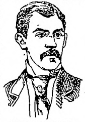
CARTER H. HARRISON—M. C. M'DONALD.

There were fights in almost every part of the city, some of them notable, but this was the most notable. McDonald was armed, and might have done deadly work if the crowd had not instantly forced the two apart. In the convention the next day the millionaire "sport" appeared with a bandaged head—and he had plenty of company. In the First precinct of the Sixth ward Alderman O'Brien and Thomas Finucane had a bloody "scrap." In the Eleventh ward Lawyer Adolph Kraus and Representative Townsend fought to a finish, and Townsend will return to the legislature with a pair of unlovely black eyes. And so it went all over the city.

Was His Influence for Sale?

Elwood Bruner has, or rather had, the honor of helping to represent the capital district in the lower house of the California legislature, and was much talked of for candidate for congress. He now has the dishonor of being accused by his fellow statesmen of selling offices and other corrupt practices, and if the witnesses, or even half of them, tell the truth he certainly is the clumsiest corruptionist of recent growth.

He was the father of a bill which pleased police circles in San Francisco, and as he had many friends in that city he got the promise of having six appointments "on the force" made at his recommendation. Thereupon he very coolly sent his agent, one Dan Jones, to the Bay with instructions to sell the places for what they would fetch! At least there is evidence to that effect. It would seem that Dan grew so zealous in the business that he not only negotiated for all the six places, but was fairly on the way to sell as many more as he could find any one to buy. In this way he negotiated with street car drivers, 'longshoremen—any one who expressed a willingness to pay.



ELWOOD BRUNER.

After all Bruner was caught by the very simple device of a certificate of deposit. He took one for $400 in payment for a place, and got his friend, W. S. Leake, deputy librarian in the state library, to cash it. After that tracing the case was too easy to be amusing. His father is Rev. J. A. Bruner, chaplain of the California senate, and his relatives and associates are of the best. It is therefore scarcely necessary to add that there is a sensation at California's capital. An aspiring young politician is crushed, there is likely to be a vacancy in the assembly and many Californians feel bad.

Things Worth Remembering.

That it is dangerous to stand near a tall tree or spire during a thunder storm.

That the southwest corner of the cellar is the "cyclone safety point."

That there is no medicine so universally applicable to sickness as fresh air and sunshine."

That blowing out the gas before retiring is funny—to every one except the one who tries it.

That you may swear as hard as you please but it will not remove grease spots.

That the Wisconsin Central is the most popular line between Minneapolis and St. Paul and Milwaukee and Chicago.

That its fast train leaves Minneapolis daily at 6:25 p. m., St. Paul at 7:15 p. m., with through Pullman sleepers, arriving in Milwaukee at 7:27 and Chicago at 9:59 the following morning, serving breakfast in dining car.

That before starting on a trip always get information from some reliable ticket agent, and that nowhere will such information be more cheerfully given than at the city ticket offices of the Wisconsin Central, No. 19, Nicollet House block, Minneapolis, and 162 East 3d st, cor. Jackson, St. Paul. Address letters to Chas. E. Dixon, acting city passenger and ticket agent, St. Paul, F. H. Hanson, Gen. Three prominent and successful Scotchmen of the present day have behind them a hard experience, which, no doubt, they recall with pleasure. They lived together for at least a year at Aberdeen university in a room which contained but one bed. It was not a very large bed, and could not be persuaded to hold three persons at once, so two worked while the other slept, and when they went to bed he rose.

A country exchange says: As a rule the editor gets a thousand kicks to one caress. Most people are never satisfied with their local paper, no matter if it is good or poor. It either gives local news in two full detail or is not complete enough in its reports. Of course you are right always. You could beat the job yourselt. The man does not live who can't beat an editor at running a paper. All editors admit this. He only does it because you have not time to.

The co-partnership of the North Side Boller Mills, Red Lake Falls, under the name of Thompson, Johnson & Co., has been dissolved. Mr. Johnson and J. D Marshall will continue the business, pay and collect all debts. From personal knoweledge of the above gentlemen, we can assure the public that they will have a "fair deal and an honest count" if they buy their "bread stuff" from the North Side Roller Mill of Red Lake Falls.- E. G. F. Review.

On last Friday Peter Haugen brought in seven pounds of wool from one sheep. If he had 100 giving him 700 pounds of wool, at 20 cts. per pound would given him the snug little sum of $140, Add to this the sum, if he had that many sheep, he could sell 100 sheep per year, for another little sum of $300, making a total sum of $440.00 for sheep industry. This item of sheep culture would not interfere with his other farming to any great extent, consequently what he would receive from the production of sheep would be nearly clear gain. Farmers, it would at least be worth the time to consider this matter.—McIntosh Tribune.

Crookston Times: In the town of Fairfax, near this city, has resided for some years an old man named Jacob Thompson. He was an invalid and has been nursed and cared for by his eldest daughter Mary, who has devoted her life to making his old age comfortable. A short time ago she was taken ill and on Wednesday of last week she died. The blow was a terrible one to the aged and invalid father and from the time of her death he also began to sink and on Friday followed her across the dark river. The funeral of both took place Friday and their bodies were laid side by side in their last resting place. Mr. Thompson was 77 years of age and a heartbroken widow of about the same age survives him. The daughter Mary was aboat 34 years old and unmarried.
